¶ If through all his days a man in business tells the truth as he sees it, keeps his word as he gives it, works for his industry, for its own sake along with his, he gets what is known as a good reputation.

¶ It is like that, too, with journals of business. Publications that matter have many of the attributes of personality.

¶ MOTION PICTURE HERALD is happy in the consciousness of, and responsibility to, a good name.

AS THE GREATEST GROSSER EVER!

The Roxy's tenant, "Remember the Day," broke all records for that theatre since its opening in 1927 when 89,749 persons paid a total of $58,858 during the four days ending Sunday night. The mark topped the previous record holder, "Alexander's Ragtime Band," by $4,748.

And—the mightiest grosser for this week is "Remember the Day," which with the usual Roxy Theatre's stage show, is running full speed into a new house record of about $100,000, since this theatre embarked on its present presentation policy. The picture will shatter the mark set by "Alexander's Ragtime Band".

Call of Conscience

HERE we are in the initial days of the new year of 1942, in a war and a world at war for the causes of Civilization, as we see it, as we have inherited it—and in part as we have made it. It is a time for long thoughts, for all, in person and institutionally, as elements and factors of the motion picture.

It would appear appropriate that we of the American motion picture might now and henceforth give especial consideration to the place of the screen and its functioning in the social and economic structure of America.

A number of resolves might be considered, in behalf of the motion picture and its public, which is the whole people of these United States.

One of those resolves might well be a demonstration of the competency of a great industry to tend to its own business, to operate sufficiently, by self-regulation, in the order of the American Way, to keep out of court and the headlines of controversy and conflict with the laws of the land and the generally accepted rules, mores and conventions of the social order.

The headlines of the year have been filled with the screen triumphs of a period of exceedingly competent production. That has been on the amusement pages, representing able representation of amusement wares. All the good news has been in the amusement sections. The bad news has been up front and too often on page one.

The motion picture as a product has been handsomely delivered and ably represented, in the lay press. Motion pictures are doing well.

The motion picture as an industry and institution has not come off so well. The industry has vast problems of public relations.

The motion picture as an industry has many obligations, to itself and to the whole pattern of American industry.

THE trends of the day, the broad picture of the relation of industry to the whole national economy, place great and immediate responsibilities on all business organizations and with white-hot certainty on the one industry which above all others lives in and by the limelight of popular attention.

If any part of the order in which the motion picture has risen among the commercial institutions of America is to survive the ordeal years ahead, it will be because of demonstration of effective service of the commonweal.

If there is to be a survival of free and competitive enterprise under the traditional and inherited American Way, it will be because of a public conviction that it is a good way, the best way.

The situation among American industries today calls for a call of conscience. In large measure all of us know what is really right, equitable, decent and constructive. The issues in the commercial practices of America are largely born of the impulses to take special advantage, under, within, or up against the margin of the known rules, standards and conventions.

All of American business must come to know, and quickly, that the chisel of cunning cannot do the job of the hammer of performance.

ENCOURAGEMENTS

THE motion picture may well value those words of the President: "The motion picture must remain free insofar as national security will permit." The President has said too explicitly that he "wants no censorship," and has expressed his high opinion of the screen as a medium of entertainment and information.

It is to be observed that these are the first kind and encouraging words that the motion picture has had from a voice of government in a long, long time.

And after that came some more kind words including the observation of Mr. Arch Mercy, assistant to Mr. Lowell Mellett, saying that the establishment of coordination of Government film activities had brought from the film industry "wonderful offers of cooperation." Then Mr. Stephen Early, White House secretary, offered radio a "well deserved, belated orchid" for its silence about the movements of Mr. Winston Churchill on his voyage to Washington.

Right now the motion picture industry, especially the theatre and the technology of exhibition, could do with special encouragement in the way of a set of priority ratings to give assurance that the show may go on and the while maintain standards of operation and presentation which give the screen its maximum effectiveness.

Some approaches in behalf of various branches of the theatre equipment business have been made at various places in Washington. There have been pleasant words of reas-

Box-office Booming

U. S. THEATRE box-offices have shown a "decided recovery from the war jitters," Barney Balaban, president of Paramount Pictures, reported in New York on Monday, as head of a company which has a partnership or operating interest in the largest exhibition block in America, well over 1,200 theatres. Mr. Balaban said reports from Paramount theatre associates showed a decided upswing in theatre business. This increase, he said, has been uniform regardless of whether theatre operators are on the Coast lines or in the interior.

Substantiating Mr. Balaban's report were nationwide records of heavy holiday grosses on new films and hold-overs, with hundreds of theatres running all night, many raising admissions for special New Year's Eve shows.

Following the capacity pace set on Christmas, first-run houses on New York's Broadway continued to play to record audiences over the holiday week-end. The Roxy's tenant, "Remember the Day," broke all records for that theatre since its opening in 1927; 89,749 persons paid a total of $58,858 in four days. At the Astor, "The Shanghai Gesture" played to 31,612 during the four-day week-end, bringing in a $27,000 gross. Loew's Criterion, with "Sundown," marked the largest week-end attendance in its history; 38,472 attended from Thursday to Sunday. "H. M. Pulham, Esq.," at Radio City Music Hall, in its second and final week, was seen by 101,249 patrons over the four-

PATHE PASSES

ONE day just before the year-end a little document in dissolution of Pathé Film Corporation was filed at New York state house in Albany and that was the end of a long, long motion day period. "Hellzapoppin" brought 25,200 to the Rivoli, over Friday, Saturday and Sunday, marking a 25 per cent increase over a similar period last year. "You're in the Army Now," at the Strand, set a 20 per cent increase over last year's four-day mark. At the Paramount, "Birth of the Blues," in its third and final week, was seen by 49,500, a slight rise over last year for the same period. Business at the Capitol, where "Tarzan's Secret Treasure" is playing, was reported as "very good."

picture story that began back in 1905 when Mr. Jacques A. Berst arrived from Paris with a suitcase full of films and took office space in Madison Square for Pathé Frères. The name of Pathé survives now on the American screen only by grace of the name of a newsreel, adjunct of RKO.

¶ Pathé was once one of the mighty, a member of the Motion Picture Patents Company group, and subsequently an able independent producer and distributor.

¶ In the First World War Pathé was the principal distributor of Government pictures addressed at the theatre screen, among them "America's Bridge of Ships", "Pershing's Crusaders", "America's Answer", "Under Four Flags" and "The Allied War Review", a weekly one-reel war-magazine release. Pathé delivered to the screen such famous figures as Pearl White, Frank Keenan and Harold Lloyd.

Usual Dimes for FDR

NEITHER the war nor anti-bombing preparations in Washington will prevent the traditional celebration of President Roosevelt's Birthday Anniversary, January 30th, with the usual round of benefits, in which motion pictures and motion picture people will participate, as usual.

At a meeting held in the Capital on Tuesday, an arrangements committee decided definitely to go forward with plans, after weeks of indecision, due to the international situation. Present at the session was Edward Arnold, president of the Screen Actors Guild and chairman of the industry's permanent charities committee. Mr. Arnold will be liaison officer in obtaining screen stars for guest appearances.

Representing Washington theatre interests Tuesday was Carter T. Barron, Loew zone manager. He will be co-chairman of the entertainment committee with John J. Payette, Warner zone manager.

Fleischer Resigns

DAVID FLEISCHER resigned Wednesday as director-general of the Fleischer Studios at Miami, producers of cartoons for Paramount. Although Mr. Fleischer leaves the active direction of the studio, he retains stock holdings.

Sam Buchwald, Fleischer executive since the studios were formed, becomes executive general manager. The executive production staff, headed by Seymour Neite and Isadore Sparber, has been augmented with Dan Gordon.

Paramount Sues Bioff

PARAMOUNT wants its money back. Seeking to recover the $100,000 in bribes paid out to Willie Bioff and George E. Browne, convicted labor extortioners, the company on Tuesday filed suit in the U. S. District Court at New York asking repayment of the monies collected by the former IATSE leaders between May, 1936, and January, 1938.

"Unwillingly and under duress" is the description of the payments in Simpson, Thacher and Bartlett's complaint in behalf of Paramount. "The plaintiff," they said, "pursuant to the demands of the defendants and under duress, paid to the defendants sums of money aggregating $100,000 which the defendants received and retained for their own use and benefit."

Duress, the brief explains, consisted of threats of strikes and extortionate demands.

A flood of stockholder suits demanding that officers of the company repay money given the labor leaders followed the conviction of Bioff and Browne. Several of the suits named Paramount and Austin Keough, general counsel, who conducted negotiations with the pair.

Bioff and Browne are now serving respective sentences of eight and 10 years after conviction in November of extorting more than $500,000 from Paramount, Loew's, Warners, and 20th Century-Fox. The full payments were said to have reached $2,000,000. Government agents are currently tracing all assets of Bioff and Browne.

Coast Owners Alarmed

INDEPENDENT exhibitors in Southern California and Arizona met Monday at the Los Angeles Elks Club, on the matter of "steadily decreasing boxoffice attendance," and unanimously agreed to place the problem "squarely before producers and distributors." They also reiterated opposition to double bills, referring to the support on this issue from Parent-Teacher Association groups throughout the west.

Through Robert Poole, their executive secretary, the independents issued a statement which declared that, "The steady increase in film rentals has passed far beyond the saturation point and independent exhibitors find themselves unable to operate normally and successfully," adding: "The consent decree, instead of aiding independent exhibitors, has very substantially increased film rentals and placed independents in a helpless position because there is no remedial clause in the decree to protect them from this procedure on the part of distributors."

The declaration also mentioned that "move-overs" hurt exhibitors and then referred to the war with the Japs, as being "particularly harmful" to Pacific Coast exhibition.

"The ITO, as a result, asked all distributors what they would do in modifying and reducing film rentals so that independents could meet the emergency. The majority of distributors answered they would be glad to help solve each problem individually, but that no general modification or reduction could be expected. This reply was made despite the fact that the ITO reported that a number of independents had said that unless they received immediate relief from distributors on the cost of films, they would be forced to close their theatres."

Old Chaplin Issue

THE LEGAL fact that unlicensed exhibition of copyrighted films for direct or indirect profit constitutes infringement of the U. S. copyright law was emphasized Tuesday by Federal Judge Ralph Jenney, in Los Angeles, in granting a permanent injunction against a local exhibitor who had shown several Charlie films at a silent "revival" house.

Ordering the defendant, Edward Kohn of the Movie Parade Theatre, to stop exhibiting Chaplin films, copyrights of which were owned by the plaintiff, Festival Films, Inc., of New York, the court ordered Mr. Kohn to pay Festival $3,500 in damages, based on a fine of $250 per day of exhibition as a violation penalty. The suit, believed to establish precedent for other actions, was prosecuted by Herbert Silverberg, attorney for Festival, and was upheld by Judge Jenney, on the grounds that any exhibition for direct or indirect profit of films those purchased from 16 mm. dealers and not so licensed, was an infringement.

During the testimony, it was established that several firms engage in selling or renting 16 mm. films but unless license to show them for profit was granted by copyright owners, such showings were violations of the Federal copyright law.

Attorney Silverberg said several other actions are pending over the Chaplin films, "The Adventurer," "The Vagabond," "The Fireman," "Behind the Screen," "Easy Street," and "The Immigrant."

Up 50 Millions

THE New York Stock Exchange during the past year recorded the lowest price levels since 1938. And trading volume was the smallest since 1918.

But the total market valuation of 20 film companies' stocks rose $31,585,720 during the year. They are now valued at $583,430,050. In 1940, they were valued at $551,884,320.

Furthermore, film company issues weathered the country's entrance into war better than other issues; all-out defense production means all-out employment, and all-out employment means all-out ticket buying.

Some general statistics: Warners estimates earnings for the 13 weeks ended November 29th will be 50 per cent more than those the same period last year; Columbia reported a net of $261,705 for the quarter ended September 27th, contrasting with $153,878 for the same 1940 period; Universal's gross for the year ended November 2nd is said to have passed $30,000,000—$3,000,000 more than in 1940; Loew's declared an extra $1 dividend, and it and Paramount recapitalized operations; stocks of the latter gained 4½ points during the year.

Dial for Churchill

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT is not the only prime radio competitor to the film theatre. His British visitor, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Winston Churchill, speaker to the U. S. Senate and the nation Friday, December 26th, drew a greater radio audience than the President does for routine daytime broadcasts, according to the Cooperative Analysis of Broadcasting, New York researchers.

They found 44.7 per cent of radio listeners phoned at home, listened to Churchill. The President's message to Congress on December 8th, asking war on Japan, rated 65.7 per cent. Previous Churchill broadcasts, from England, had attracted 23.7 per cent in February; 16.5, June; 26.1, August.

Everything Licensed

THE U. S. State Department issued a ruling last week to film shippers that before any prints are shipped to Sweden, Switzerland or Portugal from New York or any other American port, a Federal export license must be obtained. It is understood that the ruling was handed down by the U. S. officials because each of the three countries named are not regarded by the U. S. as being strictly "neutral." According to Massce, Barnett & Co., film forwarders in New York, the ruling is being carried out "without any questions asked."

Massce, meanwhile, reports that film shipments to the Far East are continuing. That is, cans of film are loaded on ships, but no assurance as to their arrival at destination or prompt delivery can be given.

'USELESS TO ARBITRATE CLEARANCE', FORMER U.S. DECREE CHIEFS CHARGE

Hayes, Sher Hit Decisions of Arbitrators "Nullifying" the Relief Promised in Section VIII; Inconsistency in Rulings Noted

by JOHN McH. STUART

"It's not much use to arbitrate clearance."

Such is the advice to exhibitors of two Washington attorneys who, as U. S. Government officials, were active in the writing of the consent decree.

James V. Hayes and Robert Sher, former members of the anti-trust division of the Department of Justice, in an interview at Washington expressed considerable disappointment over the operation of the consent decree and its arbitration provisions. As government attorneys they participated in the writing of the decree and since their withdrawal to private practice last year they have been active before the Washington arbitration tribunal.

"Section VIII has been pretty much shot to pieces," Mr. Hayes said. He indicated that he and Mr. Sher had advised numerous exhibitors not to try arbitrating clearance grievances because the record of decisions to date had given scant evidence of the relief promised in the decree. In many instances, on the basis of the clearance interpretations of the Appeal Board, anti-trust suits are the only hope of relief they observed.

Supported by Others

The Washington attorneys are not alone in their discouragement over the way the consent decree has been interpreted, reports from several cities indicate. Lawyers in Chicago, New York, Philadelphia and other tribunal centers are voicing similar dissatisfaction, though less frankly, with the action of the Appeal Board in reversing or amending the decisions of local arbitrators.

Remarks of surprise have been heard from distributors' representatives, too, even though they may have won their case. Several have expressed "off the record" wonderment at the action of the Appeal Board and have noted inconsistencies in clearance decisions.

In considering clearance, the Washington attorneys observed, the Appeal Board, in its opinions, appears to have concentrated on the factors of competition and area, two of the criteria in Section VIII.

The result has been to restrict the operation of section VIII by confusing precedents and an interpretation of the decree which is not in keeping with the spirit in which it was written and signed. The document, the authors, recalled, was intended by all parties as an experiment designed to relieve industry abuses.

"The Appeal Board does not seem to have established any clear ratio for clearance" they asserted, citing decisions in the American (Appeal Award No. 4A), Descoteaux (No. 6), Westway (No. 3) and Apex (No. 10) cases.

The Board ruling (in the Garbose case, Boston No. 2) that one day shall be the minimum clearance was described as arbitrary by Mr. Sher. It is, he said, contrary to the prevailing practice of the industry where contracts have long read "immediately after." There is nothing in Section VIII to prevent a 5 minute clearance, if competition and other factors justified it, he said.

ARBITRATOR WAIVES FEE FOR SERVICES

Judge J. Wesley McAfee, former member of the Missouri Appellate bench, and arbitrator of a St. Louis clearance case has waived his $10 per day fee. In a letter to Harold D. Conner, clerk of the St. Louis arbitration tribunal, Judge McAfee asked that any fees due him for arbitrating the clearance case of Victor Thein, for the Palm theatre, be kept by the AAA.

"The only consideration which induced me to accept appointment in this matter was my desire to make some slight contribution to the efforts which you are making to apply the court's decree in the motion picture case, in a socially and economically desirable manner. I regard the efforts of the Association as experimental in character and worthy of full public cooperation," Judge McAfee wrote.

Judge McAfee dismissed Mr. Thien's complaint.

In the American case where the theatres were 19 miles apart with an estimated 300 families living in the farm area between them the Appeal Board refused to sanction the elimination of clearance by the local arbitrator and ordered a three day minimum. In a Washington case, Mr. Sher observed, the Appeal Board increased the clearance awarded to five days. If the board set up any ratio between competition and clearance, he said, the Washington clearance, in proportion to the American award, should have been tripled.

Similarly, the attorneys said, the Board was splitting hairs on an arbitrary yardstick when they ruled in the Apex case that, because of two per cent competition, clearance should be five not three days. The lawyers questioned whether there might not be two per cent competition between any two theatres in any city. They reiterated their belief that all factors mentioned in Section VIII should be taken as yardsticks in determining a clearance scale.

Would Abandon Appeals

Pointing out the importance in arbitration of the services of arbitrators familiar with the local situation they expressed the belief that the motion picture tribunals might be able to enforce the decree satisfactorily without the services of the Appeal Board. Mr. Hayes and Mr. Sher both praised the calibre of arbitrators selected and the efficiency of the administrator, the American Arbitration Association.

The Appeal Board this week overruled the dismissal by arbitrators of two cases filed at Cincinnati by F. W. Rowlands, Columbus exhibitor for his Parsons and Main theatres. In each case the Neth Circuit was named. The Appeal Board, reversing the dismissal, cut the clearances of the second run Neth Markham over the third run Parsons, and the Neth Eastern over the Main, with similar runs, from 52 to 45 days after Columbus first run. This was done, they said, in order that the playing time of Mr. Parsons' theatres might be the same as for other third run Columbus houses not directly in competition with the Neth circuit.

Anthony B. Dunlap arbitrated the Parsons theatre action while Herbert F. Koch dismissed the Main complaint. All five distributors were involved in each action.

According to testimony, the Appeal Board said, "save where Neth's theatres are concerned, the defendants have considered that a 45 day availability after downtown for third run theatres was reasonable. If this availability is reasonable for third run theatres in Columbus in zones not affected by Neth's theatres we are unable to see why it is not just as reasonable for third run theatres located in zones which are affected by Neth's theatres."

Costs were assessed against all parties in both cases. The Appeal Board again criticised "testimony and argument of counsel utterly irrelevant to the issues involved." The Board also reiterated its previous ruling that availability is not synonymous with clearance, but agreed to decide the cases on the terms of Columbus contracts which grant availability according to a specified number of days after downtown first run theatres.

J. Vincent Aug has replaced Lorenz Lemper as clerk of the Cincinnati office of the American Arbitration Association. Mr. Lemper resigned. Mr. Aug is an attorney and former assistant to the Cincinnati city solicitor.

San Francisco

Gerald Hardy, operator of the Piedmont theatre, in Oakland won his clearance case, San Francisco No. 4, on December 22nd when Donovan O. Peters, arbitrator, cut the clearance between Oakland fourth run and the Piedmont's fifth to one day. He also ruled that when a first run is divided between two theatres, through a "move over" arrangement, even though both houses are operated by the same management, the playing time at each theatre should be considered separately.

Mr. Peters, a San Francisco attorney, ordered the Big Five defendants to grant a maximum clearance of one day to the Grand Lake and Chimes theatres over the Piedmont. He also ruled:

"That the maximum to Oakland first runs over subsequent runs, whether measured or computed by specifying the number of days when available for showing by the Piedmont theatre following Oakland first run closing, or by the number or position of run in sequence, shall be measured or computed from the closing day of showing of a feature at the opening first run theatre, exclusive of "move over" showing time.

Costs were assessed against the defendants and intervenors, which included the Fox West Coast circuit of Northern California, Transbay Theatres, Inc., Solano Theatre Corporation, Oakland Berkeley Theatre Corp. and Alameda Theatre Corp.

Detroit

The first award in eight Detroit cases was filed in Case No. 5, the clearance demand of the Ritz theatre, Watervliet, Mich., on December 23rd by Paul W. Voorhies, arbitrator. He held that the present clearances granted by MGM and Warners to the Loma and Heart theatres in Hartford, Mich., are reasonable and dismissed the complaint. Mr. Voorhies, a former Michigan attorney general, ordered that the filing fees and arbitrators fees be divided equally between Sol Winokur, complainant and the defendant distributors and intervenors.

In his opinion Mr. Voorhies observed that the clearance section of the decree does not

STUDIOS STEPPING UP PRODUCTION TO MEET THE PUBLIC'S WAR NEEDS

Major Companies Planning on Increased Production Through 1942; Need Seen for More Diversification of Screen Fare

Hollywood studios have no immediate plans for curtailing production, but, rather are stepping up schedules to get to market screen entertainment at times such as now when the country needs some "escape" from war news.

Typical are announcements from Columbia, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Twentieth Century-Fox of increased filming.

Columbia sounded the keynote with the formal statement that "an increasing public demand for entertainment during the war emergency is anticipated," adding that "the studio is being geared to keep well ahead of the nation's need for diversified screen fare."

For Twentieth Century-Fox, Darryl F. Zanuck, studio chief, publicly offered a "guarantee that there can be no dearth of feature product" from that company.

MGM declared the studio will was entering the new year "with a greater hum of activity than at any corresponding period in the past several seasons."

The program was pretty much the same at other studios.

Fox Blasting Away

Mr. Zanuck revealed that the equivalent of a full season's product has either been delivered to theatres; is in the process of final editing, in actual production before the cameras or ready to go before the cameras by the end of the first week in January.

Actually, 25 productions have been released and 17 are ready for release or in the actual process of filming. Mr. Zanuck and his staff are now preparing for the filming of pictures which cannot possibly be released until after August 1, 1942, when the new 1942-43 season will begin. In addition, there are enough scripts accepted to take care of all the company's product requirements for the next two years. They consist, for the most part, of comedies, musicals, light dramas and spectacles, as does the balance of the 1942 release schedule.

So far as manpower is concerned, he added, the studio "is in its strongest position in years." Producers under contract include (in addition to Darryl Zanuck), William LeBaron William Perlberg, Nunnally Johnson, Milton Sperling, Mark Hellinger, Ernst Lubitsch, Robert Kane, Sol M. Wurtzel, John M. Stahl, Bryan Foy, Robert Bassler, Ralph Dietrich, Walter Morosco and Len Hammond, Frank Capra, at present assigned to government work, is also under contract.

The directorial personnel includes Henry King, Irving Cummings, William Wellman, Rouben Mamoulian, Walter Lang, John Cromwell, H. Bruce Humberstone, Archie Mayo, Anatole Litvak and John Ford, who is on leave of absence to the Navy Department.

This week saw five major Fox productions actually before the cameras. These were Zanuck's "This Above All," "To the Shores of Tripoli," "Moon Tide," "My Gal Sal" and "Rings on Her Fingers."

To begin this week-end is "Ten Gentlemen from West Point," which will be followed in a matter of days by "Highway to Hell."

Now cutting are "Roxie Hart," the Ginger

PARAMOUNT PAYING LOEW'S TO PROMOTE

Managerial staffs of the 67 Loew theatres in New York will compete, borough against borough, for prizes of $2,000 in defense bonds offered by Paramount to the showmen who achieve the best records with eight of the Paramount's new pictures. An additional $8,000 has been appropriated by Paramount for theatre-goers, who are to be enlisted in special competitions.

The pictures are divided into four two-feature programs: "Nothing But the Truth" and "Buy Me That Town," "Hold Back the Dawn" and "Henry Aldrich for President," "Skylark" and "New York Town" and "Birth of the Blues" and "The Night of January 16th."

Rogers film, and "Song of the Islands," with Betty Grable and Victor Mature.

Completed are "Right to the Heart," "A Gentleman at Heart," "On the Sunny Side," "Castle in the Desert" and Jane Withers tentatively titled "Not for Children."

Awaiting transportation to the U. S. from England is "Young Mr. Pitt," starring Robert Donat. This film was made at the company's studio outside London and will be edited here. "Young Mr. Pitt" will be available for release in the United States and Canada within the next four months.

Further plans for the latter part of 1942 will be made at conferences which will be held in Hollywood shortly after the first of the year. Sidney R. Kent, president, and his executive assistant, Tom J. Connors, will attend, together with Mr. Zanuck, Joseph M. Schenck and William Goetz, executive assistant to Mr. Zanuck.

Paramount Pushes Plans

Neil Agnew, Paramount vice-president in charge of sales, and R. M. Gillham, advertising and publicity director, were to leave New York for Hollywood New Year's Day to view a number of completed productions and plan distribution campaigns.

Among the pictures which they will see are Cecil B. DeMille's color production of "Reap the Wild Wind," starring Ray Milland, Paulette Goddard, John Wayne and a stellar cast; "The Fleet's In," starring Dorothy Lamour, William Holden and Eddie Bracken; "The Lady Has Plans," co-starring Ray Milland and Paulette Goddard; and the partially completed "Holiday Inn" in which Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire are co-starred.

MGM Working a Dozen

MGM has a dozen pictures in various stages of production, and a number of others being edited or previewed.

Three of the pictures now under way are musicals. "I Married An Angel," based on the Broadway stage play of the same name, is a new co-starring vehicle for Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy. "Rio Rita," also based on the stage production, presents Abbott and Costello, John Carroll, Kathryn Grayson, Patricia Dane, and Eros Volusia, Brazilian dancer who is making her film debut. Another new untitled musical with a tropical background presents

Eleanor Powell, Red Skelton, Bert Lahr and Tommy Dorsey's band.

"Mrs. Miniver" and "Tortilla Flat" are adaptations of two best-sellers. Greer Garson and Walter Pidgeon, co-stars of "Blossoms in the Dust," are reunited in "Mrs. Miniver." Spencer Tracy, Hedy Lamarr, John Garfield and Frank Morgan have leading roles in "Tortilla Flat," adapted from John Steinbeck's novel.

"Love Me Not" is a new vehicle for Robert Taylor and Norma Shearer, who were last seen opposite each other in "Escape." "The Courtship of Andy Hardy" is a new release in the Hardy series—number 12 in the group—and marks the return to the screen and the Hardy homestead of Cecilia Parker in the part of Andy's sister. Donna Reed, new M-G-M discovery, makes her first featured appearance also in this story, which brings together all the the players of past Hardy yarns, Mickey Rooney, Lewis Stone, Sara Haden and Fay Holden.

"Fingers at the Window," new melodrama, brings together the two stars of the Kildare series, Lew Ayres and Laraine Day.

Significant in the list of current productions is the high quota of young talent represented. Youth appears to be having its day, as never before, on the coast and the rapid advance to stardom in the past year of such players as Laraine Day and Lana Turner is said by Metro to be characteristic of the trend, and the opportunities now being given younger players.

In "Out of the Past," now before the cameras, Ann Ayars has the feminine lead opposite Conrad Veidt. "Just Between Us" presents a quartet of newcomers, John Shelton, Robert Sterling, Ann Rutherford and Virginia Weidler. In "Then There Were Two" two young Broadway stage players, Lee Bowman and Van Heflin, are seen with Marsha Hunt. Dan Dailey, Jr., Donna Reed and Bobby Blake are the youngsters featured in another current film, "Mokey Delano."

Columbia's Stepped Plans

Anticipating an increasing public demand for entertainment during the emergency, Columbia executives announced that during the early months of 1942 they will place before cameras more important productions than have been film during any previous entire year in the company's history.

The company will launch its new, record-breaking shooting schedule immediately following New Year's. Meanwhile, the studio was rushing to completion for release early in 1942 the Marlene Dietrich-Fred MacMurray co-starrer, "Tonight's Our Night" (formerly "The Lady Is Willing"), produced and directed by Mitchell Leisen; Jack London's "Adventures of Martin Eden," produced by B. P. Schulberg and Samuel Bronston with Glen Ford, Claire Travor and Evelyn Keyes, with Sidney Salkow directing; and, "Trinidad," starring Pat O'Brien and Brian Donlevy with Janet Blair, which was directed by Gregory Ratoff for producer Sam Bischoff.

Heading the list of coming product, and scheduled to go before cameras by the second week in January, is the George Stevens production, "The Gentlemen Misbehave" (formerly "Mr. Twilight"), co-starring Cary Grant, Jean Arthur and Ronald Colman. Supporting this trio will be Claire Trevor and Edgar Buchanan. Starting at approximately the same time will be "Highly Irregular" co-starring Franchot Tone and Joan Bennett, which Richard Wallace will direct for Producer B. P. Schulberg.

Also in varying stages of preparation for camera work are "He Kissed the Bride," which will co-star Melvyn Douglas and an, as yet, unselected feminine lead, with Alexander Hall directing for Producer Edward Kaufman; "My Sister Eileen," starring Rosalind Russell, which is to be produced by Max Gordon, who presented the original on Broadway; "Salute to Tobruk" based on the siege of Tobruk and from a radio program of the same title; a screen version of the New York musical comedy of last season, "Pal Joey"; a second Fred Astaire-Rita Hayworth so-starring film musical, title of which is to be announced; and "Miss Grant Takes Richmond," the script of which is being written by Gene Towne under production guidance of Edward Kaufman.

Others are the timely "Destroyer Men," on the script of which Lieut. Com. Frank Wead now is at work for Producer Lou Edelman, with a February starting date indicated; "Burma Road" and "Let the Eagle Scream," which Producer Sam Bischoff is readying; "The Pioneers," based on the last novel of the late Courtney Riley Cooper, which will be producer Harry Joe Brown's first at Columbia; "The Rumelhearts of Rampler Avenue," now being scripted by Paul Green, as producer Harold Clurman's initial production on the Gower Street lot; and a feature to be based on Elizabeth Dunn's Ladies' Home Journal story, "Something Borrowed," which Robert Sparks will produce.

Affiliated to Buy, Book for Rio Houses

Reports that David Milgram, head of Affiliated Theatres, independent circuit in Philadelphia, was setting up a central booking and buying office for independent exhibitors in the territory, were believed confirmed with the disclosure that the circuit had begun to buy and book for the Rio Theatres in Reading and Schuylkill Haven, Pa. Both theatres will continue operations independently of the circuit.

Bowers, Composer, NBC Aide, Dies

Robert Hood Bowers, 64, composer of musical comedies and conductor, died December 29th in Doctors Hospital, New York, after an illness of 10 days.

For the last five years Mr. Bowers had been musical director of the School of Radio Technique and a conductor for the electrical transcription department of the National Broadcasting Company. His best known musical composition was "Chinese Lullaby" from "East Is West," in 1918. He had been a conductor for Victor Herbert and also conducted Gilbert and Sullivan operettas for producer Winthrop Ames.

Mr. Bowers was born in Chambersburg, Pa., and educated at Franklin and Marshall College. In 1902 he won the gold medal of the Chicago Auditorium Conservatory.

Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Catherine M. Bowers; a son, Robert J., of St. Petersburg, Fla.; two brothers, the Rev. Wayne Bowers of Evans City, Pa., and William Bowers of Mount Vernon, N. Y., and a sister, Miss Corinne Bowers of New York.

MILESTONE-IVENS FILM ARRIVES FROM RUSSIA

Prints of "Report from Russia," a 45-minute documentary of the Russo-Nazi war, which Hollywood director Lewis Milestone and Joris Ivens produced, in Hollywood, have arrived in New York and will be ready for release within a week, according to Nicoli Napoli, president of Artkino, Inc., official distributors of Soviet films in America which will distribute the picture both theatrically and non-theatrically.

The picture was edited and cut from 40,000 feet of newsreels taken by the Russians and sent to the U. S. following the Nazi attack on June 22nd. A foreword by W. Averell Harriman, U. S. lend-lease official who returned from Russia some months ago, opens the picture. Elliot Paul wrote the commentary and Walter Huston did the narration. Dimitri Tiomken did a special musical arrangement for the film which shows Russia's front lines and the Soviet people's defense efforts behind the lines.

Warner's Build Raid Shelters

One of Hollywood's first air raid shelters has been completed at the Warner Bros. studios in Burbank, it was reported from the West Coast on Monday. Four major shelters, with an auxiliary system of trenches, parapets and dugouts, all situated in basements of steel and concrete buildings and fortified with sand-bags, are now ready for any emergency.

Blayne Matthews, superintendent of safety and personnel at the Warner studio, also reported that three 200-foot trenches were made on the back lot, in readiness for the safety of those who may be too far from shelters in time of a raid.

Ten more shelters are to be built, it was said, and Warner Bros. plan to provide evacuation for 3,500 employes within 12 minutes after a warning. The completed shelters are thoroughly equipped with beds, hospital units, water in gas-proof containers, kitchens and gas protection. Wardens have been appointed, field hospitals and fire fighting units are in training and first aid groups have been organized. In addition, the studio has built a special underground storage room for fuel, lubricants, paints, lacquers, films and other inflammable material.

To round out efforts to put the studio on a full emergency and defense basis, a booth has been opened in front of the Warner Studios commissary for the sale of defense bonds and stamps. This booth will be open daily from 11:00 A.M. to 2:00 P.M. as an auxiliary to the cashier's office.

Gilliam with RKO

Tom Gilliam has been named sales manager of the RKO branch in Chicago, succeeding Sam Gorelick, who has been promoted to branch manager. Mr. Gilliam was manager of the Warner exchange in Chicago for a number of years and was later transferred to Atlanta. Recently he returned to Chicago and has been a member of the Paramount sales staff.

carry provisions to remedy non availability of prints in a given area. The Ritz charged that it plays pictures 60 to 90 days behind the Heart and Loma which hold seven and 14 day margins. The arbitrator held that the complaint involved not clearance but the inability of the Ritz to secure prints immediately after the competing clearance expires. This he said was an administrative problem for the distributors.

Albany

Albany received its third consent degree complaints December 26th when Smalley Theatres, Inc., Cooperstown, filed an action for "relief" of the 14 days clearance held by Schine's Colonial Theatre, Norwich over Smalley's Theatre, Sidney, N. Y.

The complaint is against all five signatories-RKO, Warners, Loew's, Inc., 20th Century-Fox and Paramount. Smalley Theatres is owned by Bill Smalley, veteran independent exhibitor, who operates along the Mohawk Valley and Cherry Valley regions in territory close to several Schine Circuit theatres.

Albany's Cases No. 1 and 2, were brought by Alec Papayanakos, Canton exhibitor, against Vitagraph and RKO in March.

The attorney filing for Smalley Theatres was Leonard L. Rosenthal of Troy, executive secretary of the New York State Unit of National Allied. The present suit, Mr. Rosenthal indicated, has nothing to do with letters to the five companies December 1st in which he asked for a cessation of alleged forcing of short subjects and also the forcing of product.

Chicago

The Don Theatre, Downers Grove, Ill., clearance case against the five consenting companies, with a Balaban & Katz theatre, the Tivoli in Downers Grove involved, has been adjourned until January 6, 1942, due to previous commitments of the arbitrator.

At the first hearings on December 22nd arbitrator Thomas C. McConnell denied the motions of Alvin Landis, representing the Westmount Theatre, Westmount, Ill., an intervenor, and Arthur Goldberg, representing Paramount Pictures and Balaban & Katz, to dismiss the case, preferring to hear all the evidence.

The Annetta Theatre, Cicero, Ill., case number 12, has been moved up from December 30th to January 16th, by stipulation of the parties.

A stipulation has been filed by all parties in the Oriental Theatre case, to extend the time for the filing of answer briefs by the proponents of motions to dismiss, from December 29th to January 9th.

An extension of time has been granted all parties in the Alcyon Theatre, Highland Park, Ill., case, to January 5th, to file answering briefs to the reply brief on the motion to dismiss.

Buffalo

Buffalo received case No. 11 Monday when Basil Brothers' Theatre Company, operating the Apollo theatre in that city, filed a clearance complaint against the Big Five. The Apollo asserts that the 21-day clearance held by Shea's Elmwood theatre is unreasonable and asks for pictures immediately following the run at the Elmwood.

FULL SPEED AHEAD ORDERED FOR FILM INDUSTRY'S WAR EFFORT

Independent, Circuit Managers Prepare Staffs and Houses for All Emergencies; Use of Theatres as Shelters Planned

"Full speed ahead" to make American theatres places of safety during blackouts, air raid warnings and actual attack, was the order of exhibitor action, both independent and circuit-wise during the week.

Theatre managers, both individually and through exhibitor groups, began taking the initiative in preparing their staffs and houses for all emergencies. In cooperation with local civilian defense councils, fire and police chiefs and other civic officials, exhibitors throughout the land are keying their operations towards strengthening public safety in their communities.

In many sections of the country, officials have publicly declared that theatres, in case of air raids, properly equipped and manned, are as safe for patrons as their own homes.

All major circuits, including Loew's and Paramount, as reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on December 27th and December 20th, are informing their managers on air raid precautions and measures to be taken during blackouts.

In Los Angeles, the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California, called a mass meeting on Monday for exhibitors to plan for emergency action. The board of directors of ITO already has put in motion a program to organize all independent theatres in that area in cooperation with Los Angeles civilian defense officials for air raids and other eventualities. The board also began a survey of the effects of the war on independents' and proposed methods to alleviate the situation.

The theatre defense bureau of the Los Angeles Defense Council issued 26 "pointers" last week for theatre operators during the present crisis. B. V. Sturdivant, director of the bureau, also announced that other recommendations would be forthcoming so that managers "would be fully prepared for any eventuality."

The 26 points are as follows:

1. Programs to continue uninterrupted; patrons to remain in theatre during alerts, air raid warnings, blackouts and actual attacks.
2. Entire theatre personnel to attend semi-weekly, regular "panic prevention" drills.
3. At least two or more of theatre personnel, including manager, to take Red Cross first aid courses.
4. Theatre managers to serve on local civilian defense councils.
5. Staff members to learn operation of lighting switches.
6. Emergency light equipment to be installed or prepared.
7. Each staff member to be fully familiar with alarms and signals, ordinances, rules and regulations pertaining to precautions and emergencies.
8. No theatre to remain in operation without proper and responsible manpower on duty every moment.
9. Theatre personnel to reflect cheerfulness; house to be a haven of relief from screaming headlines.

DAYLIGHT TIME BILL GOES TO SENATE

The President would be empowered to shift all clocks in the nation to daylight saving schedules by a bill introduced in the Senate Tuesday by Senator Burton K. Wheeler.

The first draft of the legislation submitted by the chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee would permit the president to advance or retard clocks in any section by not more than two hours. Authority to change the nation's hours would extend for the duration of the present emergency and six months thereafter. The measure is intended to conserve electric power consumption and to permit working schedules to take advantage of all daylight hours.

10. Emergency lighting switches should be painted white, enclosed in red circle.

11. Box office drains should be more frequent; change funds to be held to a minimum.

12. Check first-aid kits for each theatre; advise with local Red Cross as to proper equipment under existing conditions.

13. Check all exits, without fail, immediately preceding every opening.

14. Check all ceiling suspensions, such as chandeliers, etc.; remove and place in storage if there is any doubt as to their safety.

15. Every theatre should be thrown open to the general public as a refuge in case of actual attack; managers to contact local defense council regarding this and abide by their instructions.

16. In the event power is interrupted, be prepared to offer some kind of impromptu entertainment from stage; community singing should be considered.

17. Under present conditions, much care and thought should be given to children's matinees.

18. Do not repeat rumors; do not discuss troop movements; do not mention troop concentrations.

19. The National Anthem should be presented at least once during each complete performance.

20. Wherever possible, theatres should be made available for morning classes of Red Cross or other worthy organizations active in defense efforts.

21. Install efficient "page" system in theatre; inform physicians, nurses and others on constant call about such service.

22. Theatre owners should consider making vacant store space available to governmental and defense organizations.

23. Do not break theatre show if there is a troop movement within the immediate vicinity of your theatre; in the event a major break comes at such a time, manager should request from stage that patrons remain seated until troops have passed.

24. Make the theatre a community leader in proper presentation of the American flag and the national colors.

25. Adhere strictly and constantly to every possible precaution in proper handling of film to eliminate fire hazards; check booths to assure this.

26. Instruct your staffs constantly in every phase of your operation, until doing the right thing becomes habitual; remain calm and employ sound, common sense at all times.

The following are members of the theatre defense bureau of Los Angeles Defense Council: Tom W. Baily, L. E. Behymer, Benjamin Decker, Maurice M. Cohen, Sherrill C. Cohen, Marco Wolff, Louis J. Halper, Charles Prickett, Nat Holt, Clayton T. Lynch, Rodney A. Pantages, S. D. Perkins, Robert H. Poole, Charles P. Skouras and Gene Towne.

Last Wednesday, Los Angeles theatre managers attended a meeting of the bureau, which was addressed by Fire Department chiefs assigned to instruct them by Fire Chief John Alderson in cooperation with the bureau's director, B. V. Sturdivant. Instruction in dealing with incendiary bombs and other possible air raid effects was given. Theatres were grouped by zones of six houses each with the manager of one in charge of drills. Under the same setup, larger theatres employing large staffs will be organized.

As the Pacific Coast increased the tempo of its defense preparations last week 200 buildings in San Francisco were selected as daylight air raid shelters in that city. Within a short time, it was reported, residents walking or riding about the streets, will see throughout the central city area signs reading "air raid shelter," reminders of the exposed position of the coast in war time.

Some Structural Changes

All of the local shelters will be buildings at least four stories high, and may include some of the larger theatres, chosen by 12 groups of architects and structural engineers during a week's intensive survey. Some need minor structural alterations such as additional doors. None is regarded as complete protection in the event of a direct hit of a bomb, but the basic purpose of the shelters, according to Roderick H. Reimers, chairman of the survey committee, "is to protect the public against splinters, flying glass and debris which cause the greatest number of air raid casualties."

According to a survey made of Boston film theatres by the Committee on Public Safety in co-operation with state and city building departments, officials are convinced that the great majority of motion picture theatres in the Hub are so constructed as to offer excellent refuge in case of air raids. It is reported that several houses have basement lounges which are said to be ideally constructed for air raid shelters.

The local committee on Public Safety has warned the public against hysteria or undue alarm and has advised people to attend theatres as usual. It also has announced that precautionary measures have been taken in theatres to safeguard patrons.

Paramount Pictures, meanwhile, through Henry Anderson, manager of the company's insurance department, forwarded last week to its theatre affiliates a complete plan for air raid emergencies, including instructions for training of theatre staffs.

John Ojerholm, head of Paramount's technical department and film laboratory in London, addressed the staff of the Paramount Theatre in New York, last Wednesday, at a special defense meeting called by Robert M. Weitman, house managing director. Mr. Ojerholm pointed out that in time of raid or alerts, panic may cause more damage than bombs. He said that three Paramount houses in London have escaped bombing during two years of war, and he commended Mr. Weitman for the rules adopted by the theatre, which were reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of December 20th.

In Washington last week, at a meeting of owners and operators of all theatres in the area, film and legitimate, specific plans for the protection and guidance of theatre patrons in time of blackouts or air raid were discussed. John J. Payette, general zone manager for Warner theatres and assistant air raid warden for theatres in Washington, presided.

Col. Lemuel Bolles, civilian defense commissioner, particularly stressed at this meeting that "speed above all things is necessary in the training of theatre employees to take care of theatre audiences in time of air raid and blackouts. The auditoriums of the theatres themselves," he said, "are the safest place besides one's home or air raid shelters."

Mr. Payette advised that a certain number of theatre personnel would be given instruction in civilian defense and they, in turn, would impart their knowledge to other staff members.

Signs Blacked Out

The Pennsylvania State Council of Defense, meanwhile, approved a plan for immediate blackouts of all outdoor illuminated signs in the state in case of an air raid, this to include film houses. The proposal, submitted by the Outdoor Advertising Association of Pennsylvania, calls for each large lighted sign to be equipped with a convenient cut-out switch so placed that it is conspicuous and accessible.

It was also advised that directions for blacking out the sign are to be posted so that clear instructions are easily available. Signs which cannot be so controlled will be turned off for the duration of the emergency.

From New Haven it was learned last week that theatre managers will be air raid wardens of their own theatres, aided by assistant managers. Originally, State Police Chief Edward Hickey had suggested that each theatre employ a fireman or policeman as an air raid warden. The managers, however, will embark on a course of 20 hours or more in conjunction with other wardens, under the direction of the Committee for Civilian Defense. Complete instructions were to be issued to theatremen shortly. The Connecticut MPTO and Allied Theatre Owners took the initiative at a joint meeting recently in formulating plans for theatre air raid precautions.

Canadians Active

In Canada, effects of America's entry into the war has sharpened Dominion activity towards defense efforts with exhibitors in the forefront.

In cooperation with the Provincial Civil Defense Committee of Ontario, Famous Players Canadian Corp. circularized to its theatres throughout Canada, last week, a memorandum containing new regulations and air raid precautions affecting theatres, designed for so-called "vulnerable" areas, particularly on the Nova Scotia coast and including Halifax, Sydney and Glace Bay.

On December 27th, the new regulations went into effect and FPC ordered its theatres to comply with the orders. The memo warned that "unless all of these precautions have been taken, there is a decided possibility that you will find yourself one of these days being refused permission to operate."

Precautionary measures detailed included information on extinguishing all theatre lights, both inside and out at the first blackout or air raid alarm; enumeration of substitute lighting for inside the theatre; advice on training theatre personnel in cooperation with ARP wardens and instructions that managers should be in their theatres at peak hours of attendance both afternoon and from 7:00 P.M. until closing time. FPC also is working on trailer and lobby copy to tie in with its campaign on public safety. As new Governmental regulations are issued for theatres, FPC advised that it will furnish additional bulletins on precautions for every house manager.

In Buffalo, theatre owners met last week with police commissioner Austin J. Roche to discuss plans for that city's first test blackout held on Sunday.

The Saenger and United circuits in New Orleans as well as independent theatres of that city are now screening at every show in a score of downtown and suburban houses "do's and don'ts" of conduct in possible air attacks. Maurice F. Barr, head of the motion picture division of New Orleans' civilian defense organization, announced that exhibitors are also cooperating by having their own air raid wardens and police and fire auxiliaries on hand during show hours. The scope of the safety program at each theatre will depend on the house's physical layout as well as its personnel and hours of operation, it was learned.

Nathan E. Goldstein, president of Western Massachusetts Theatres in Springfield, Mass., announced last week that plans were being formulated for training of the circuit's personnel to cope with war emergency duties.

Central Alarm Planned

The Liberty Theatres circuit in the same city reported that in the interest of public safety and efficiency during potential air raids the circuit was contemplating use of its inter-communications telephone system linking the Liberty headquarters with each of its local theatres. Managers would be informed of any impending blackout from a central board which would operate immediately following the headquarters' notification of an alarm. One of the centrally located downtown houses, would also be called, it was said, thus obviating numerous messages being relayed among local stands.

Local film houses in Northampton, Mass., are making preparations for assisting in bolstering civilian morale in the event of aerial attacks. Special asbestos curtains to shut off light from the outside are being installed in the Calvin and Plaza theatres in that city and sandbags are being placed on the roof of the Calvin as a precaution against incendiary bombs.

In Nashville, Tenn., on Monday, Tony Sudekum, president of the Crescent circuit, offered the facilities of Crescent houses in and out of Nashville for use by civilian defense officials.

First Crescent theatre to be utilized for defense efforts was the Madison, at Madison, Tenn., where a Defense Rally was held on Tuesday. Admission fee was to be one 25-cent defense stamp for adults and one 10-cent defense stamp for children. Following a defense bond sale from the stage, the theatre management provided a film without charge, to show America's need for defense bonds and stamps. It was reported that all suburban theatres in the Crescent circuit are to be used for similar rallies.

In Chicago last Wednesday, an amusement emergency committee composed of John Balaban, Jack Kirsch, Eddie Silverman and James E. Coston held a meeting today at the Blackstone Hotel to formulate plans for complete coordination of amusement here in preparation for any emergency.

The committee is functioning independently of the Amusement and Recreational Division of the Chicago Defense Committee but may become part of the latter group later.

Mellett Explains Industry Position

Guidance of the motion picture industry's wartime program will not require a large organization. It will remain a cooperative relationship and will channel exclusively through the industry's War Activities Committee and Lowell Mellett, appointed by President Roosevelt last week to act as coordinator of government films for the duration.

As conferences commenced this week in New York and Washington to plan procedure for this liaison both industry and Washington representatives made it clear that they anticipated no hitch in relations between government and screen. They repeated pledges of the industry's willingness to serve and outlined what the industry, in all its branches, will be asked to do first.

Immediate expansion of the motion picture defense program, in effect for almost a year through the Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defense (now the War Activities Committee) was predicted. Francis S. Harmon, executive vice-chairman of the War Activities Committee, is the industry contact man appointed by George Schaefer (RKO), committee chairman, to work with Mr. Mellett.

The industry was extremely foresighted in organizing all branches of exhibition, distribution and production for national defense almost 14 months ago, according to Mr. Harmon. Citing the appointment of official censors for newspapers and radio he observed that the film industry was the only medium of public expression operating with the government on a self-regulatory basis.

President Roosevelt, in his letter appointing Mr. Mellett, specifically declared that he wanted no screen censorship. He instructed Mr. Mellett to coordinate all government film work and to advise the industry on how it might best serve.

The free distribution of government sponsored short subjects and trailers, underway for the past ten months by the industry committee, will be greatly expanded, it was said. This week 500 prints of the first of the Hollywood army training films approved for theatrical distribution by the War Department will go to theatres. The reel, titled "Safeguarding Military Information," is expected to be followed by others.

A weekly Washington screen report was seen as a possibility in one quarter. Such a project, reporting on the defense and war activities of all of the government divisions seeking screen time, has already been proposed to the War Activities Committee. Action is pending.

The cost of prints is one of the immediate obstacles to such a weekly release. Conferences are expected to determine a way of meeting this expense, either from government or industry war chests, or through a cooperative endeavor.

Exhibitors will not be asked to pay for such reels at any time, it was emphatically declared by an authoritative source. It is felt, he said, that exhibitors, in contributing screen time are doing a full share. The example of Canada, where films produced by the government agency headed by John Greirson are being purchased by exhibitors, will definitely not be followed here.

In Great Britain, too, exhibitors have objected to the commercial distribution of British Ministry of Information, or Films Council war reels. There will be no grounds for such complaints in the United States, it was predicted.

War Committee Moves

Francis Harmon, executive head of the industry War Activities reported this week in New York that the group will move next week from its present quarters in the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America office on West 43rd st. to Room 408 in the Paramount Building, 1501 Broadway.

The committee at a meeting on Wednesday was expected to announce the formation of several new subdivisions to assist in carrying on its expanded operations. It was understood that labor and talent groups were to be accorded fuller participation.

Industry, OPM Gather Data

Information on the industry's need for strategic materials during the coming year is being compiled by Francis S. Harmon, vice-chairman of the War Activities Committee who last week was named to represent the industry in dealing with the Government.

A questionnaire has been distributed by Mr. Harmon, in which all branches of the industry are asked to estimate their requirements for critical materials such as steel, copper, rubber, etc., in 1942. They must specify what they will be used for, together with information regarding consumption in 1940 and 1941.

The statistics so secured will be reported to the motion picture priorities section of the Office of Production Management. A. Julian Brylawski, Warner circuit official at Washington and MPTOA representative, was recently named chief of the OPM Motion Picture division.

Meanwhile, the OPM itself is gathering similar material from the film industry in a questionnaire which, early last month, was sent out to all consumers of several hundred critical materials. It will guide the setting up a production requirements plan, under which materials will be allocated to the consuming industries on a quarterly basis.

Ryan Named Radio Censor

Problems of radio censorship will be handled by John H. Ryan, vice-president and general manager of the Fort Industry Company, Toledo, whose appointment as assistant director of censorship was announced last week-end by Byron Price, director of censorship.

Mr. Ryan was one of the first two officials appointed to the new censorship organization. At the same time John H. Sorrells, executive editor of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers, was appointed assistant director by Mr. Price to handle problems affecting the press.

Both men, Mr. Price said, have been given leave of absence from their companies and are serving "at a considerable personal sacrifice."

The new radio censorship chief has been in radio since 1927. He is a past president of the Ohio Association of Broadcasters and is serving his second year as a member of the board of the National Association of Broadcasters. The Fort Industry Company operates a half-dozen broadcasting stations—WSPD, Toledo; WLOK, Lima, and WHIZ, Zanesville, Ohio; WWVA, Wheeling, and WMMN, Fairmont W. Va., and WAGA, Atlanta, Ga. The company is an NBC affiliate.

Defense Stamp Drives Held

A "Defense Matinee" in which more than 75 Cleveland theatres were planning to participate was held in that city on Friday for the purpose of selling 50,000 10-cent defense stamps.

The plan, originated by M. B. Horowitz, general manager of the Washington circuit, was used by every theatre in Akron on Monday.

For the special "Defense Matinee," cashiers of each Cleveland theatre sold to each child a 10-cent defense stamp pasted into a defense book. Upon showing the book to the doorman, the child was admitted to the theatre, retaining the stamp. All film for the matinees were furnished without charge by distributors. The motion picture operators of each house donated their services for the matinee.

In Madison, Wis., beginning with Thursday, each employe of the Ashley Theatre Co., operating the Orpheum, Parkway, Strand and Madison theatres in that city, will receive defense stamps ranging from $1 to 10 cents in lieu of a portion of his salary.

A series of Amateur Nights was started in the Court Square theatre, Springfield, Mass., on Monday, with prizes of $10, $5 and $2.50 paid in defense stamps.

Stamps for Change

Jack Rose, of the Indiana-Illinois Theatre circuit, operating 15 theatres, reported from Chicago on Monday that patrons of these houses are being asked to take their change in defense stamps. The plan, he said, has been in operation for 10 days and "is going over big." He estimated that more than $500 in stamps was given in change during the past 10 days. All the theatres are running a special trailer telling theatre audiences to "Remember Pearl Harbor" and to accept the stamps as change.

In Philadelphia, Bill Gerst, manager of Hunt's Rockland Theatre, is using the following patriotic slogan in all of his newspaper advertising: "Let Nothing Stop Us! Keep Up the Morale by Attending Your Favorite Theatre! Keep Up the Fight for Freedom by Buying Defense Bonds and Stamps!"

The Casino Theatre in Yorkville, New York, which formerly housed Nazi films and is now showing the Russian picture, "General Suworov," is distributing defense stamps gratis to its patrons. Cooperating with the local post office, 1,000 stamp albums with the first 10-cent stamp pasted in, were distributed by the theatre to patrons on Christmas Day when the house reopened under its new policy.

Additional 1,000 stamp books, according to Casino management, were to be distributed on New Year's Day, last day of the "Suworov" showing. Defense stamps will be given away at stated intervals and a new album with the first stamp free will be presented to all patrons showing a full book at any time during 1942, announced the managements.

L. M. McKechney, treasurer of the Tri-States Theatre Corp., Des Moines, Ia., announced last week that the circuit had put into effect a plan whereby odd change in employe salaries was paid in defense stamps. According to Mr. McKechney, "the response from our employes was overwhelming. From the greater number of our theatres we received 100 per cent cooperation from all employes. The balance of the theatres cooperated about 90 per cent."

Warner's Stanley Theatre in Pittsburgh launched a half-hour weekly radio program last week in cooperation with radio station WWSW, called "Keep 'Em Smiling," to push sale of defense bonds and stamps in the community. Listeners are urged to send in 10 cents and a self-addressed envelope, in return for which they will receive a 10-cent defense stamp in addition to an autographed picture of the Stanley's stage personality of the week. The Stanley program, launched last Wednesday, featured Martha Raye and Jan Savitt's band. Other headliners will be interviewed during the broadcasts from backstage of the theatre.

Candy theatre sales of Fox West Coast Theatres, amounting to $75,000, has been added to the Employes Benefit Fund of the circuit, it was announced in Los Angeles last Wednesday. The amount represents 25 per cent of the profits from the circuit's candy sales and is to be invested in defense bonds.

Unions Help, Too

Richard F. Walsh, president of the International Alliance of Theatre and Stage Employes, announced in New York on Monday that the union had purchased $50,000 in defense bonds. Walsh reported that letters were being sent to 800 locals of the IATSE urging them to make similar purchases in amounts they are able to spend for the purpose.

The Akron Motion Picture Operators Union, it was reported over the week-end, bought a $250 defense bond to present to the first American aviator to drop a bomb on Tokyo.

The Screen Office and Professional Employes Guild, Local 109, UOPWA, through its executive council, announced in New York last week that it had circularized its membership with a nine-point program detailing how members can participate in the war effort.

Members were urged to support, or wherever possible, to participate in the armed forces; to enlist as air raid or fire wardens; to contribute to USO and all allied war relief agencies; to give a day's pay or 10 per cent of their bonus to the UOPWA relief fund; to purchase defense bonds and stamps, and to help in other practical methods of defense.

Donate Day's Salary

Employes of Interstate Theatres, Inc., at their annual Christmas party in Houston last week, voted by acclamation to donate a full day's salary to the American Red Cross emergency drive. The vote followed an appeal by R. J. O'Donnell, general manager and vice-president of the circuit, for every member of the staff to devote himself to some phase of national defense work. About 250 employes of Interstate attended the party, which was held at the Majestic Theatre.

Representatives of the "big four" theatrical unions met with Treasury Department officials in New York last week and pledged further support in promoting the sale of defense bonds and stamps among their membership and the public in general. Paul Dullzell, executive secretary of Actors Equity Association; Leo Cleusmann, American Federation of Musicians; Gerald Griffin, executive secretary of American Guild of Variety Artists, and Blanche Witherspoon, American Guild of Musical Artists, were present, and agreed to circularize their membership at their own expense. Treasury officials urged that every live talent show, either band, vaudeville or legitimate, have at least one brief announcement included in each performance, plugging the sale of bonds and stamps.

Likewise, in Hollywood, motion picture guilds and unions met last week to pledge support of the Treasury Department's drive in the sale of Government issues. Kenneth Thomson, Screen Actors Guild; Herbert Sorrell, Conference of Studio Unions; Harold V. Smith, IATSE; Joseph Touhy, Studio Teamsters; J. K. Wallace, Musicians Local 47; Leslie Litomy, AGVA and other representatives were present. Studio Painters Local 644, according to Mr. Sorrell, voted a compulsory assessment on 1,000 members for purchase of at least one defense bond before February dues are accepted. He said that the local intends to buy approximately $30,000 in bonds before the campaign ends.

At a meeting held in New York on Monday, members of the Screen Office and Professional Employees Guild, Local 109, heard civilian defense officials describe the role of the civilian worker in America's war effort and in national unity. Theodore Rosen, chairman of the SOPEG defense committee, reported that the union has reached its $500 defense fund quota. During the evening, films were shown depicting civilian defense activities.

Newsreels Cover the War Front

Since the Japanese attack on the United States, December 7th, the five newsreel companies, Paramount, RKO-Pathé, Fox Movietone, MGM, News of the Day and Universal, have been operating on a "temporary plan" of war news coverage, it was learned on Monday. Prior to the Jap bombing of Pearl Harbor, the newsreels had been meeting, over a period of weeks, with Navy and Army officials in Washington. They had submitted a plan for "cooperative coverage" of all points in the Pacific and Atlantic considered at that time "danger zones."

After December 7th, the newsreel companies quickly put into operation, according to the executives in New York, the original plan, which provided for two cameramen from each firm to be stationed at strategic points. With the assistance of Army and Navy officials, they were able to send their cameramen to Hawaii and other war zones in the Pacific via American battleships and to effect quick return of newsreels by the same method.

The lineup of men either at their posts in the war zone or en route, is as follows: Bill Gerecke, Canal Zone, and Joe Rucker, Hawaii, Paramount; Len Roos, Hawaii, and Mervyn Freeman, Philippines, Pathe News; Earl Crotchett, Iceland, and Irving Smith, Atlantic Fleet, Universal; Normal Alley, Pacific, and Sam Greenwald, emergency, Universal; A. Brick, Pacific, and Jack Barnett, Alaska, Fox Movietone.

Newsreel officials this week were hopeful that the Army and Navy departments would finally approve their original plan so that additional provisions could be made speedily for war news coverage.

Reports late last week that a camera crew working in Hawaii on background shots for 20th Century-Fox's "Shores of Tripoli" had been caught in the first outbreak of the U. S.-Jap war, were confirmed in New York on Monday by a home office executive.

The story of "peacetime" U. S. Marines,

"Shores of Tripoli" has been in production at the Fox Hollywood studio for several weeks, with Milton Sperling as producer. A Technicolor camera crew consisting of four men, a manager and a director, James Havens, had been on board an American warship off Hawaii, according to reports, when the sudden Jap attack occurred on December 7th. The crew arrived back in Honolulu a few days after the surprise attack. It is understood that they filmed some of the actual bombing.

Meanwhile, the shots of peace-time Pearl Harbor, including scenes of U. S. Naval bases and other defenses, taken by the Fox crew prior to the attack, cannot be included in "Shores of Tripoli," by order of Navy censors. For that reason, the script will have to be revised to delete those shots.

More War Stories in Production

Continuing to line up stories with war and defense themes for production, Hollywood this week reported on the following:

Metro has scheduled "Six Girls in Uniform," a story of women's war work by Robert Hopkins, with Ann Sothorn, Marjorie Main, Virginia Grey, Virginia O'Brien and Ann Rutherford. Lee Bowman is slated to play the male lead and George Haight, former Broadway producer, will produce.

"Ten Gentlemen from West Point," a story of the founding of the U. S. Military Academy, went into production at 20th Century-Fox over the week-end, with William Perlberg as producer and Henry Hathaway directing. John Payne, Maureen O'Hara, George Montgomery, Laird Cregar, Victor Francen and Ward Bond are cast in leading roles.

Edward Chapman has been released from duty in the R. A. F., to permit him to play the role of Amy Johnson's father in "Woman with Wings," the Anna Neagle-starring film of the life of Britain's aviatrix, now being produced in England by Herbert Wilcox for RKO release.

MGM has set "American Cavalcade," a history of the U. S. from Pilgrim days to the present, as the next starring vehicle for Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn, with Sidney Franklin as producer.

Warner Bros. "You're in the Army Now," starring Jimmy Durante and Phil Silvers, opened nationally on Christmas Day. According to reports from Warners', the picture opened in New York at the Strand, "to business 25 per cent ahead of the gross piled up last Christmas Day," and "opened to big business in all situations."

Disney Films for U. S. Navy

Walt Disney will produce 20 single-reel films, under a cost-only contract, for the U. S. Navy, at his Burbank studio, it was announced by RKO on Monday in New York. The Navy Bureau of Aeronautics devised this plan as a new method for training Navy lookouts, observers and pilots in recognizing U. S. warships and aircraft. The pictures, when completed, will be shown repeatedly to Navy personnel at all ship and shore stations, augmenting the established method of learning plane and ship outlines by the study of silhouette charts.

All three methods of photography will be employed for the pictures, live or actual photography, model photography and the animated cartoon style of picture-making, a triple-method believed never before attempted by the motion picture industry.

Lieutenant-Colonel Darryl F. Zanuck planned to leave Hollywood by plane on Thursday for Washington to confer with War Department and Army officials on the production of Army training and civilian defense films by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. Lt.-Col. Zanuck is head of the council.

Guild Names War-Defense Group

A war emergency committee to cooperate with the War Activities Committee of the motion picture industry was named last Friday by the Screen Writers Guild in Hollywood.

Members of the committee are: Ralph Block, chairman; Sheridan Gibney, Sidney Buchman, Charles Brackett, John Larkin, Mary McCall, Allen Rivkin, Robert Rosson and Harry Tugend.

William R. Weaver, Hollywood editor of Quigley Publications, was named on Monday to the public relations committee of the Theatre Defense Bureau formed by Mayor Fletcher Bowron, as a division of the Los Angeles Defense Council.

"Hey Rube" Club Organized

The "Hey Rube" idea created by the William Morris agency in New York recently, as a means of uniting the nation's show business during the war time emergency, will become a national organization, it was announced last Friday. Leaders of the show world have decided the name of "Hey Rube," the traditional rallying cry of show business into a club, using the slogan on campaign buttons as a basis of financing the group. These buttons, it was said, will be sold and the funds devoted to the men and women of show business for the defense of the U. S.

The list of "Hey Rube" charter members includes: George J. Schaefer, president of RKO; Barney Balaban, president of Paramount; Will H. Hays; E. V. Richards, head of the Saenger Circuit; Joseph Hazen, of counsel for Warners; William Morris and Abe Lastfogel, originators of the "Hey Rube" idea, and heads of the William Morris Agency; Leo Spitz, industry counsel; Edwin L. Weisl, of counsel for Paramount; Robert Christenbury, managing director of the Hotel Astor, and head of the Broadway Association; T. J. Connors, personal assistant to Sidney R. Kent; Max A. Cohen, president of New York Allied; Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's; Sam Shain and Gordon Youngman, of counsel for RKO. Incorporation papers already have been drawn by Mr. Youngman at Mr. Schaefer's instructions.

AMPP Approves Talent Group

The new Hollywood coordinating committee for stage, screen and radio, which will be the official clearing house for all requests for free talent, on Tuesday received the approval of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, following a meeting of the board of directors at which the augmentation of Hollywood's cooperation with the Government in the war was discussed.

Ralph Block, chairman of the Screen Writers Guild War Emergency Committee, left Hollywood Wednesday for Washington to coordinate the efforts of the screen writers with federal agencies and obtain information for the mobilization of Hollywood writers for civilian defense.

Washington to Resume Ascap Fee, No Prosecutions

Under an agreement with state authorities, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has decided not to prosecute exhibitors, broadcasters or other music users in the state of Washington for royalties on ASCAP music used and not paid for during the three years the music society was prevented by the state's anti-ASCAP law from operating in Washington.

ASCAP will resume operations in Washington by filing a list of its copyrighted compositions with the secretary of state in compliance with the law and has agreed not to press its appeal on the constitutionality of the statute in the United States supreme court.

Society officials said Washington music users would resume payment of royalties immediately and that no damage actions for the unlicensed performances would be brought by the society. They pointed out that few theatres in the state made provision for contingencies of this kind and that successful damage actions by ASCAP would work an unreasonable hardship on many theatres in Washington.

Ascap Move Shocks Nebraska Owners

ASCAP's release of all members to take care of themselves as far as Nebraska is concerned, hit hard in exhibitor circles in the state and left them somewhat groggy this week.

Nebraska's anti-ASCAP measure, approved by legislature and governor in 1937, was given approval in U. S. Supreme Court decision early this year, which made it impossible for ASCAP to use its usual protective measures in licensing agreements.

This release was the long awaited big ace ASCAP is now playing. It means more than 1,100 members of the Society are now individual free agents in Nebraska, and can come in to make all the singleton deals in the state necessary to clear their music in danceries, theatres, and hotels. Instead of one agency to deal with, the Nebraska music users now find themselves confronted with more than a thousand.

Nebraska's attorney general has already gone on record saying he's outside of the argument—that his responsibility ends with seeing that the members do not band together to form a monopoly which will control and fix prices. These civil actions, bound to crop up in court, are only between the ASCAP members and the infringing parties.

Many exhibitors believe the ruling will mean every deal for pictures in which music is used will have to be a double settlement, rental paid for the film, and a side deal for percentage of the gross to the member of ASCAP whose song is heard in the film. In case of several writers, the situation becomes acute and complex. A Berlin musical on film, they aver, under this arrangement, might extract as much as 25% of the rental for its end.

Full extent of what this means to entertainment in Nebraska hasn't yet dawned on the rank and file man who handles public performance of music for profit. The overall picture is that ASCAP intends to make its big stand on the bulwark of its entire membership. Users of music are going to meet one after another of these agents for songwriters demanding licensing for their music, and everyone will be a separate deal in every community.

More Insurance and Defense Bond Bonuses

Christmas gifts in the form of insurance, defense bonds and cash were given to employees of four Chicago circuits this year.

For the fourth consecutive year Balaban & Katz and the Great States circuits presented all their employees with paid up insurance policies for 1942. Value of these policies run from $500 to $2,500 according to the salary received by the individuals. Policy is a combination life, health and accident proposition and is enjoyed by all from usher up to the highest executive.

The Harry & Elmer Balaban Theatres' managers found a week's salary in their envelopes and other employees, of three months or longer, were presented with a half week's pay. The Essaness Theatres circuit gave cash bonuses in the form of Defense Bonds, with the amounts varying with salaries received and length of employment with the company.

The employees of the Van Nomikos Theatre circuit in Chicago, all received Christmas bonus checks.

Employees of the Capitol theatre in Lincoln, Neb., received bonuses ranging from $12.50 to $50, according to the amount in the Christmas Savings Program. Nebraska Theatres, Inc., in Lincoln gave defense bonds and stamps, and the Lincoln Theatres Corp., gave bonuses depending on the length of service.

Despite the war the Consolidated Amusement Co., in Honolulu, presented its employees with bonuses of five per cent.

National Decency Legion Classifies Nine Pictures

Of the nine motion pictures classified by the National Legion of Decency in its listing for the current week, four were approved for general patronage, three were approved for adults, one was classified as objectionable in part and one was condemned. The pictures and their classifications follow:

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage: "Lone Rider and the Bandit," "Riders of the Bad Land," "West of Cimarron," "You're in the Army Now." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults: "All Through the Night," "Hellzapoppin'," "Playmates." Class B, Objectionable in Part: "Bahama Passage."

"City of Sin," A Film Enterprise, Inc., feature, was condemned by the Legion because of "immoral implications, suggestive scenes and objectionable dances."

Lubin On Defense Council

Herb Lubin, manager of the Landis theatre, Vineland, N. J., has been appointed to the Vineland Defense Council. He is also chairman of the sub-committee in charge of "Consumer Interest."

Schaefer Heads AMPP

Carl Schaefer, of Warner Brothers. in Burbank, Cal., has been elected chairman of the Foreign Department Committee of the AMPP, succeeding Robert M. W. Vogel, of MGM.

United Artists Acquire Film

United Artists has acquired the Latin American rights to "Sinfonia Argentina," a musical to be produced in Buenos Aires by Sur Art Films, Walter Gould, foreign manager for United Artists, has announced.

FCC Approves License Transfer

Acting on the "stated willingness of the National Broadcasting Company and Radio Corporation of America" to dispose of one of the two NBC networks, the Federal Communications Commission has approved the voluntary assignment of the licenses to four key stations of the Blue network. This is considered to be the first major step in the divorcement.

The Commission announced that station WJZ, New York, WENR in Chicago, and KGO, San Francisco, would be transferred from NBC to RCA, pending the finding of an outside purchaser to assume their operation, and WMAL in Washington, D. C., would be transferred to the M.A. Leese Radio Corporation, the original owner, now a subsidiary of the Washington Star.

Following the announcement Niles Trammell, NBC president, sent a telegram to all Blue network affiliates. He urged all stations to attend a special conference to be held at the Drake Hotel in Chicago on January 15th. Although the purpose of the meeting was not given in the wire, it is understood that the next steps in the separation of the Red and Blue networks would be discussed.

NBC offices in New York are understood to be ready for complete separation of the two networks and are awaiting official approval from the FCC. RCA has reserved about 30 corporate names for the new network and it is understood that the Blue will be operated by an individual corporation as a wholly owned subsidiary of RCA. It is also understood that NBC will declare a dividend in kind to the parent company, RCA.

Mutual Adds 48 Stations

With the addition of 25 stations and the replacement of 23 others Mutual added 48 affiliates to the network during 1941 to bring the total number up to an all time high of 193, it was pointed out in the annual year-end summary.

During 1941, new station additions included WGR, Buffalo; WFBZ, Baltimore, and WCAE, Pittsburgh, all 22 years old and operating with 5,000 watts. The addition of five stations also gave Mutual coverage in Florida for the first time.

Sporting events, always a big feature on the network, grew in emphasis during the year, led by the acquisition of exclusive rights to the Mike Jacobs boxing bouts. For the third year, Mutual broadcast exclusively the World Series play-by-play, and for the second year the professional football championship.

In May, Mutual broke off from the rest of the networks to bring back Ascap music to the air and followed its action by resigning from the National Association of Broadcasters.

During the year there were 931 special events and sports programs originating at home and abroad. These consumed 493 hours.

Mutual scored a freak kind of radio scoop during the year when its Washington correspondent failed to shut off his microphone following President Roosevelt's request for a declaration of war against Japan and the network thus became the first to broadcast the actual proceedings of a house of Congress in session.

Loew-Poli Promotions

Harry F. Shaw, Loew-Poli division manager in New Haven, Conn., has announced the promotion of Herbert Coleman, former student assistant at the Loew-Poli theatre in that city to assistant at the Bijou, replacing Michael Piccerelle, who is the new assistant at the Springfield.

War and the New Decree

Order No. 1 Stories of 1941

WAR—between the United States and the Axis—coming at the twelfth month of 1941, cast a shadow over other highlights of the year. War affected the motion picture industry no less than other activities of the nation. Hollywood immediately set in motion ways and means of supporting the nation's war effort, meanwhile adjusting to a War economy and extending its service contributions to the country.

Despite the decrease in foreign markets and monetary restrictions abroad, financial statements for 1941 of film companies revealed sharp increases in net profits.

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., reported a net profit for the fiscal year ended August 30th of $5,429,302, doubling its profit of last year. Loew's, Inc., with a net profit of $7,206,466 for the 40-week period ended June 5th, enabled the company to distribute substantial bonuses and dividends. Columbia's profit, fiscal year ended June 28th, was $552,743, a sharp increase over 1940. Net profit for RKO Radio, 39 weeks ended October 4th, was $1,971,201. Twentieth Century-Fox reported a net of $1,549,164 for the nine-months period ended September 27th, and Universal's net was $2,751,864 for the 39 weeks ended August 2nd.

Highlight of 1941, industrywise, was September 1st, effective date of consent decree selling provisions. The five majors which signed the decree with the United States Government on October 29th, 1940, adjusted their 1941-42 selling plans to comply with the formula approved by Judge Henry W. Goddard. Loew's, Inc., Paramount Pictures, Inc., Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., restricted their selling of product to a blocks-of-five maximum, with advance screenings for exhibitors. The "Little Three"—Columbia, United Artists and Universal—did not sign the decree and were not bound by the September 1st regulations. However, they are now facing antitrust action in March. If they win, it may bring an end to the "new order" of selling after next June 1st.

Arbitration before the 31 motion picture tribunals of the American Arbitration Association, launched on February 1st for complaints on clearance, some run, withholding prints and cancellation for moral, religious or racial cause, was extended on September 1st to include specific run demands under Section X. The flood of complaints expected a year ago did not materialize. Only 15 cases a month, average, were filed.

September was another milestone, with the industry's rebuttal, in the Senate subcommittee hearings, of alleged war propaganda of motion pictures. For three weeks the committee in Washington, in three-ring-circus fashion, turned the nation's spotlight on Hollywood, but the inquiry fizzled. Wendell Willkie was counsel for the industry.

In October, Hollywood labor leaders—George E. Browne, former president of the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees, and Willie Bioff, Browne's personal representative—came to trial in New York Federal Court on charges of extorting $1,000,000 from the major companies. Browne and Bioff were tried, convicted and imprisoned, the former to eight years, the latter to ten years, and each fined $20,000.

A radio landmark was the commercialization of television on July 1st. Priorities due to the War impeded any rapid development of television commercially. Meanwhile, distributors are withholding film features from telecasting on grounds of competition. Telecasters are currently using documentaries, shorts and old feature films furnished by independent distributors.

As the year drew to a close, in Chicago, December 9th, exhibitors met with producer-distributors to discuss common grounds for industry unity. Development of the five-point plan projected, extending to industry goodwill, trade practices, taxation, priorities and other problems, it is hoped, on the agenda for 1942.

LOCAL 306 THREATENS LOEW STRIKE AFTER CIRCUIT FILES TRUST ACTION

Loew's Charges Monopoly After Union Demands Service to Theatres Not Using IATSE Projectionists Must Cease

Local 306, the country's strongest projectionists' union, has always wanted complete control of its home territory, New York—meaning the elimination of its only rival there, the Empire State Motion Picture Operators Union.

Last week, that desire led to an anti-trust suit against Local 306, by one of the country's strongest circuit's: Loew's.

The circuit, Wednesday, December 24th, went into New York Federal Court asking an injunction against the union, and a declaratory judgment. The injunction would restrain the union from enforcing its demand that the circuit's film company, the distributor cease servicing theatres hiring non-Local 306 projectionists, and its corollary demand that members in Loew booths not project film delivered by non-members of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees.

Meanwhile, the local, whose demands had been made to cripple theatres employing projectionist members of the Empire union, over the weekend intimated strike action, through a statement by Joseph Basson, president, who added that union demands would be met, "Thurman Arnold, lawsuits, or anything else to the contrary notwithstanding."

Richard F. Walsh, IATSE president, last week promised the industry an end to strikes, and strike threats, "for the duration."

Demands Listed

The Loew's suit charged that during negotiations last month, for a new Local 306 contract, it received from the union a letter laying down three conditions: that Loew's supply films only to theatres which employ Local 306 members; that Local 306 men be not required to handle films transported by non-IATSE workers; and that films be delivered only by IATSE members.

Loew's said it employed Local 306 members in its 65 New York houses; that its employees in shipping, poster, and inspection departments were members of IATSE local B-51 exchange employees' union; that employees in the developing department belonged to IATSE local 702, laboratory technicians' union. It thus presents a union shop, it was noted.

On the other hand, affecting the union's demand that films be delivered only by IATSE members, the company delivers films also by parcel post, by express, and by common carriers.

Loew's complaint asserted the union asked immediate compliance with its demands, threatening a strike in the New York home office and exchange, in the city's theatres, and in the Culver City studio, and asserting that the exchange employees' local, B-51, would join.

Loew's pointed out that it serviced film to 300 theatres in the New York area. Twenty per cent do not employ Local 306 men. If the film company cannot send film to that 20 per cent, it will lose approximately $400,000 in revenue, during the current season, it declared, and it added that closing of the 65 Loew theatres would cause a loss of $400,000 weekly.

The declaratory judgment asked by Loew's

BASSON POINTS TO HIS RECORD

"The record is what counts," New York local 306 president Joseph Basson told a newspaper interviewer last week, adding that he had organized the local in the early days of the films, that he was a "pioneer in this industry," that he had been a movie projectionist for more than 30 years, that he abolished all local assessments, that he had cut his salary from $21,800 per year to $5,200; and that during his term of office, "wages for union projectionists were increased from $3,000,000 per year to $6,000,000." He also said that long term contracts had stabilized employer-union relations, that these contracts were opened each year for wage increases, and that they allowed no wage reductions.

would state that the union "ultimatum" is illegal, in restraint of trade, in violation of the Federal consent decree to which MGM is a signatory, and would require Loew's to interfere with the businesses of independent exhibitors who employ Empire State union men.

First hearing will be January 13th.

Mr. Basson, up for reelection Wednesday, said over the weekend, in reporting to union members, that the Loew's was a "test case," and said the union intended similar demands upon other distributors.

Mr. Basson said he had attempted peace with the rival union, and charged its leaders with non-cooperation.

Anent the elections Wednesday, at which Mr. Basson was opposed by Herman Gelber, recording secretary, it was charged in some union sectors that the Loew's case and concomitant renewal of organizational energy was a spur for reelection. Mr. Basson retorted that the pressure upon distributors was renewed because Richard Walsh, Alliance president, pledged support.

Recalls Arnold Threat

Mention by Mr. Basson of Thurman Arnold, assistant United States Attorney General in charge of the Department of Justice anti-trust division—and the Loew's manner of retort, by suit under the anti-trust laws—brought to minds of New York observers the previous effort by his local, to force distributors to service only Local 306 dominated theatres. That was in 1939; and Mr. Arnold threatened to "crack down," inferentially comparing the union to a monopoly.

Matthew Levy, Local 306 counsel, told newspapers last week recent United States Supreme Court decisions had "established the legality" of the union viewpoint.

The union has 2,000 members in the city; whether they will be called out in all theatres or only against Loew's, was presumably being decided this week by the union leaders. Mr. Basson said, however, that a walk-out, if it did occur, would probably be after January 13th, date of the hearing in court.

Local 306 on Tuesday won an award, in a dispute with the Julius Joelson circuit. Harry C. Kane, arbitrator, ruled the circuit must continue paying the wage scale agreed to by the previous owner of the theatres, Consolidated; and that it also must grant the five per cent increase given union members some months ago under an agreement with the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York.

Negotiations resumed this week, in New York, between eight IATSE studio locals and the producers, over new contracts, which have been obtained already by two locals. The negotiations were first held in New York, then taken to the Coast, and they began again Tuesday in the New York office of Pat Casey, producers' labor representative, upon his arrival from Hollywood.

The shift of conference locale, to New York, was ascribed to the desire of negotiators to be near the majors' home offices, from which executives could have ready access to meetings, and also to be near the headquarters of the IATSE.

Meanwhile, the long smoldering jurisdictional dispute on the Coast between the IATSE's studio photographers' local, 659, and the American Society of Cinematographers threatened to erupt. The local's leaders said they intended to tell majors' officials, at the New York conferences, that the local's members would refuse to work on studio lots with men not affiliated with the Alliance.

The Screen Publicists Guild, and the majors' home offices reached an agreement in principle, on a closed shop contract, it was reported Monday, in New York, without confirmation. Such an agreement climaxes months of negotiation sometimes bitter, and always protracted, and the result of the SPG's certification by the National Labor Relations Board as the proper bargaining agency for advertising and publicity workers of the majors.

Time Magazine relays the story from the little town of Darwin, in Australia, about the Arnheim tribesman named Jacala, serving a jail sentence for spearing a native chieftain, who, from his cell window, for months watched the neon lights of a nearby movie theatre. When he was released, Jacala hiked back to his tribe, 400 miles away, still wondering about the movies.

Jacala persuaded 20 fellow tribesmen to return to Darwin. For 40 days they traveled, came at last to the movie theatre with the neon sign, and entered. On a shiny screen, a white man was hugging and kissing a white woman. Jacala & friends, disgusted, stalked out, walked 40 days home again.

Darwin natives, constant moviegoers, could have told the tribesmen of the standard native device for dealing with such pictures: natives obliterate kissing scenes by flashing electric torches at the screen.

THE job of representing Western Electric overseas these days is no routine stint. A look at the organization's "News Letter" gives the impression that the composite W. E. ambassador is a man, a very thin man, on a bicycle, swinging a squash racket to ward off lurking cobras.

It seems that a short time ago Mr. Wight was confronted with a little matter of disposing of a cobra which had elected to decorate his front lawn. As if that weren't lurid enough, about the same time Wight was called for jury duty, investigating the guilt of an Indian who had employed an axe on a friend with melancholy results.

EXHIBITOR COMPLAINTS TO DECREE ARBITRATION BOARDS ON THE DECLINE

Geographically, Arbitration Action Appears Centered in Only Half-a-Dozen Exchange Territories; Two Boards Left Idle

Activity in the motion picture arbitration tribunals is on the decline.

New actions have been decreasing steadily since June when the rate of complaints reached a peak. In the ten and a half months since the 31 field arbitration tribunals opened for business on February 1 at a total of 158 cases (as of December 29th) have been filed. Two-thirds of these actions have been disposed of, either by award or withdrawal.

Pending still on the dockets of field tribunals are 52 complaints. Seven awards are on the agenda of the Appeal Board at New York awaiting a review of the arbitrator's action.

Nine Cases in November

During November only nine cases were reported. October saw 15 new actions, only one less than the average, to then, of 16 complaints per month. During the first three weeks of December ten actions have been filed. Six, however, were received during the first week of December, with only three cases reported since.

Geographically arbitration appears to have centered in half a dozen exchange areas, a study of the cases filed since February indicates. Only five of the 31 tribunals have received ten or more cases. Two tribunals, Seattle and Des Moines, have received no cases at all.

The five tribunals with the most cases, and the number of actions before each are: New York (30), Philadelphia (15), Chicago (12), Washington (10) and Buffalo (10). Five other cities have received between five and ten cases. They are: Detroit (8), Boston (7), New Haven (6), St. Louis (6) and Dallas (5).

Clearance complaints, filed under section VIII of the consent decree far outnumber all other types of action permitted under the decree. Of the total of 156 cases 119 have been complaints against unreasonable clearances. Some run actions under Section VI of the decree total 32, while seven complaints of other types have been filed.

Only two complaints are simple specific run demands hitting at the buying power of circuits. Of five combination complaints however, several have incorporated specific run demands with some run or clearance actions. In several instances too, some run and clearance complaints have been combined in one demand for arbitration. The rush of specific run cases expected after Section X became effective September 1st failed to materialize.

A study of the disposition of the 106 cases marked completed in local tribunal dockets revealed that by far the largest proportion, 46 cases, have been withdrawn or settled before the entry of a formal award. About half of these cases were settled before they reached a hearing, it is reported. In the others the parties reached an agreement after one, two or three hearings and in several instances settlements were arrived at following the conclusion of hearings. In such instances the parties generally asked the arbitrator to enter their agreement on the record as a consent award.

The balance between exhibitor and distributor victories in the field tribunals is exactly even, with 29 awards in favor of each. The number of victories for exhibitors, however, is considerably higher if cases in which awards granted part of the relief sought are included and if it were possible to determine precisely how many settlements gave the exhibitor the relief sought. Presuming that most of the settlements granted a fair measure of relief it is estimated that the number of cases in which exhibitors have won some benefits runs as high as 85 out of the 106 completed actions.

Before the Appeal Board, however, exhibitors have fared less well. In only four decisions has the "supreme court" of arbitration upheld in full the award of an arbitrator granting relief to the complainant. In ten appeal decisions the distributors have won a whole or partial victory. Seven cases are still pending before the Appeal Board.

Nine Dockets Clear

The dockets of nine tribunals have been cleared of all cases, eleven have only one decision to be rendered and only three tribunals have five or more undecided cases in their working files. These figures exclude the seven cases still at the Appeal Board for review.

New York city remains by far the most active tribunal in the country with a total of 30 cases on its records. Thirteen of these have been disposed of 15 are still pending in the tribunal and two are before the appeal board. Only one New York case has been a some run action, 25 were clearance demands and three combination complaints.

Philadelphia is the second most active tribunal with a total of 15 cases on its roster. Ten have been disposed of, four are pending and one Philadelphia district complaint is still before the Appeal Board. One was a some run action, 14 were clearance cases.

Chicago is the third most active tribunal with 12 cases entered on its dockets, including several which established important precedents before the Appeal Board and locally. Washington and Buffalo have both received ten cases apiece. Four of the Buffalo actions were filed together by upstate New York exhibitors during the first week in December.

The tribunals which now are inactive in so far as motion picture cases are concerned are Portland, Atlanta, Charlotte, Cleveland, Dallas, Milwaukee, Oklahoma City, St. Louis and Salt Lake City. A few of these may have received national defense or commercial arbitration cases since the consenting distributors made them available for such actions on December 1st.

The American Arbitration Association, administrator of the motion picture tribunals declines, however, to reveal the number of defense cases which have been heard in the motion picture tribunals. This is in line with its policy of insuring privacy for all commercial and industrial arbitrations by withholding all information about them from the press. According to Samuel Perry, field director of the defense tribunals, no report will be made public until a year-end total of actions in the motion picture offices is reported to the supervising Arbitration Committee appointed under the terms of the consent decree. By the terms of the arrangement for conducting other than film arbitrations in the field offices one half of the fees received for such cases will be applied to expenses of maintaining the motion picture arbitration system.

New York State's 1942 Legislative Film Preview

by DICK CONNERS
in Albany

Prosecution of a successful war effort is the major concern of the 1942 New York legislature which convenes January 7th to hear Governor Lehman's annual message. The motion picture industry has already indicated its support of measures designed to aid in security home and abroad and the feeling exists that exhibitors particularly will have a special interest in N. Y. legislative action.

While legislative leaders have not completed the defense formula, there is a general expectation that the blackout situation will importantly concern places of public assembly, including theatres. Throughout the state, many exhibitors have offered their theatres as shelters in time of emergency. Whether theatres are practicable for this purpose will undoubtedly be determined, but it is certain that more stringent safety inspection of places of public assembly may be in line if the determination is affirmative.

Fee for 16 mm

Heading the agenda of direct motion picture legislation of a non-defense nature is consideration again of a measure, certain to be introduced, it is thought here, to equalize the censorship fee on inspection of 16 mm film. The 35 mm film is of course subject to a levy of $3 per 1,000 feet on original film and $2 per 1,000 feet of prints under the law of 1921 which set up the censorship and review features. Since 16 mm film requires more time for inspection, etc., last year a bill was introduced to raise 16 mm to a $6 per 1,000 feet fee for originals and $4 for prints. Designed as a revenue raiser for the state, the bill is understood to have the support of the State Education Department, under which film censorship operates. The bill was introduced too late last year for amendment, otherwise figured to be passed.

Last year's bill was understood to have been modeled after the Maryland law, but an amendment was needed to make it practicable in New York. With a year's additional study, its recommendation by the legislature as revenue for the state budget is quite likely.

No action against the consent decree is anticipated, but the old omnibus bill concerning chain stores and circuits may be reintroduced. The general feeling, however, is that little restrictive legislation will be considered during the wartime emergency unless an imperative need for supplementary revenue arises.

On Child Actors

Legislation to straighten out the present restrictive penal law against radio and motion picture theatre stage appearances of children under 16 is expected to be reintroduced. Such a bill was passed by the 1941 legislature but vetoed by Governor Lehman. A new measure which meets the objections raised in the executive rejection is expected, as the present law is too stiff, educators say, adding that they are powerless to grant exceptions.

Abolition of fee-charging employment agencies, always of interest to both motion picture and radio circles due to theatrical agencies, is expected to be proposed. For several years Governor Lehman has advocated restrictions on billboard advertising near intersections and along scenic routes. This subject can conceivably be brought to a conclusion in 1942 if avenues for additional revenue are sought.

BRITISH STARS WHO BEAT THE BOMBERS

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

ANOTHER year of battle and bombardment has swept over war-scarred Britain since last year's FAME went to press. Since the old calendar was rolled up and its 1941 fellow hung on the office wall, the Heinkels and the Dorniers have come and gone, flung their H. E.'s and incendiaries across the country, the Nazi U-boat has turned its torpedoes viciously on the nation's life lines, and her sons have gone forth to battle on the sands of Libya. But neither bombs nor submarines, apparently, can ruffle the composure of the British public, whose patronage of British picture theatres, far from being affected by the war, has increased to a figure higher in some cases than that registered in the days of peace.

To some it may come as a surprise, but it will confirm the beliefs of the student of national psychologies, that in these 12 bloody months past cinemagoing has suffered no material change. Once again the homely comedy of George Formby has been the British exhibitor's most profitable investment. Once again virtually the same ten as last year head MOTION PICTURE HERALD's Moneymakers Poll.

Grosses Higher

Queues have become a general rule in most districts. Pictures, and British pictures at that, are grossing higher figures than ever before. But the tastes and preferences of the public forming the queues has undergone no obvious change in the last 12 months. Certainly jockeying for position has brought about a shuffling of places. But the sum total of faces has the old familiar ring. Formby, Old Mother Riley, Big Hearted Arthur Askey, have beaten Hitler flat.

The year has not been a flourishing one for British studios. Production has stayed at an inconveniently low level. Men have been called to the colors, and the ranks of technicians and artistes have been depleted in consequence. Studios remain commandeered in the majority of cases. Materials are rationed and scarce. Many of the Ten Best in the British Poll owe their position to this production shortage, to reappearances in revivals.

Missing from the elect are names which might well be there emblazoned on the scroll of FAME, had they not a mightier theatre in which to play, the theatre of war itself. Probably stars like Rex Harrison, Ralph Richardson, Robert Newton, and certain others would rank higher, had they not been on active service much of the time.

Loyalty is a factor to which we have referred previously on such occasions. The native loyalty of the British public to its established favorites is once again manifest in the results of this year's poll. Those artistes who remain stable in position are those who have remained loyal to their public, who have not allowed ambition or conceit to color their careers.

The Winners

7. Anna Neagle . . . . .	20
8. Gracie Fields . . . . .	18
9. Charles Laughton . . . . .	17
10. Leslie Howard . . . . .	10

Once again, and it is an object lesson to all film makers whether British or American, the box office pull of comedy is reaffirmed and consolidated. Formby, Askey, Lucan, Hay, Harker, and Fields, six places out of ten are there because they are comedians. In such preoccupied and distracting times as the present, it is obvious that the motion picture which gets away from the war, which is sheer escapism and entertainment, has much in its favor. British producers have, for the most part, scored with comedy even more effectively than with drama, and the voting reflects the public's agreement with this view. "A good comic" has always been one of the British exhibitors' soundest investments.

Success of Simplicity

"A good comic" is just exactly how the average British picture fan would describe a Formby picture. Ask them why they like the "gormless lad from Lancashire" and they would probably say that it was because he is natural and unaffected, because he has no swank, because he is just like the lad in mill and munition factory, and because he sings a song with a twinkle in his voice. The continued success of Formby is the success of simplicity, the response of a public which has an unerring knack of seeing beneath the veneer, to a personality which is neither above nor below them, but exactly on their working class level. During the year Formby launched his own company to produce pictures for world release by Columbia, Columbia takes a material part in the financing. That Columbia is not in the motion picture business for philanthropic reasons suggests that they have no doubts about the commercial value of the comedian.

Second this year, having leapt there from fifth place last, is Arthur Lucan, the "Old Mother Riley" of stage, radio and screen, whose waxing motion picture star was considered in these pages three years back. Under the British National banner Lucan, whose films were previously made on extremely inexpensive lines, has now been assisted to a wider public by films which cost probably three times more than his earlier pictures and which gross more than double their cost. One of these, "Old Mother Riley's Ghost," has been one of the year's winners. His films are not for the intelligentsia and are never seen in the west end, which obviously does not matter at all. In the tattered widow's weeds of the Dublin slums, Old Mother Riley has pranced grimacingly and garrulously into Parliament and A. R. F., into Society and into the Circus, aiming his comedy at the lowest common denominator of audience appeal.

There is not much better palliative than the comedy of Big Hearted Arthur Askey, one of the greatest drolls on stage radio and screen, who in his second year in films has leaped to third place in the popularity poll. Askey made a name initially over the B. B. C. network, has consolidated it on the vaudeville stage and the screen. His comedy, which is reminiscent both of the conger eel and the machine guns of a Spitfire, is inimitable, and he is one comedian who suffers no plagiarism.

Donat Remembered

Donat's decline from second to fourth place is not in fact a decline at all, for he has not played in any British films during the year. The actor retains a public because "Mr. Chips" has continued its progress through the picture houses long after other films of the same vintage have been buried in the vaults.

Will Hay, seventh last year, fifth this, made one film in that period, "The Ghost of Saint Michaels." How much he owes to this and how much the revivals of such almost repertory subjects as "Oh, Mr. Porter," and other Gainesborough productions, is for the individual exhibitor to say, Hay's peculiarly English personality and type of comedy is very near the English heart and his retention among the Ten Best is a triumph of box office loyalty.

Conrad Veidt, still commanding public attention on score of two 1941 films, "Spy in Black" and "Contraband," Gordon Harker the Cockney comedian whose "Inspector Hornleigh" appearances consistently command box office queues, tie for sixth place. Last year they were eighth and ninth respectively.

Anna Neagle, Gracie Fields, and Charles Laughton have made no films this year—in Britain, that is. But shortage of product and the fact that their films have in the main been of the type which can be revived commercially, keep them in the limelight.

Last of the 10, but by no means least, comes Leslie Howard, whose position is greatly a reflection of the extraordinary box-office success of "Pimpernel Smith," a picture produced, directed and starred by himself, a picture which, it is estimated, is already well up above the £120,000 gross mark. "Pimpernel Smith" has been and still is one of the films of the year.

INTERNATIONAL TEN BEST ON THE BRITISH FRONT

by AUBREY FLANAGAN

IN the records of MOTION PICTURE HERALD's Poll of British Stars, it has been shown that after two years of war in which the civilian has been brought to the front line and the high explosive to the domestic doorstep, British picturegoers not only go more frequently to the cinema theatre, but scarcely budge one iota in their regard for the British stars who draw them there.

On the wider international field there is much the same story to tell, a story of unruffled calm and self possession, a story of courage which is so normal as scarcely to be spectacular, a story which in its small way, when measured by the greater story of Britain at war, helps to an understanding of how and why Britain has stood up to the greatest military machine in history.

Despite the bombs and the attempted blockade, despite dislocation of public and private life, despite evacuation and rationing, the mobilization of men and women, and the myriad disturbances and tragedies of life under totalitarian war conditions, Britain has gone to the pictures in just the same old way.

British exhibitors, canvassed once again for their record of the stars who have brought the most money to their box offices during twelve months of bitter war, tell that virtually the same Ten Best as in the previous year have been the Ten Best Money-makers for 1941.

Rooney Leads

For the second time freckled Mickey Rooney has proven the Number One Champion of the British Box Office. Deanna Durbin, Spencer Tracy, George Formby, the MacDonald-Eddy team, Errol Flynn, Gary Cooper, Cagney and songster Bing Crosby—exactly the same gallery as in the first year of the war—are again together, in slightly different order, maybe, but with a voting which consolidates their position more emphatically than before.

It is the refreshing exuberance of Rooney which attracts the British picturegoer, much the same fundamental qualities which have established Formby as Number One British star. The mother sees in him the ideal, ebullient, forthright son, the sister the fond, pugnacious brother. The Hardy family, American though they be, are nearer to English standards and relationships than the surface differences may suggest possible. But the immense success here of "Strike Up The Band"—which had that added factor dear to the British box office, music—and of "Men of Boys' Town," helped this year to consolidate Rooney's appeal.

Youth, freshness of personality, candor and an absence of guile, are found, too, in Deanna Durbin, plus, once again, the qualities of superlative music. It is no cause for surprise that she, too, stands pat, second, in the same place as last year.

In Tracy, third in the Poll, much the same

The Winners

8. Gary Cooper . . . . .	19
9. James Cagney . . . . .	18.5
10. Bing Crosby . . . . .	18

characteristics have helped him retain his place. Honest directness of personality, manliness, and strong dramatic roles such as that of Father Flanagan in the film mentioned above, "Men of Boys' Town" helped.

Fifth last year, George Formby, stronger in voting on the British Poll, is one point higher on the All Star Poll. He alone of the international stars in the Ten Best represents British production. As with the other nine the question of nationality scarcely arises, for it is factors apart from country or race, subjects in every single instance remote from the war, which are the entertainment magnets.

Since music has ever been a commercial factor in entertainment here, the continued vogue of the Macdonald-Eddy team can well be understood. "Bitter Sweet," a success when Wilcox made it here with Anna Neagle, has been one of the year's top grossers in Britain in the Metro version.

Errol Flynn made but one film which was generally released here during the last year, "Footsteps in the Dark." It probably helped the star from place seven to place six, though the continued showing of "Sea Hawk," one of Warners' winners, played no less a part in the process.

Cooper Advanced

Gary Cooper, stepping from ninth place to eighth again, has to thank one of the success films of the year, "North West Mounted," a picture the box office success of which contributed greatly to the frozen assets of Paramount in this country.

There remain two among the elect, James Cagney and Bing Crosby. Nobody who has seen the young lads of the Walworth Road—now in battle dress somewhere in England—aggressively thrusting a Cagneyesque chin at the local lasses, tilting a battered trilby with the same jaunty challenge, or who has heard every boy in every English dance hall "boop boop booping" down to Bing's lowest register, will bat an eyelid at this choice. Nobody who has seen the British Miss, the cute silk stockings typist from Tooting, or the small town Toots glowing with admiration at the process, will move a muscle. Both these young men are classic patterns for our contemporary youth. Cagney's 1941 films, "Torrid Zone," "City For Conquest" and "Strawberry Blonde" have by their quality helped Cagney maintain his public. Bing, who has a vast gramophone record public to aid him, was additionally fortunate in "Road to Zanzibar," a happy successor to the record breaking "Road to Singapore." Few films can be accredited such an achievement of escapist entertainment as this one. It has lifted Mr. Crosby way up high.

Minnesota Set for Rebuttal in Major's Case

The state will produce a parade of rebuttal witnesses next week, when the trial of 20th-Fox, Paramount and RKO, accused of violating the Minnesota and anti-blocks-of-five law is resumed on Monday in Ramsey county district court at St. Paul. The trial was adjourned December 19.

Presentation of the state's case was perfunctory, all facts being admitted for the record, but then the defense began the long task of attempting to establish contentions which simmered down to these major points:

That production and distribution of film is in interstate commerce and therefore not subject to a state law.

That the 20 per cent cancellation clause of the Minnesota law may so impair a company's financial position through loss of revenue that it labels itself "confiscatory and capricious."

That bidding for story properties involves the copyright act, and that in regulating the licensing of copyrighted features, the state law interferes with an exclusively federal function.

That in the cancellation clause the state delegates to the exhibitor the right to judge what films he may consider objectionable and cancellable; that this is properly the function of a commission, and that the state is illegally delegating its powers in giving the exhibitor that right.

That licensing contracts are drawn in New York and that the Minnesota legislature therefore has no right to regulate such contracts.

Executives Testify

For these reasons the defense contends the Minnesota law is unconstitutional and that the defendants, RKO, Paramount and Twentieth Century-Fox (accused of selling films in blocks of five while the state law requires sale of an entire season's product en bloc) are not guilty.

A wealth of detail was introduced into the record. At week's end the witness was Neil F. Agnew, Paramount vice president, who corroborated testimony of Herman Wobber, Fox distribution head, concerning distribution of films. Both also entered into the hazards of production, listing various pictures of doubtless artistic value and high cost, which still proved to be boxoffice failures.

Ned E. Depinet of RKO was scheduled to be the first defense witness when the trial reopens January 7, and it was understood the defense might call officials of companies not involved in the present action, in order to show that the problems presented by defense witnesses thus far are common to the industry.

The state, however, plans to call as many as 23 or 30 rebuttal witnesses, to get into the record the picture insofar as Minnesota itself is concerned. Testimony thus far entered by the defense has dealt mostly with the national aspects of the industry, with but minor reference to the situation in Minnesota.

New PRC Salesmen

Producers Releasing Corporation has announced additions to its sales staff: George Caldaus, Los Angeles; John Morphet, Jack Weil, St. Louis; C. Carpenter, San Francisco.

Merger of Fox Action Sought

Application by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., filed Monday, December 29th, in the New York supreme court to consolidate all stockholders' actions pending against the company as a result of the alleged extortion payments to Willie Bioff and George E. Browne, IATSE executives now serving jail terms, disclosed that a total of seven units are now pending against the company.

Twentieth Century-Fox will ask Justice Charles B. McLaughlin on January 5th to stay the filing of any further suits, and to appoint a general counsel to represent all the plaintiffs in the action. Suits ask for an accounting by officials of the company claiming that the payments were improper.

Variety Clubs Elect, Induct

Additional Variety Clubs this week elected or inducted officers for 1942.

In Detroit, the new directors elected by the local Variety Club are: David M. Idzal, managing director, Fox Theatre; Ray Branch, president, Allied Theatres of Michigan; Earl J. Hudson, president, United Detroit Theatres; Jack McPherson, manager, National Screen Service; Edgar E. Kirchner, Family Theatre; John L. Saxe, treasurer, Monogram Pictures; David Newman, Moule and Newman Theatres; Wade Allen, Fine Arts Theatre; Lew Wisper and Frank Wetsman, Wisper & Wetsman Theatres; and Carl W. Buermele, Co-Operative Theatres of Michigan.

John Howard, retiring chief barker and manager for Paramount, was named National Conveassman. Delegates to the 1942 convention at Hollywood are Mr. Idzal and Mr. McPherson, with Mr. Allen and J. Oliver Brooks, head booker of the Butterfield Circuit, named as alternates.

Zucker in Cleveland

Lester Zucker will be formally inducted as chief barker of the Cleveland Variety Club, together with the recently elected officer personnel on January 24th. Mr. Zucker, Columbia branch manager, succeeds Bert Stearn, who left the Cleveland United Artists district managership on January 1st to take over his duties as UA western division sales manager.

The January 24th affair will also be the occasion of a testimonial dinner for Frank Boyd who has resigned as local representative of the American Seating Company to become general sales manager for the S. G. Frantz Engineering Company of New York.

William Elson and Joseph Podoloff have been named by the Variety Club of the Twin Cities in Minneapolis delegates to the national convention. Alternates are Maitland Frosch and A. A. Kaplan.

The Albany, N. Y., Variety held its first public function in its Ten Eyck Hotel headquarters New Year's Eve when members and their friends were entertained at an open house and cocktail party.

The party, which was announced by Louis R. Golding, chief barker, was under the direction of a committee headed by Moe Grassgreen.

The Indianapolis Variety Club and the Paramount exchange of that city joined in entertaining under-privileged children of the city at a Christmas party at the Indiana theatre, a feature of which was the showing of "Mr. Bug Goes to Town."

No Dual Trials, "Little Three" Are Promised

Attorneys for the so-called "Little Three"—Universal, United Artists, and Columbia, not signatories to the consent decree—breathed easier, and with some elation, Tuesday, after the United States Department of Justice, with a stated pledge, confirmed the attorneys' plea that they be not required to defend their clients in New York Federal and Buffalo Federal courts at the same time.

The New York suit is the continuation of the Government's key anti-trust action, settled against the other five majors by the decree. It is scheduled for the February calendar. The Buffalo anti-trust suit is that against the Schine circuit, affiliates, and the three majors.

Seymour Simon, special Assistant United States Attorney General, promised, Monday, in Buffalo, that the lawyers for the three film companies would not have to undertake the two suits simultaneously. He said his department would try the Schine case first. It will take eight weeks, he said, adding he expected Federal Judge Henry W. Goddard, in New York, to call hearing on that city's case February 16th, at which time the judge would probably set trial in April.

The Justice Department must win against the three majors in New York by June 1st, to keep in force the tradeshowing and selling provisions of the decree. The majors may use the decree's escape clause to nullify these provisions, if the Government does not win its case by then. However, it was indicated several weeks ago in New York Court, and again in Buffalo Monday, that if the Government feels the New York case cannot be finished before the "deadline," it will ask Judge Goddard for its extension.

Buffalo Federal Judge John Knight reserved decision Monday upon the motion by Willard S. McKay, Schine counsel, for reconsideration of the earlier order for start of trial March 3rd. He was joined by counsel for the majors. It was their argument that they be not required to defend the Buffalo and New York cases simultaneously, that prompted the pledge by Mr. Simon.

Exhibitor Suggests a "Bomber Week"

Carroll T. Cooney, Jr., vice-president of Waldo Theatre Corporation, Waldoboro, Maine, has an idea for raising money through donations of one penny each from American motion picture theatres patrons to build a U. S. bomber.

Mr. Cooney has advanced a plan for "Bomber Week," during which theatres would have in lobbies a display showing the Pacific islands which Japan has attacked and which the United States is defending. Space would be allotted for penny collections, and posters would explain the idea and incorporate a number of slogans centering on the theme of "pennies for a bomber."

Mr. Cooney advanced the theory that "the idea of having a bomber built, not out of large donations from small groups, but out of small donations from the largest number of people who might never have given to anything of this nature, save through taxation, is an important aspect" of such a drive.

Majors Promote, Realign Personnel and Territories

Major film companies this week shifted and promoted sales personnel and established new divisions.

Edwin W. Aaron, who has been with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the past 25 years, has been named assistant general sales manager of the company by William F. Rodgers, vice-president in charge of distribution. Mr. Aaron has been assistant to Mr. Rogers for the past 12 years and in his new capacity will add more duties and will have a wider scope of activity.

On Monday, Charles W. Koerner, general manager of RKO Theatres, announced a new divisional set-up starting Thursday, January 8th. The purpose of the realignment of theatres and the break-down of divisions is to provide more personal supervision of the houses.

New Division

A newly created division of out-of-town theatres has been assigned to Sol Schwartz, division manager of Bronx and East Side Manhattan Theatres. This division will include Keith's, Lowell; Albee, Providence; Palace, Capitol, Temple, Century and Regent, Rochester; the Eckel, Empire, Keith's, Palace, Paramount and St. James, Syracuse; Uptown, Detroit; Iowa, Cedar Rapids; Orpheum, Davenport; Orpheum, Sioux City; Capitol, Family and Strand, Marshalltown; Orpheum, Minneapolis; Orpheum and Grand, Dubuque; Orpheum and Liberty, New Orleans and Orpheum, Waterloo.

The theatres now supervised by Mr. Schwartz in New York will be split in two groups. John Hearn, present city manager for RKO in Yonkers, will have the Fordham, Chester, Franklin, Empire, Castle Hill and Pelham and Michael "Mike" Edelstein, now manager of the Tilyou, will operate the Regent, 125th Street, Alhambra, Roosevelt, Royal and Jefferson. Charles B. McDonald will continue with his present list of Manhattan and Queens Theatres in addition to the RKO 58th Street and 86th Street Theatres. Louis Goldberg will have the Brooklyn and Queens houses now under his supervision with the Albee and Orpheum added.

H. R. Emde remains as the division manager for the RKO Westchester theatres, Union City and Newark.

In addition to these changes, Mr. Koerner announces there will be several district managers named in the near future. No successors to John Hearn or Mike Edelstein have yet been selected.

Jay Golden, manager of the RKO Palace theatre in Rochester, N. Y., since 1937, has been appointed city manager for the five local theatres in the RKO-Paramount-Comerford pool. They are the Palace, Century, Regent, Temple and Capitol. Mr. Golden succeeds William Cadoret, general manager for Monroe Amusement Co., who died December 20th. Mr. Golden will also continue to manage the Palace temporarily, it was announced.

Tom Gilliam has been made sales manager of the RKO Chicago office succeeding to the office left vacant when Sam Gorelick was appointed branch manager several weeks ago.

Mr. Gilliam is well known in the Chicago territory having been associated with the First National and Warner offices there for 22 years. He was manager of the Warner Bros. Chicago office from January 1, 1935 until December 1, 1940, when he was transferred to the management of their Atlanta branch.

FROM READERS

DEFENSE STAMPS FOR CHANGE

DEAR MR. QUIGLEY:

I am sure you will be interested to hear of the campaign we are conducting to aid the sale of defense stamps for the U. S. government. Every cashier in our circuit has been supplied with defense stamps in various denominations. When a ticket is sold to a customer, the cashier suggests to the patron that they take their change in defense stamps instead of cash, as well as trying to sell them additional stamps. Cashiers are supplied with sufficient stamp books to give the customers in which they keep the stamps until they have a sufficient number to exchange for a bond. We have secured signs from the local post offices which are prominently displayed in the box-office advising that defense stamps are on sale.

I pass this idea on to you because of the excellent opportunity it affords every exhibitor in the U. S. to cooperate with the federal government in this time of national emergency.

The reaction from this campaign has been amazing. It has received wide-spread publicity in all the newspapers, which includes the sending of photographers from the Washington newspapers to the theatres to take pictures of people buying the stamps. We have also received a letter from Mr. Powel of the Treasury Department in Washington complimenting us on this campaign not only for the fact that it produces much needed revenue, but also because it increases the knowledge of defense stamps among the people the Treasury Department most desires to reach, particularly the young folks.

We are carrying this idea beyond the customer into the rank of employees by having each manager suggest to the employees that they buy defense stamps on payday with a small part of their salary. This idea is given strength by the fact that I make it a point to buy stamps myself from the various cashiers whenever at the theatres. In this way it helps to impress on the employees' minds that each and everyone of us must do our part to raise funds to carry on defense work.

I should like to request that your paper pass this on to every exhibitor in the U. S. and suggest that you, as well as all other trade papers, sponsor this idea as a national movement in the industry; to have every theatre in the country place defense stamps on sale immediately. In other words with the cooperation of every theatre, the people of America will know that defense stamps can be purchased not only at every post office throughout the U. S. but at every motion picture theatre as well.

I need not tell you of the additional revenue that can be secured by this means, but I might call your attention to the tremendous good will it will create for our industry as a whole. May I hear from you by return mail with your comments and suggestions?

Columbia Pictures announced Tuesday that Sam Glazer had been appointed general manager of Columbia Pictures of Canada, Ltd., replacing Dave Coplan, who resigned.

Mr. Glazer, formerly Canadian general manager for United Artists, leaves that company after 19 years. Prior to that he was connected with Regal Films.

Ben Kalmenson, general sales manager of Warners, has announced the appointment of two branch managers. Fred Greenberg, Indianapolis branch manager, has been shifted to Los Angeles, and Claude W. McKean has been named to replace Mr. Greenberg.

Critics Vote 'Kane' The Best of 1941

In their seventh annual balloting, the New York Film Critics Tuesday named the RKO-Welles "Citizen Kane" as the best picture of 1941. Gary Cooper was selected as the actor turning in the year's outstanding performance, in his role as Sergeant York, for Warners, and Joan Fontaine as the year's top actress, for her role in "Suspicion," for RKO.

John Ford, last year's winner, was selected as 1941's leading director, for his work on "How Green Was My Valley," for Fox, his last assignment before becoming a commander in the U. S. Navy. Orson Wells was runner-up for the best-direction award.

Mr. Wells, producer and star as well as director of the winning "Citizen Kane," will be awarded the Film Critics bronze plaque at a private dinner to be given by the reviewers on January 10th in New York. The annual open cocktail party which customarily marked the awarding has been cancelled this year because of the war.

Gary Cooper, Miss Fontaine and director Ford will be awarded parchment scrolls.

Votes for the year's "bests" were cast Monday afternoon in the private dining room of the New York Times, 18 critics being present, and two voting by proxy.

Neither a best-foreign-film nor a special-recognition award was offered this year, as in previous years.

The reviewers from New York newspapers who voted are: Cecelia Ager, PM; Howard Barnes, Herald-Tribune; William Boehnel, World-Telegram; Kate Cameron, Daily News; Herbert Cohn, Brooklyn Eagle, secretary; Bosley Crowther, Times; Wanda Hale, Daily News; Louise Levitas, PM; Dorothy Masters, Daily News; Leo Mishkin, Morning Telegraph, president; Rose Pelswick, Journal-American; David Platt, Daily Worker; Edgar Price, Citizen; Thomas M. Pryor, Times; Theodore Strauss, Times, and Irene Thirer, Post. Robert W. Dana of the Herald Tribune and Archer Winsten of the Post voted by proxy.

Schaefer Talks About Welles

George J. Schaefer, president of RKO-Radio, in accepting the "best-film-of-the-year" award to "Citizen Kane," by the Committee on Exceptional Photoplays of the National Board of Review, in New York, Monday, characterized the selection as a "justification" of his complete confidence in the talents of Orson Welles, producer, director and star of the picture.

Mr. Schaefer, speaking at the New York Museum of Modern Art, said, "the circumstances were unusual in the case of 'Citizen Kane.' They were of extreme unorthodoxy . . . You remember the tumult and the shouting, the predictions of failure, the alarms . . . I, as president of RKO Radio, had faith in Orson and decided to let him write his own ticket."

Ideal Branches Open

Ideal Pictures Corp., has established new branches in Memphis, Atlanta and Denver, with Stanley Nolan, E. C. Stevens and Howard Smith respectively in charge.

Glennan Joins Goldwyn

T. Keith Glennan, formerly manager of the Paramount studio, has been appointed manager of the Samuel Goldwyn Studios.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

By WILLIAM R. WEAVER
Hollywood Editor

ESTEEMED EDITOR:

By resigning the presidency of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the night before Christmas and without due process of formal announcement, a procedure at variance with Academy practice, Bette Davis provided the Town with substance for speculation between holidays.

Hollywood is not a place where an explanation so plain as Miss Davis' declaration of professional preoccupations and a state of health inimical to success in office begets unquestioning credence.

One line of gossip favored by cafe commentators led them to the conclusion that Miss Davis, having presided when decision to cancel the annual Academy banquet was taken, had resigned by way of clearing the desks for a decision to cancel the cancellation. A movement for reinstatement of the function has gained some momentum. It crashed print on Monday at the cost of imputing pique to Miss Davis.

Other analysts argued that the possibility of Miss Davis' winning of her third Academy Award this year for her performance in "The Little Foxes" had impelled her to forfeit a position of prominence in Academy affairs which might one day be cited by carpers and nonconformists as having influenced the voting in her behalf. There was some carping about her 1935 winning.

These are speculations.

The facts are that Miss Davis has resigned and the Academy board of governors will name a successor on January 7th. Vice-president Walter Wanger appears the likely choice. His discharge of the presidential duties last year, and notably his handling of the banquet, were widely approved.

Speaking of the Academy, of awards, banquets and so on, it is a circumstance for notation on a corner of your desk-pad that RKO Radio's Orson Welles item, "Citizen Kane," is in its twelfth week at the conveniently located Hawaii theatre on Hollywood Boulevard with no finishing date scheduled. On the contrary, steps are being taken, exploitation-wise, to sustain the already sensational record of grosses.

It is not generally remembered, perhaps, that David O. Selznick caused his "Rebecca" to enter upon a revival run at this same Hawaii theatre last year at the time when the 10,000 members of the Academy electorate were giving some thought to the matter of marking their ballots. It turned out to be, shall we say, a fortuitous booking.

"Citizen Kane" is eligible for nomination in all of the Academy award divisions and there is at least one sound reason, apart from its present continuous availability to the Academy electorate, for assuming that it will be named in quite a number of them.

"Citizen Kane" has fascinated the craftsmen of the motion picture community as no picture in years has done. Writers, actors, Exhibitors who voted John Payne a Star of Tomorrow in your mid-summer poll will be pleased to discover him become a star of today in "Remember the Day," a film of distinction in which he handles with the restraint of a veteran a casting which a shade of overacting could have wrecked with consequence fatal to the picture.

You'd be knowing that the Town is rife with "inside stories" of the naval activities off our coast.

The tales told are vivid, the telling is eloquent, but nobody really believes anything he doesn't read in the papers or hear on the newscasts.

For a town in which the word censorship has been a call to arms for ever so many years, Hollywood has distinguished itself in point of respect displayed for the institution as applied to the dissemination of intelligence pertaining to the goings-on off San Pedro, Malibu and points in all directions. In its response to the regulations which it considers warranted, the professional population draws clearly and underscores the fine line between fact and fiction which, it appears, everybody knew was there all the time.

Proof that Paramount's in earnest about creating new box-office magnets to relieve pressure upon the regulars is reflected in its featuring of Susan Hayward, William Holden, Martha O'Driscoll and Eddie Bracken, with that declared intention, in "Out of the Frying Pan," and proof that the studio intends making the venture sure-fire is the assignment of E. H. Griffith to direct the project.

Hollywood extras drew more pay in November than they did in the same month of 1940, but less than in October of this year. Amount in wages, overtime and adjustments for November, 1941, totaled $286,302, with the average daily wage set at $11.93.

Job placements for the month amounted to 21,467, of which 15,562 were in the $10.50 class. Some 1,063 answered calls as stand-ins at $8.25 and 554 were riders at $11.

Robert Foulk joins Paramount January 5th. He will be assistant to William Meiklejohn, supervisor of talent and casting. He had been dialogue director at Warners.

directors, producers, cameramen, soundmen, technicians in every department of studio activity have gone again and again to see the picture in exhibition, both on the occasion of its two-a-day engagement at the El Capitan theatre, where the professionals in the audience sometimes outnumbered the laymen, and in its present career at the Hawaii.

These people, curiously or not, see fewer pictures in a year than most. Probably none of them has missed at least one screening of "Citizen Kane." It is, on this somewhat mathematical ground, your correspondent's winter-book favorite for the Academy sweepstakes.

Goldenson Named To 'Dimes' Post; Local Boards Set

Nicholas M. Schenck, national chairman of the industry's March of Dimes campaign, last week announced the appointment of Leonard H. Goldenson as chairman of the Home Office Committee. ### Other Charity Actions

W. S. Van Dyke, film director, has given $10,000 to the Motion Picture Relief Fund as a Christmas present. The sum, the largest single contribution except the bequest of Douglas Fairbanks, probably will be used for a clinic at the Motion Picture Country Home, now under construction in California, it was said.

Edward Arnold, chairman of the industry's permanent charities committee, has set January 5th for a meeting of studio heads, guild representatives and others, to outline the industry's participation in the Red Cross emergency campaign.

Leo Trainor, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Allentown, Pa., was named head of the theatre division of the new Allentown Red Cross Drive for $100,000.

The Fishman Theatres report that the Rivoli in West Haven, Conn., and the Howard in New Haven, will have annual canned goods matinees in cooperation with the Salvation Army and the neighborhood church, respectively.

More than $1,200 was raised for the Norfolk, Va., Christmas Fund by the Theatre Managers Association in that city. They sponsored an entertainment program at the Norva theatre, consisting of the film "Accent on Love" and 20 acts of amateur vaudeville. Pierre Boulogne, manager of the theatre, was chairman of the show committee.

Axis Newsreels Serious Threat Says N. V. Ritchey

Barred by application of the American blacklist to film business in Latin-America, Italian and German film companies have turned to buying or leasing theatres for exclusive showings of their product, including the capable German newsreel, UFA, presenting a serious propaganda threat to hemisphere solidarity, in the opinion of Norton Ritchey, Monogram's foreign sales manager, who returned to the New York home office this week after four months' on business below the Rio Grande.

The blacklist, applied by the United States to enemy alien business firms in that territory, bars business men from trading with business concerns owned by those of enemy nationality or trading with them. This measure has barred German films (in the countries where they are still imported) from most screens. However, the Axis distributors have countered by hiring or buying, or erecting, their own theatres, which immediately become gathering places for the cultural message, and persons, hostile to this country.

Imports Cut

Mr. Ritchey said this was an alarming growth, and was certain to continue, except for one recent occurrence which may crush the tendency at its start. That occurrence is the cessation of Axis air service to Latin-America. The L. A. T. I. (Italian) air line has been forced out of business, and so have others, by lack of gasoline. The Standard Oil Company has stopped sales to such companies.

Previously, the Axis firms had shipped dupe negatives to Buenos Aires, where prints were made, and shipped to all countries permitting German films.

Anent the recent tendency towards exclusively German-picture theatres, the Monogram executive noted two in Buenos Aires; one in Santiago, Chile; and one in Rio de Janeiro.

Monogram has offered to play its part in national defense by furthering good-will approaches to South America, Mr. Ritchey asserted. Through him, it has told the film division of the Nelson Rockefeller cultural relations committee, that it stands ready to distribute special shorts now being made by the organized film industry, and the Government, to South Americans, through its franchise holders. Mr. Ritchey remarked that while the majors would probably distribute their own product through their exchanges, Monogram could distribute the Government short subjects, with a particular advantage in its "local" approach. The franchise holders are Latin-Americans, and, hence, in his opinion, are in a better position to distribute the films to proper outlets, and enlist local sympathies.

Mr. Ritchey made six changes in Monogram's Latin-America outlets. The new distributors are:

For Argentina, Uruguay, and Paraguay—Distribuidora Pan-America.

For Chile, and Bolivia—Alros Distributors.

For Peru—Amata Films.

For Salvador—Compania Nacional De Espectaculos.

For Cuba—Monogram Pictures de Cuba (opened December 22nd).

For Curacao, and Aruba—Marchena Moron and Company.

The Monogram Pictures de Cuba, while still a franchised company, is the first office under the company's name in Latin-America. In charge of the office is Candido Galdo.

RADIO MANUFACTURING IS TURNING EN BLOC TO WORK FOR ARMED FORCES

Production of Civilian Sets Expected to Be Cancelled Entirely After Six Months; Networks "Ready for Emergency"

Radio manufacturers are realigning their factory facilities for defense work and the production of sets for civilian consumption has or will be relegated to the background.

Present indications are that the Government will call upon the radio industry to begin production of approximately $1,000,000,000 worth of radio equipment for the armed services and home defense in the coming months, according to James T. Buckley, Philco president.

"Some idea of the magnitude of this task may be gained from the fact that the normal, peacetime output of the industry is only about $500,000,000," Mr. Buckley said. He added, "it is hoped and believed that civilian production can be maintained on a reduced basis."

Chicago Factory Typical

Typical of the extent to which radio set manufacturers are turning to war production is the "freezing" of all civilian set making by the Galvin company in Chicago, to facilitate armament production work and the company's engineers have shifted their activities so rapidly to arms work that the company will soon approach a point where it will be engaged nearly 100 per cent in that field.

Paul Galvin, president of the company and of the Radio Manufacturers association, described the emphasis on military production as typical of the "general evolution that is taking place in the radio industry."

E. F. McDonald, Jr., president of Zenith Radio Corporation, also in Chicago, said production on defense contracts was increasing at such a rapid rate that the company would be unable to meet the continually increasing demand for its regular line of receivers, and Majestic Radio and Television corporation said it would reduce civilian radio output and step up production of an army set known as the "walkie talkie." These are battery operated combination transmitters and receivers used in battle to maintain communication and eliminate the necessity of stringing telephone wires under enemy fire. The company is working on a 24 hour day, 7 days a week basis turning out these sets. E. A. Tracy, general manager, said he doubted that the public and the industry would notice the effect of civilian curtailment until "well into the second quarter of 1942."

Radio Chiefs Cite Radio's Position

Leaders of the radio broadcasting industry in America, through their annual year-end statements issued in New York during the week, pledged their support to the nation's war effort and cited the value of radio during a wartime emergency.

David Sarnoff, president of RCA, in his report, stressed the need for continuing musical, dramatic and comedy programs as "revitalizing tonics, needed more than ever in the busy days and nights of the war." The quick news reports from the Pacific and the eye-witness coverage of the war in Europe Mr. Sarnoff characterized as revealing "as never before the flexibility with which broadcasting performs its service to the people." He said there were 900 broadcasting stations and more than 55,000,000 radio sets in the country. "All radio is enrolled and lined up to insure final victory," pledged the RCA chief.

William S. Paley, president of the Columbia Broadcasting System, in his report, said radio was ready for war with "responsible judgment, trained personnel and worldwide facilities." He said that CBS would play its part through "news, through public discussion, through the presentation of historic events as they occur, and through appropriate dramatization," to maintain national morale, with two goals in mind, "first, the winning of the war, and second, the winning of the peace. The skills and techniques of radio broadcasting," he said, "are admirably adapted to promote and intensify nationwide devotion" to these goals.

"Equipped for Emergency"

Niles Trammell, president of the National Broadcasting Company, asserted in his report, "As part of the war machine, radio finds itself equipped for the emergency as a result of intensive study and expensive preparation over many previous months." He reported, "NBC alone gave the public almost 3,000 broadcasts from foreign cities during the year, and the tempo increased as the year drew to a close. Our news programs generally increased 65 per cent in volume during 1941, while our foreign staff was increased to more than 40 trained reporters."

"Today," said Mr. Trammell, "we find our radio marshalled for the war task which includes a comprehensive series of programs to help the Government sell bonds, keep the people advised on civil defense moves and the hundred and one other activities that go to carrying on a war and keeping morale of the country at a high pitch."

Declaring that in 1942 radio must concentrate on helping the United States win the war Alfred J. McCosker, chairman of the board of Mutual Broadcasting System, in his year-end statement, called upon the broadcasting industry to "sacrifice competition for cooperation," whenever necessary, for the best interests of the country. "In the year to come," he said, "we will be thinking not merely in terms of national defense. We will be concentrating instead on winning the war. It is to this end that radio must devote itself."

Broadcasters in continental United States, Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico have been asked by the Federal Communications Commission to report fully their foreign language programs for the month immediately prior to and immediately following the attack on Pearl Harbor.

Questionnaires have been sent out to the stations asking for this information, it was disclosed at the commission this week. Similar questionnaires were distributed about a year ago, with a view to determining the extent to which languages other than English were being used by American broadcasters.

The completed questionnaires are to be returned not later than January 15. If a station's report shows any significant differences in the languages used or the time devoted to foreign-language broadcasts before and after December 7, a complete explanation of those differences will be required.

This week also, FCC Chairman James L. Fly gave assurance that as war conditions imposed new restrictions on radio, the broadcasting industry would be called into consultation. He made his statement during a conference with John H. Ryan, assistant director of the office of censorship headed by Byron Price.

At the White House, President Roosevelt handed the industry an orchid for its voluntary censorship, which kept off the air all references to the fact that Britain Prime Minister Churchill was on his way to Washington, a matter generally known among news gatherers for both press and radio in the Capital. Making the presentation through Secretary Stephen T. Early, the President said it was belated but deserved.

MAJOR HEADS APPROVE 'UNITY' APPOINTMENTS

Distributor and Circuit Executives Accept Committee Posts for the Chicago Plan

Top major executives, not able to attend the Chicago "unity" meeting two weeks ago, but who previously agreed with its aims, and were subsequently appointed heads of subcommittees to execute the five points voted by the meeting, have expressed satisfaction over their appointments, to Jack Hirsch, Illinois Allied chief, and temporary chairman of the Motion Picture Industry Conference Committee, the all-industry group resultant from the meeting.

George J. Schafer, president of RKO, accepting chairmanship of the point Two subcommittee to coordinate policy and action in protecting the good-name of the whole industry, complimented Mr. Kirsch on "the smoothness of the procedure, and the general approach to the problem which means so much to all of us and our industry."

He also offered to serve on the subcommittee for points One and Four, coordination of policy and action in reference to taxation, and protection of the necessary supplies of the industry by securing proper priority ratings, respectively.

Jack Kirsch, head of Allied of Chicago and chairman of the national Allied unity committee, on Tuesday asked all subcommittee members to meet for further discussion at the Hotel Warwick, New York, on January 21st.

Others Accept

Spyros Skouras, National Theatres circuit head, accepted temporary chairmanship of the subcommittee on point One, adding he believed "that with the proper cooperation of the appointed committees" there would be "greater efficiency within the ranks of the industry, as well as the promotion of its best interests without."

Harry Kalmine, assistant general manager of the Warner circuit, said he would be "very happy to serve" as member of the subcommittee for point One.

It was expected Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity for MGM, would be given chairmanship of point Three's subcommittee, for planning of institutional advertising and other good-will activities.

Leonard Goldenson, accepting appointment to subcommittees on points One and Four, wrote that "you gentlemen are on the right track" and that he is "ready to help in every respect."

Colonel Henry Albert Cole, president of the National Allied States Association, Monday in Dallas charged that salesmen for the majors were "sabotaging" the decree. He asserted salesmen are evading decree provisions, or granting some of its "small gains," "most reluctantly."

Double bills during the war were assailed, Monday, in Hollywood, by the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California and Arizona. The unit also discussed relaxation of terms for exhibitors in war areas, whose business is suffering from blackouts and other restrictions.

Marking with pleasure the number of exhibitors—especially from smaller towns—that attended its first "Exhibitors' Forum" November 25th, in Columbus, Ohio, MGM is scheduling more.

Encouraged by the initial MGM exhibitor forum at Columbus, Ohio, November 25th, H. M. Richey, exhibitor contact, on Wednesday announced similar meetings to be held at the Peabody Hotel, Memphis, January 13th, and the Coronado Hotel, St. Louis, on January 15th. The meeting at Memphis will be under the joint supervision of MGM, R. X. Williams, president of the MPTOA of Arkansas, and M. A. Lightman, president of Malco Theatres.

John E. Flynn, central division sales manager, will be the guest of honor at the St. Louis luncheon. Burtus Bishop, Jr., Memphis district manager, and Harris P. Wolfberg, district manager in St. Louis, will attend their local meetings. Branch managers J. Frank Willingham, Memphis, and John X. Quinn, St. Louis, are in charge of arrangements. Mr. Richey will supervise.

At St. Louis Fred Wehrenberg, St. Louis MPTOA head, will open the meeting.

O B I T U A R I E S

Will Horwitz, Houston, Texas, Showman, Dies

Will Horwitz colorful theatreman of Houston, Tex., and an exhibitor since 1919, died Christmas morning at a hospital in that city following a brief illness. Death came shortly after the celebration of the 22nd Annual Christmas party which he sponsored for 15,000 poor children of Houston at the City Auditorium.

A native of Benton, Ark., where he was born on June 25th, 1886, Mr. Horwitz was educated in Michigan, taking his master of arts degree from the University of Michigan. He came to Houston 30 years ago and for a short time worked on the advertising staff of a local newspaper. In 1917, he opened a film exchange and after the war opened his first motion picture theatre, acquiring a lease on a former burlesque house, The Travis.

The Texan on Capitol Avenue was his second Houston theatre, a few years later opening the Ritz and in 1935 adding the Uptown adjoining the original Iris. During the depression, Mr. Horwitz opened an employment bureau and found jobs for 5,000 people and soon after started the Grub Stake to feed more than 111,000 hungry people in one year. He branched out into the radio field in 1932 when he inaugurated station XED at Reynosa, Mexico.

Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Gladys Horwitz and a daughter, Mrs. Fred Gibbons. Rites were conducted December 26th in Houston with burial in Beth Israel cemetery. E. V. Richards, head of Paramount-Saenger interests, New Orleans; R. J. O'Donnell, Interstate Circuit, Inc., Dallas, and other noted showmen of the south were active pallbearers. ### Blanche Bates Dies on Coast

Blanche Bates Creel, the actress-wife of George Creel and a favorite on Broadway at the turn of the century, died in her sleep Friday, December 26th, after she had entertained a few friends at an informal Christmas party at her home in San Francisco. She was 69 years old.

Miss Bates was a star on the legitimate stage for more than 30 years and reached the peak of her career at the Belasco theatre in New York in "The Girl of the Golden West." Her first major success in the theatre was as Cho-Sho-San in "Madame Butterfly," which played at the Herald Square. That was early in 1900, when New York's other interests included the Klondike gold rush.

She next played the part of Cigarette in "Under Two Flags" in 1901 and in 1902 was idolized as Yo-San in "Darling of the Gods." The next 15 years brought her many starring roles, and then, between 1918 and 1933, she retired.

However, Jed Harris pleaded with her to come out of her retirement to support his new young star Katherine Hepburn in "The Lake," and in 1934 she gave in. The critics said that the veteran Miss Bates, already in her sixties, stole the show from Miss Hepburn.

Miss Bates suffered a stroke about six months ago and in recent weeks was the victim of a second attack. Her husband, head of the Committee on Public Information during the first World War; a son, Bates Creel, and a daughter, Mrs. Leslie Lubliner, survive. Private funeral services were held.

British Institute Classifies Stars

After many months of work the report announced, the Selection Committee of the Library classified all known film stars into five categories, according to merit or desirability of preserving their films.

All films of the following will be preserved:

Theda Bara, the creator of the film vamp. Charlie Chaplin, for his achievements in the realm of pantomime and comedy.

Douglas Fairbanks, the outstanding exponent of action in films.

Greta Garbo, one of the screen's foremost dramatic actresses.

Mary Pickford, the prototype of the film heroine who achieved fame as "the world's sweetheart."

Rudolph Valentino, the first great screen lover.

Fred Astaire, for his contribution to dancing in films.

Spencer Tracy, the characteristic exponent of realism in film acting.

Tom Mix, the populariser of the cowboy hero.

Harold Lloyd, the hero of comedy of danger and suspense.

Marie Dressler, one of the screen's greatest actresses of character and humorous roles.

Shirley Temple, the outstanding example of the child star.

A new block of twelve vaults specially designed for film preservation has been constructed at the Institute's property at Aston Clinton. In addition to the examples of current feature films and old films which are acquired, both the Ministry of Information and the British Council are sending for preservation copies of all their films including British News, a weekly news reel composed of the more important items of news selected from the reels of all the five companies. Both the Preservation Section and the Loan Section received welcome additions from a purchase of a large number of 16 mm copies of important Russian films. These were bought in time to be included in the new Catalogue of the Loan Section which was published at the end of June, 1941.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Associated British Film Dist.

IT'S IN THE AIR: George Formby, Polly Ward—They spot-booked this picture to me as a trial to see what Formby would do in this situation, and then sent me the worst print I have ever been asked to impose upon the public. The picture is slap-stick which seemed to please, but the print was embarrassing. Running time, 87 minutes. Played December 11-13.—Delmar C. Fox, Fox Theatre, Pincher Creek, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

Columbia

ESCAPE TO GLORY: Pat O'Brien, Constance Bennett—This proved satisfactory as a filler with the improved title of "Submarine Zone." Running time, 73 minutes. Played December 15-17.—Delmar C. Fox, Fox Theatre, Pincher Creek, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

TIME OUT FOR RHYTHM: Ann Miller, Rudy Vallee, Rosemary Lane, Allen Jenkins—Just got by! And it did have some good entertainment. No particular draw here. Played December 10-11.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BIG STORE, THE: Marx Brothers, Tony Martin—The Marx Brothers are always good for the theatre business and always will be. To us they are perhaps one of the most modern and brilliant teams producing comedy today. This, the first of their 'farewell pictures' is well organized comedy and should do business on anybody's screen. Running time, 83 minutes.—Simon Galitzki, Coed Theatre, Topeka, Kan. General patronage.

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE: Spencer Tracy, Ingrid Bergman, Lana Turner—Too long, but very well done and photographed. I am not in favor of remakes and comments on the picture were from bad to good. As far as the box office is concerned, it was only fair. Ingrid Bergman is excellent in her difficult part. Running time, 122 minutes. Played December 17-18.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

DR. KILDAIRE'S WEDDING DAY: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day—What with the fear of blackouts and the prevailing bad weather, we recorded our lowest Sunday-Monday gross of 1941. Too many people had read that Laraine Day was to be liquidated. Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 14-15.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

GET-AWAY, THE: Robert Sterling, Charles Winninger, Donna Reed—This lad, Eddie Buzzell, is really a good director. Here is a surprise "B" class picture that puts Metro in top place here this week, as far as best picture is concerned. A fast action picture of the FBI and plenty of good romance. Anybody will enjoy this. Running time, 89 minutes. Played December 12-13.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

LADY BE GOOD: Eleanor Powell, Ann Sothern, Robert Young, Lionel Barrymore—Excellent. Metro's best in some time. A little long in running time, but nevertheless, it is good. Berry Brothers will give you a nice surprise. Good music and dialogue throughout picture. Take particular notice of photography, especially throughout the dance numbers. Running time, 111 minutes. Played November 30-December 2.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

LIFE BEGINS FOR ANDY HARDY: Lewis Stone, Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Ann Rutherford—Our gross on this feature was less than any of the series, due in part to the prevailing excitement over Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor. Too much publicity regarding growing up of Rooney and Garland. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 7-8.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

MEN OF BOYS TOWN: Spencer Tracy, Mickey Rooney—I guess this is about "tops" in screen entertainment and box office results. If anyone hasn't yet played it, it would pay to try and pick it up. It has everything for everybody. You can't go wrong

This is the original exhibitors' reports department, established October 14, 1916. In it the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box-office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address your reports to—

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD

with this one. Running time, 100 minutes.—J. K. Burgess, Iris Theatre, Velva, N. D. General patronage.

MORTAL STORM, THE: Margaret Sullivan, James Stewart, Robert Young—Wonderful picture for any situation. Stars' performances all excellent. Story, sound and photography tops. Old, but still good and print received here was excellent. Played December 12-13.—Walter R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Jeanette MacDonald, Brian Aherne, Gene Raymond—In its return with a different cast, it was not any too successful at the box office. It is still the artistic production that it was on the former run. But Jeanette MacDonald (who from the fact that it was, to some extent, set to music, had to be used) as an actress, is no Norma Shearer.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

THEY MET IN BOMBAY: Clark Gable, Rosalind Russell, Peter Lorre—Clarence Brown's production slow, dry, too much dialogue, but even at that it was interesting. Have doubts as to whether it will stand up three days. Wish Gable would make another "Boom Town." Running time, 93 minutes. Played December 7-9.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

Paramount

ALOMA OF THE SOUTH SEAS: Dorothy Lamour, Jon Hall, Lynne Overman—Another remarkable picture from Paramount. Scenes well directed and photographed in color. Volcano scenes are something you will remember for some time to come. Running time, 77 minutes. Played December 17-18.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

CAUGHT IN THE DRAFT: Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour—If you like Bob Hope, and many people do, you will enjoy this picture. The plot is weak, the gags and laughs are many. Perhaps this is as much as one should expect; no more is needed. Hope plays stooge in parts of this picture, and to his advantage. Ours is a Hope fan community which is responsible, in a measure, for the business here. Business fair. Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 14-16.—Simon Galitzki, Coed Theatre, Topeka, Kan. General patronage.

HIDDEN GOLD: William Boyd, Russell Hayden—The average "Hopalong Cassidy" western. Running time, 61 minutes. Played December 12-13.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

ONE NIGHT IN LISBON: Fred MacMurray, Madeleine Carroll, Patricia Morison—Just why our patrons don't crowd our theatre to see the beautiful Madeleine Carroll and the very likeable Fred MacMurray present a swell story in a grand manner is more than we can figure. Very poor box office. Running time, 95 minutes. Played December 14-15.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS, THE: John Wayne, Betty Field, Harry Carey—Paramount brings you Harold Bell Wright's masterpiece to the screen in glorious color. The most beautiful color and one of the best directed and photographed pictures of the year. Long may Harry Carey be remembered as he steps forth in this picture to give you his greatest role as the kind shepherd of the hills. Paramount deserved all credit that can be bestowed upon them for this grand picture. No finer story has been brought to you from the pages of a book. No finer work by a cast of players or technical staff can be found on the modern screens today. No outdoor scenes have been filmed in such gorgeous colors. Truly a blue ribbon picture if there ever was one. Running time, 98 minutes. Played December 14-16.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

WIDE OPEN TOWN: William Boyd, Russell Hayden, Andy Clyde—Of course, it's only a shootin', tootin' western with an implausible story, but who cares when it gets them in. We can't understand it. Running time, 78 minutes. Played December 12-13.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Producers Releasing

PAPER BULLETS: Joan Woodbury, Jack La Rue—Very good story, well acted. However, we must have a definite star value to draw them in. Played December 17-18.—E. L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

Republic

RIDE, TENDERFOOT, RIDE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, June Storey, Mary Lee—One of the best Autry's played yet. Bucked a basketball game, Christmas shopping and the war. Yet one of the best week-ends to date. Played December 19-20.—E. L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

TUXEDO JUNCTION: Weaver Brothers and Elvira—This is made to order for small town audiences and will please 100 per cent. Play it quick and advertise it plenty. You won't be disappointed, nor will your customers. Running time, 71 minutes. Played December 14-15.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

CITIZEN KANE: Orson Welles—Stay away from this. A nightmare. Will drive 'em out of your theatre. It may be a classic, but it's plumb "nuts" to your show-going public. Some swell acting and production wasted. Way too extreme. Running time, 120 minutes.—J. K. Burgess, Iris Theatre, Velva, N. D. General patronage.

FATHER TAKES A WIFE: Adolphe Menjou, Gloria Swanson—Just fair. If the rest of RKO's first block of five doesn't improve, my advice to anyone is leave them alone. This picture is supposed to make laughter in the house. But you don't hear much.—J. K. Burgess, Iris Theatre, Velva, N. D. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CHARLEY'S AUNT: Jack Benny, Kay Francis, James Ellison—Personally, I thought it was terrible. Yet it did a great deal over average business. Played December 21-22.—E. L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

SLEEPERS WEST: Lloyd Nolan, Lynn Bari, Mary Beth Hughes—Good average detective program picture in which the continuity holds good to the very end. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 17-18.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SMALL TOWN DEB: Jane Withers—A very good picture from this popular young star. When she impersonated Carmen Miranda and played the trap drums, the audience applauded. I played it Friday-Saturday but think now I should have played it on Sunday. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 19-20.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

WEEK-END IN HAVANA: Alice Faye, Carmen Miranda, John Payne, Cesar Romero—This is a satisfactory musical, the exotic Miranda carrying the punch of the picture, aided by John Payne as the bashful and not so dumb lover. Business off, no doubt due to the war. Whether it will level out later, gives pause for thought. It is yet too early in the crisis to arrive at any conclusions.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

United Artists

SO ENDS OUR NIGHT: Frederic March, Margaret Sullivan, Frances Dee, Glenn Ford—Excellent production. Played late, but that doesn't mean a thing on pictures like this. Held audience completely from title to end. Played December 19-20.—Walter R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

THAT HAMILTON WOMAN!: Vivien Leigh, Laurence Olivier—Here is a show worth playing in any spot. We sure packed them in and they went away pleased. Don't pass it up. Running time, 128 minutes. Played December 8-10.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

TOPPER RETURNS: Joan Blondell, Roland Young, Carole Landis—This is the baby I was nursing when the war broke. A handful of customers came each night and laughed until they were black in the face; the rest stayed home by their radios and cussed with the same result. I can guess who slept the more peaceful each night. But you tell 'em. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 8-10.—Delmar C. Fox, Fox Theatre, Pincher Creek, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

APPOINTMENT FOR LOVE: Margaret Sullivan, Charles Boyer—A Sunday date ruined by one word. "Love" in a title really kills a picture. No business. A very good picture, though. Played December 14-15.—E. L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

BLACK DIAMONDS: Richard Arlen, Andy Devine—Very good for week-end to be used on double bill. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 4-6.—Fred Gasha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

MODEL WIFE: Joan Blondell, Dick Powell, Charlie Ruggles—This picture will attract business in primarily urban areas. Much of the material is taken from actual life. The younger set will find the plot more than a coincidence; many will talk about this picture (for the better) after they leave the theatre. Play it if you haven't. Business fair. Running time, 74 minutes. Played December 12-13.—Simon Galitzki, Coed Theatre, Topeka, Kan. General patronage.

RIO: Basil Rathbone, Victor McLaglen, Sigrid Gurie, Robert Cummings—A fairly good show that was a flop at the box office. Running time, 77 minutes. Played December 15-17.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

WHEN THE DALTONS RODE: Randolph Scott, Kay Francis, Brian Donlevy—Real good action picture that did some business with bad winter roads. Enjoyed by all who saw it. Played December 5-6.—Walter R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner Bros.-First National

BAD MEN OF MISSOURI: Dennis Morgan, Jane Wyman, Wayne Morris, Arthur Kennedy—It would have been far cheaper for us to have paid for this piece of cheese and left it to finish putrefying on the shelf. Running time, 74 minutes. Played December 10-11.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR (REISSUE): James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Margaret Lindsay—Warner Bros. advertised this as being timely. Outmoded planes, queer-looking, old-fashioned feminine costumes and a worn out print were not mentioned in the "advance publicity." We showed it one night to a handful of kids and failed to take in enough to pay the express charges back to the exchange. Played December 17-18.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

NINE LIVES ARE NOT ENOUGH: Ronald Reagan, Joan Perry, James Gleason—Another program picture to fill a date. It seems to me that the programmers this season are the weakest so far of any that we can recall. They are sandwiched in between this Block of Five mess, and you have to take them because in that particular block, there are some that you want. In our situation, we have to date, run more pictures that formerly would have been cancelled, than any season since we have been in business.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ONE FOOT IN HEAVEN: Frederic March, Martha Scott—Most unusual, this picture of the trials and tribulations of the small town minister. It is very good of its type. Outstanding portrayals by all the principals. Definitely, the war is affecting business. I have one criticism to make and that is technical. Vitagraph should subdue the background music more than they did in this one. This way of supporting the dialogue has its place, but it should not intrude as it did in this picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

OUT OF THE FOG: Ida Lupino, John Garfield, Thomas Mitchell—A good picture. Some liked it, some did not, but nevertheless, it was good. Excellent work by James Wong Howe. His photography really made the picture. Running time, 86 minutes. Played December 5-6.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

SINGAPORE WOMAN: Brenda Marshall, David Bruce, Virginia Field—Weak picture, but held interest throughout. Running time, 64 minutes. Played December 10-11.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

THEY DRIVE BY NIGHT: George Raft, Ann Sheridan, Ida Lupino, Humphrey Bogart—Played this one very late, but it's one of those that never grows old for small towns. Ida Lupino's performance steals the show. Roads blocked for rural patrons, but those who saw it well pleased. Played November 28-29.—Walter R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

THIEVES FALL OUT: Eddie Albert, Joan Leslie—I picked up this old one to fill a date and while it pleased those who came, it did not draw. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 16.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

HEDDA HOPPER'S HOLLYWOOD: No. 2—Interesting one reeler showing the stars at work and play. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT NEWS: Better every week. My favorite of all newsreels.—Walter R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

POPULAR SCIENCE: No. 1—A good addition to a popular series. Running time, 10 minutes.—Delmar C. Fox, Fox Theatre, Pincher Creek, Alberta, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

WAR CUTS MEXICAN FILM GROSSES 25%

Exhibitors Concerned Over Pick- ing Proper Films for War-time; Labor Difficulties Eliminated

by LUIS CELIS

in Mexico City

The new turn the war has taken, with the advent into the conflict of the United States and Japan, as well as several Latin American countries and Mexico's declaration of armed neutrality, has not hit the Mexican motion picture industry very hard, as yet, although it has given film executives some anxious moments. During the eventful week of December 7th, the theatres' business decreased about 25 per cent.

Theatre patrons here in Mexico are now rather stolid. There is no outward demonstration of any kind during the exhibition of news reels and pictures that depict anything about war. Nevertheless, a decided undertone of sympathy with the United States in the conflict is noticeable, that in accordance with the national policy of cooperating to the fullest extent with Washington.

Exhibitors, meanwhile, have become rather uneasy since they feel that the war will curtail their working materials from the United States, their only supply base. There is some alarm at the prospect that production will have to be sharply cut, though it is not thought that the whole business will be stopped, at least for some little time yet.

Film labor in Mexico was among the first to pledge loyalty to the government in this emergency. The general opinion is that work difficulties in the entire industry has been blacked out as part of this pledge, so as to spare the government troubles and to help the business to at least carry on.

Gross Increases

There are two sides to the general industry business picture in 1941. It was a good year, though there was a big slump in the fall due to labor troubles of the eight major American companies, a circumstance that cut business for the exhibitors owing to the shortage of first class films. The theatres report a bigger gross in 1941 but a smaller net, because of high taxes and operating costs.

The traditional Mexican saying, "Quien sabe" ("Who can tell?") applies most aptly to the Mexican business in 1942.

As a war emergency, Mexico has clamped down hard on radio with the cancellation of all amateurs' sending and receiving permits and stricter regulation of broadcasts by the 106 active commercial and other stations in the country. Government inspectors have rigid orders to censor even more the news phases of the stations' programs and to ban the transmission of any information that is not verified or at least is sponsored by the press associations that the Mexican government approves for Mexico. The stations are altogether forbidden to broadcast news "flashes."

This action has been taken, the government explained, to prevent undue alarm about the war and its progress being broadcast in Mexico and to avoid distressing the public. The new rules, asserted the government, are making it impossible for any Japanese, Nazist or Fascist propaganda to be broadcast.

Six Argentinian films are featuring the current programs at three of the leading first run theatres here, the Cine Teatro Alameda, the Cine Iris, and the Cine Magerit. Each theatre is exhibiting two of these pictures. These are the first of the 34 Argentinian films that will be shown in Mexico during the winter. The six now being exhibited are of Argentina Sono Film.

Salvador Carrillo was re-elected president, and Enrique H. Mayorga secretary general, of the National Cinematographic Workers Union for another two years at the national convention held in Torreon, a central industrial town. Both officials were also tendered a vote of confidence by the convention. Sr. Mayorga has assumed until 1943 the positions of publicity and organization secretaries of the Union.

Charged with defrauding the Mexican government by distributing in Honduras without permission and for their own profit the government's documentary film, "Gigantes de Piedra" ("Stone Giants"), produced by the Ministry of Agriculture, depicting Mexico's archaeological wonders, Manuel Rojo Castillo and Jose Castrejon Vicario, president and manager, respectively, of Publicidad Cientifica, S. A., local advertising agency and film exchange, are under arrest here.

The men describe themselves as being "distributors and exhibitors of international documentary pictures." It is said they obtained permission to exhibit "Giants" exclusively in Mexico and on a non-profit basis, in connection with screenings for exhibitors of commercials they handle. The government says that the pair after a tour of South and Central America exhibiting Mexican commercials that was a dismal failure, sought to make money by publicly screening "Giants" in Honduras. They are said to have made large profits with exhibitions of the picture in leading hotels of Honduran cities and returned to Mexico by plane instead of the much cheaper boat. They were arrested as they left their respective homes here.

The government has taken action to recover "Giants" which is still in Honduras.

Two New Film Companies

Spiess of New York as principals; and to Erin Theatre, Inc., Syracuse, with $20,000 capital stock, and principals of which are Walter Roberts, Meyer Golding and Isaac Katzowitz of Syracuse.

RKO Radio

MARCH OF TIME, No. 3: "Sailors with Wings"—This was particularly timely for a very attentive and rather critical audience. Consequently, some of the melodramatic commentary sounded a bit hollow. # MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

*An international association of showmen meeting weekly
in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress*

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor

GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

NINE YEARS

As this issue goes to press, the 1942 Quigley Awards are on their way.

The starting gun sounded on January 1st. Now, again, theatremen from everywhere, in every kind of situation, will be striving, vying with each other for the recognition to be gained through accomplishments in these unique theatremen's competitions. Big city, small town, first run and subsequent. They all start from scratch. It's that kind of a deal, a deal the industry has approved.

Eight years of success mark the end of the old year. And now the ninth takes off with an amazing tradition behind it, with an especial job to do in the new year set-up.

The Awards will contribute their expected part in stimulating rare showmanship. The Awards will continue to encourage showmen in this year of grace when showmanship must speak as loudly as the nation's voice.

WHAT TO DO ABOUT IT

Of course, the biggest job the theatreman has to do in the advancement of this nation's war effort is the maintaining of the public morale. This is quickly emphasized by the "keep calm and relax" copy thrown into print a few days back, some of which has been reproduced in these pages, and more of which will be. It also has to do with the colorful showmanship exhibited widely to keep the folks thinking about something else.

Taking it on as part of the job, various of the members have arranged to keep patrons informed of the latest flashes from the front. Thus, the Schiners are rebroadcasting early evening newscasts. And currently Arnold Stoltz has fixed up a small screen alongside the proscenium to flash news favorable to our forces. On the other side of it, there are theatres carefully refraining from showing any war news at all, on the assumption that our job is to entertain, to try, if possible even for a few short hours, to blot out the wrackings and excitements of battle. The question of whether or not to bring the war into the theatre is no new one. It arose a few years back when there was a lot of "yea" and "nay" from members on the course to pursue. In the end, as on any other controversial subject having to do with operation, the solution sort of drifted off into thin air with one individual answer credited for being as about as sound as the next.

"The national organization among theatremen being built up by Nicholas M. Schenck, as national chairman for the motion picture industry's infantile paralysis drive, will provide a handy, active mechanism by which the country's movie theatres can cooperate in many war drives that are sure to come now that the nation is embattled."

The above is a statement by C. C. Moskowitz, March of Dimes co-chairman, and the italics are ours. They are emphasized since the theatremen of America, principally Round Tablers, will be called upon to lend their aid, again and again, in the advancement of our cause. Thus, by close and enthusiastic cooperation with the March of Dimes project, an admirable pattern can be traced for future guidance.

If anything, the what-to-do today is more searching. That this nation is involved in war presents another side previously unfaced. Thus, it becomes the duty of your Round Table to explore the horizon with more concentration in an endeavor to guide those of the members whose decisions in the matter are yet to be determined, principally by the wishes of their patrons.

In keeping with which, the membership is called upon again to set forth opinions upon so vital a problem, to give reasons on one side or another to clear up whatever clouds of uncertainty exist. This also is boxoffice. It is to be dealt with as any other procedure bearing heavily upon the part the theatre is destined to play in keeping American morale at stratosphere-height where it belongs.

A-Mike Vogel

To the advance holiday lobby at Loew's Granada, Cleveland, for "Shadow of the Thin Man", Carl Rogers injected added atmosphere with lifesize star cutouts, plus the dog studying the poster addressed to "Bill and Myra".

Made of plywood and plaster-of-Paris was the 46-inch-long Christmas setpiece used by Mrs. B. W. Dickinson at the Hamlet, Hamlet, N. C. Radio played hymns at breaks.

To sell his New Year's Eve show at Loew's State, in Memphis, Maurice Druker's lobby featured cutout of 1942 babe heralding Loew's "All Out" program.

ROUND TABLE IN PICTURES

Patrons at Warner's Avon, Utica, N. Y., are kept informed of favorable war news via small screen at side of proscenium and identified by Arnold Stoltz with the label of "Victory Bulletins".

Circus lobby display was created by Ben Domingo ahead of "Dumbo" at the Keith Memorial, in Boston. Seated atop figure of the character was Timothy Mouse proffering peanuts.

1942 QUIGLEY AWARDS WIN FURTHER APPROVAL

New Judging Committee Members and Theatre Men Continue to Voice Endorsement; Expect Banner Competitions

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Long anticipated, warmly received, the Quigley Awards for 1942 are well on their way.

Though the New Year Competitions are but a few days old, there are expressions from all over that the starting date of January 1st has seen an immediate planning of exploitation entries for the first "Fortnight" period, a barrage of gilt-edged, boxoffice showmanship to stress that 1942 will indeed be the showman's biggest year.

On following pages are further Awards expressions from industry heads who have accepted appointment to the 1942 Judging Committee. Yet to come, and as important, are statements from the men in the field on what the Awards mean to the industry and what they mean to the boys themselves. In addition, opinion is unanimous that the form and procedure of the Competitions meet with the full approval of the membership.

Thus, rules and regulations for the 1942 Awards will be the same as have previously obtained. To refresh the "regulars", to familiarize the newcomers with what, and what's to do, the detailed rules are set down on this page.

To be noted, and most important, is that the Awards are not given for full campaigns. It is not necessary to compile the entire campaign to win "Fortnight" and "Quarter-Master" recognition. As usual, the "meat" of the campaign will determine the voting of the judges, since it is recognized that one single promotion—the putting over of one idea—often does the big job of bringing in the grosses in selling an individual program.

That "meat" may be most anything in advertising, exploitation or publicity that carries the load. It might be a window display, a newspaper contest, a front-page story, or a series of stories, an ad or a series of ads, a street stunt or lobby display. If managers prefer to report full campaigns, it is requested that the Awards ideas be properly designated.

Awards recognition is not restricted to pictures. Institutional ideas are also eligible, as are any cooperations with war defense measures that may be judged to have any bearing on the boxoffice.

The Awards Rulings

The Quigley Awards are now voted for single ideas or promotions. Complete campaigns are not required for consideration.

The 1942 Quigley Awards begin on January first. They are divided into four Quarter periods.

Each Quarter is divided into two-week preliminary periods—the "Fortnights."

Entrants will forward their material for preliminary consideration in the Fortnight periods. Winners will be designated for Fortnight Appointments.

Entrants most often represented by Appointments during the Fortnight periods of each Quarter will receive first consideration for the Quarter Awards—the "Quarter-Master" Appointments.

In addition to exploitation on pictures—feature, short, serial, etc.—entries may be on goodwill or other institutional ideas. Military service or other patriotic promotions are definitely eligible, as are stage shows, amateur presentations, etc.

A single idea may be confined to a window, contest, newspaper or program publicity, street stunt, lobby display, ad or ad series, newspaper section, radio tie-in, etc.

A single promotion may include more than one slant, providing all slants relate to the original idea. Thus, a single contest promotion may be carried in newspapers, on the radio, in windows, ads, lobby, etc.

There are no deadlines. Entries will be considered during the Fortnight periods in which they are received.

There are no classifications of population or situation. Every entrant starts from scratch—circuit or independent, first-run or subsequent, downtown or neighborhood, big city or small town.

More than one idea or promotion may be included in one entry in any one Fortnight, but the Fortnight Appointment will be voted for the best single idea or promotion, as designated by the entrant.

Where entrants choose to submit a complete campaign, the single idea or promotion for Awards consideration must be marked accordingly.

No fancy entries are necessary. Costly and time-using "Gingerbread" decorations are not encouraged. Showmanship only counts.

Evidence proving authenticity of each entry must be submitted, such as photos, tear sheets, programs, heralds, ads, letters, etc.

Entries must be forwarded as soon as possible after exploitation is completed. Address all entries to:

Quigley Awards Committee,
Managers Round Table

Let it also be kept in mind that the "Quarter-Master" Awards will be voted among theatre men most often represented in the "Fortnight" listings. In short, the Judges will give the most consideration to those entrants who pile up the most material for judging in the Quarters.

This is emphasized especially for managers who in 1941 sent along one entry during a Quarter and then inquired why they did not land among the "Quarter-Master" winners. Since there are at least six two-week Fortnight periods in each Quarter, it is not too much to expect that theatre men interested in competing will keep sending in material, if not for every Fortnight, then at least for a sufficient number of Fortnights to make a proper showing in the Quarter-Master voting. That is required if only in justice to the great number of entrants who do observe the rulings and expect that others will do likewise.

Further acceptances from judges include Spyros P. Skouras, W. F. Rodgers, M. A. Lightman, Wm. K. Jenkins, John Nolan, Arthur W. Kelly, John H. Harris, L. J. Halper, W. A. Finney, Nat Holt, Fred C. Souttar, Carter Barron, Milton Silver.

JUDGES VOICE FURTHER PRAISES

TED SCHLANGER

Zone Manager

Warner Bros. Circuit, Philadelphia

It will be a pleasure for me to again join in cooperating with you as one of the judges for the 1942 judging committee of the Quigley Awards.

As I have written you several times, and have told you when I saw you, in my opinion the work that this plan is doing for the industry is of great importance.

The managers in the Philadelphia Warner Zone are constantly vying with each other for the honors bestowed by Quigley Publications and there is never an Annual Meeting held in this territory that we do not have occasion to refer to those men who have so distinguished themselves by winning these awards. It is my belief that this medium of competition does much to contribute to the success of stimulating widespread enthusiasm in the all important function of selling our shows.

You are to be congratulated on the great work that you are doing in constantly keeping the efforts of the men in the field in the spotlight, and I want to compliment you and the MOTION PICTURE HERALD on the very wise decision to continue the Quigley Awards for 1942.

S. BARRET McCORMICK

I consider it an honor to again be asked by you to be a judge on the Quigley Awards Committee.

HERMAN ROBBINS

National Screen Service Corp.

I will very gladly serve again in any manner you desire on your 1942 Judging Committee.

As you know, I have always had a special particular interest in the Quigley Awards and the prize-winners.

I have always felt that the Quigley Awards Campaign had definite beneficial effects on the entire industry and in particular in getting all of the men throughout the country on their toes and stimulating fine exploitation ideas thereby.

ALEC MOSS

Advertising Manager

Paramount Pictures, Inc.

Glad to serve on your 1942 Judging Committee. The Quigley Award acts as a stimulus to a group of ambitious managers, who turn loose on campaigns in order to gain this coveted recognition. We know this through actual experience and contact with such managers.

Encourage more of 'em to go to town on pictures! The same names keep cropping up again and again. What's wrong with the thousands upon thousands of other managers? Don't they ever want to step out and do things!

Guess it takes a lot of dripping water to wear away stone!

I will be glad to be of whatever service I can to you in connection with the Quigley Awards for 1941.

The Quigley Awards have been of much interest to our entire organization and the results of the awards are very closely watched. We have encouraged our managers to use every effort in participating in the annual contest.

HARRY L. ROYSTER

I am indeed pleased to accept your invitation to serve on the Judging Committee for 1942.

The Quigley Awards are a very definite factor in keeping showmanship alive, the most important adjunct to better grosses in the industry, through recognition of managers and the healthy competition resulting.

HARRY MANDEL

CALL AWARDS BOXOFFICE BUILDER

"A Stimulus"

I accept with pleasure your kind invitation to serve upon the 1942 Judging Committee for the Quigley Awards.

The Quigley Awards in recognizing and rewarding outstanding showmanship has given a stimulus to the Industry which has brought about the increasing excellence of promotion and the completer coverage of product.

Kindest personal regards.

—SPYROS SKOURAS, *President,
National Theatres Amusement Co.*

MORT BLUMENSTOCK

Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.*

Certainly I shall be happy to judge for 1942, and now more than ever, the Round Table is the means of developing greater grosses and better management. Good luck!

EDWARD M. FAY

*President, Fay's Theatres
Providence, R. I.*

Your note received in regard to my serving on the 1942 Judging Committee of the Quigley Awards.

I shall be happy to do so as I have been convinced many years that the Quigley Awards is a stimulating prize which has an inspiring influence on theatre managers across the country, especially young men who are ambitious to make a name for themselves. I believe it does much to induce sincere effort, which produces better grosses and at the same time gives recognition to deserving ability.

CHARLES RAYMOND

*Division Manager, Loew's Theatres
Cleveland, Ohio*

Once more I consider it an honor to have the privilege of serving on your judging Committee and as another year rolls by, I am convinced more than ever that the Quigley Awards are an inspiration to all showmen to give their best.

MONROE GREENTHAL

*Director Advertising and Publicity
United Artists Corp.*

I will be very happy to serve as one of the Judges for the 1942 Quigley Awards.

Showmanship has never been more vitally needed in the industry than now. The terms of percentage contracts for the exhibition of motion pictures act as a frame-work which determines the allocation of grosses, but showmanship is the effort that brings in the money to the box office and that makes possible grosses large enough to adequately compensate both exhibitor and distributor.

The sales contract is important, but the gross at the box office is the motivation that makes the wheels go around. That is why Quigley Awards, which inspire great selling campaigns, are the foundation of the future success of the business efforts of both exhibitor and distributor.

JOHN H. HARRIS

*General Manager, Harris Amusement Companies
Pittsburgh, Pa.*

I will be most happy to serve on the committee for the 1942 judging.

May I congratulate you on your 9th anniversary of these famous Quigley Awards. There is no question but that this has been most helpful in spurring on the managers, the actual showmen, to get the best there is out of pictures. I believe it most important. I congratulate you and am hopeful it continues for many, many more years.

M. A. SILVER

*Zone Manager, Warner Bros. Circuit
Pittsburgh, Pa.*

I shall be delighted to serve as a member of the 1942 Committee for the Quigley Awards.

I believe the Quigley Awards serve a very important function by stimulating and encouraging individual activity and ingenuity on the part of the manager. Especially now, under present conditions, is selling and exploitation an essential for proper theatre management and I know of no single force in the industry that contributes more than the Quigley Awards.

HARRY SHAW

*Division Manager
Loew's Poli-New England Theatres*

Thanks for your kind letter about our cooperation on the 1942 Quigley Awards and I assure you that it is with extreme pleasure that I accept the nomination to serve as one of the judges for next year.

This I can truthfully say, that true and tried showmen should deem it a pleasure to submit their campaigns to the Quigley Awards committee, because it is an incentive and shows that their heart and soul is in show business to make it the great industry that it is.

IRVING LESSER

*Managing Director
Roxy Theatre, New York City*

I am happy to serve as a judge on the 1942 Judging Committee in the Quigley Awards.

I cannot portray in words the amount of good I have gotten as a result of the many years I have been privileged to serve on these committees. Frankly, many a valuable idea has been contributed to even a leading theatre like this, and more importantly it has had me on my toes in appreciating the value of exploitation, and has helped to stimulate our grosses.

W. R. FERGUSON

*Director of Exploitation
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures*

You can always count on my cooperation to further the valuable work of the Quigley Awards and consider it an honor to serve on the 1942 Judging Committee.

At the recent Exhibitors Forum held in Columbus I emphasized to all exhibitors present the importance of the exploitation suggestions contained in trade papers—especially those of the Managers' Round Table and the great work it accomplished.

I want to take this opportunity of thanking you for appointing me to serve as one of the judges on the 1942 Quigley Judging Committee.

I believe that this is one of the finest stimulants for managers existing in our industry and one that brings recognition to individuals who would otherwise receive no national notation of any kind.

DAVE WALLERSTEIN

*District Manager, Balaban & Katz Theatres
Chicago, Ill.*

I shall be very happy to serve on the Judging Committee for the 1942 Quigley Awards.

These awards are of great value in stimulating the managers in the field and giving recognition to their efforts. They also serve as a medium of exchange of ideas, which helps us all.

Thanks for your invitation to serve on the 1942 Judging Committee.

I have always felt that the Quigley awards have served as a definite incentive for the men in the field—to bring out their ingenuity and showman-like efforts.

RECORD NUMBER TO SERVE IN 1942

WILLIAM SUSSMAN

Eastern Division Sales Manager Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp.

Many thanks for again calling on me to serve in the 1942 judging of the Quigley Awards.

I know that this practice has done much toward creating constructive thoughts on merchandising of our product and has, therefore, had a most beneficial effect at the box office and returns for producers. Keep up the good work.

J. J. UNGER

*Eastern and Canadian Division Sales Manager
Paramount Pictures, Inc.*

I shall be very glad to cooperate, and deem it a privilege to serve on the 1942 Judging Committee for the Quigley Awards.

I repeat what I have said many times before, that these Awards serve a definite purpose in bringing to the attention of the Industry the exceptional efforts of the men in the field and by that showmanship help the box office.

DAVID E. WESHNER

United Artists Corp.*

Thanks indeed for inviting me back again as a member of the Quigley Awards Committee of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD. As you know, this is probably my fifth or sixth year as a judge. As a former exhibitor and particularly now in my job as Director of Exploitation of United Artists, I know what great importance managers throughout the country attach to both the Managers' Round Table and the Quigley Awards.

CHARLES B. McDONALD

*Division Manager

This yearly award by Quigley of recognition to outstanding showmen has encouraged some excellent exploitation and publicity effort, and I feel sure has been very worth-while and beneficial to the entire industry.

LOUIS POLLOCK

Universal Pictures Company*

Thank you very much for inviting me to serve on the 1942 judging committee for the Quigley Awards. It will be an honor and, as usual, an education for me to take part in this work.

GUY KENIMER

*District Manager, Florida State Theatres, Inc.
Jacksonville, Fla.*

Shall be only too glad to serve on the 1942 Judging Committee of the Quigley Awards and do whatever I can in this assignment.

LEON J. BAMBERGER

*Sales Promotion Manager
RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.*

For eight years the Quigley Awards have been the means of stimulating better grosses and of bringing recognition to deserving theatre managers, and for eight years I have been making a statement of this kind for the MOTION PICTURE HERALD announcing a continuance of these awards.

Now for the ninth year I am frankly at a loss for words to express my opinion any differently than on all previous occasions. However, they all add up to the same thing: YES, I shall be delighted to again serve on the Board of Judges. The Managers' Round Table has been a very constructive force in our industry. I hope the Quigley Awards will never be discontinued. It has been said, "Exploitation has come back into its own." But exploitation on the part of real showmen never lapsed, and you will continue to find a large number of such showmen on the roll of the winners of Quigley Awards, which are always an incentive to the "live wires" in exhibition.

CHARLES REAGAN

*Assistant General Sales Manager
Paramount Pictures, Inc.*

It will be a pleasure to again be a member of the Judging Committee of the Quigley Awards.

I am glad to know that The Awards will be made in 1941, for I feel that unquestionably this competition over the past years has been responsible for improved grosses in the country's theatres.

SAM DEMBOW, JR.

Paramount Pictures, Inc.

Thank you for your kind invitation to again serve as a member of the Judging Committee for the Quigley Awards.

It is indeed a pleasure for me to accept, as I definitely feel that the Quigley Awards go a long way toward stimulating business in that they bring due recognition to the men in the field, thereby furthering their incentive to achieve outstanding results.

LEON NETTER

*Vice-President
Paramount Theatres Service Corp.*

Will be very happy to serve as a member of your judging committee for the 1942 Quigley Awards.

Your recognition of outstanding merchandising by the Quigley Awards definitely stimulates showmen and grosses alike. You are to be congratulated for your continued effort in this constructive work.

NAT WOLF

*Division Manager, Warner Bros. Circuit
Cleveland, Ohio*

I will be very happy to serve as a member of the Quigley Award Committee for 1942.

H. F. KINCEY

*Vice-President
Wilby-Kincey Service Corp.*

I will be very glad to serve on the Committee and assist in any manner that I possibly can with regard to the Quigley Awards for 1942.

MAJORITY OF JUDGES "REPEATERS"

W. F. RODGERS

*General Sales Manager
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures*

As I have mentioned before, I can only repeat that I consider the Quigley awards a great stimulant to progressive showmen, and am sure that the activities sponsored by you serve as an incentive to the many participants.

CARTER BARRON

Loew's, Washington, D. C.*

Your request that I serve for the ninth successive year as a member of the board of Judges for the Quigley Awards is hereby accepted with every good wish for the continued success of this stimulus to showmanship.

As a regular reader of the Herald, and particularly of the Round Table department, I have long been convinced of the genuine value of the program which you have built into an important influence in the merchandising of motion pictures.

From reports of the men in the various theatres of Loew's Eastern Division, I know how much the Round Table means to them as a source of new ideas and a constant stimulus to put forth their own best efforts week after week.

M. J. CULLEN

*Division Manager, Loew's Theatres
Columbus, Ohio*

I will be very happy to serve on your Quigley Awards Committee of 1942 as per your letter of Dec. 8.

My best wishes for continued success to this worthy contribution toward the development of theatre managers.

FRED C. SOUTTAR

*District Manager, Fox Midwest Amusement Corp.
St. Louis, Mo.*

I consider it indeed an honor to be asked to serve on the 1942 Judging Committee for the Quigley Awards.

As a former winner of an award, I know the deep satisfaction of putting over a campaign that secured recognition. I believe that, undoubtedly, the Quigley awards, through their nine years of competition have done much to stimulate friendly rivalry amongst managers and have directly contributed to better grosses and national recognition to the men in the field.

NAT HOLT

*Division Manager, RKO Theatres
Los Angeles, Calif.*

In response to your invitation, hasten to advise you that I am very happy and proud to serve on your 1942 Judging Committee.

I have always thought that the Awards serve as a great stimulant in securing better grosses due to the worthwhile manner in which you bring recognition to the men in the field.

ALBERT DEANE

*Director Foreign Publicity
Paramount Pictures, Inc.*

The Quigley Awards are the film industry's symbols of the finest examples of this freedom of advertising expression and as such are more to be encouraged now than at any other time in the industry's history.

M. A. LIGHTMAN

*President, Malco Theatres
Memphis, Tenn.*

I think the Quigley Awards serve a very fine purpose in our Industry and want to take this opportunity to compliment your Department for the splendid job you are doing. It is a pleasure for me to accept the appointment for 1942.

R. B. WILBY

*President, Wilby-Kincey Service Corp.
Atlanta, Ga.*

I will be glad to cooperate in any way possible in furthering the work of the Quigley Awards.

There is no doubt in my mind that this recognition of the selling effort and ability of various managers has a very distinct value, and I am glad to see you continuing it.

L. J. HALPER

*Pacific Coast Zone Manager
Warner Bros. Theatres*

The MOTION PICTURE HERALD, with its Quigley Awards, serves to stimulate theatre managers by fostering, recognizing and circulating advertising and exploitation ideas. Showmanship will always be the life blood of our business, but this year, more than at any time during its successful history, does the inspiration of the Quigley Awards serve a most important purpose, for entertainment is vital to the public morale.

I am proud to be a member of the 1942 Judging Committee.

F. J. A. McCARTHY

Sales Manager Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.

It was very thoughtful of you to again ask me to act on the Judging Committee for the 1942 Quigley Awards.

I do not know of any single factor in the motion picture business, that is a greater incentive for the publicity and exploitation of picture in the theatres than the Quigley Awards. It is doing a magnificent job.

A. C. HAYMAN

*President, LaHay Theatres

You may count on me to act on your Committee of Judges for the 1942 Quigley Awards.

I think you are doing a very big thing for the industry with these competitions, as it gives a greater incentive to the publicity men of all theatres competing and in so doing gives the theatres where the publicity men are employed better campaigns on the pictures they play.

I heartily endorse your Quigley Awards for the benefits they provide for the Industry as a whole.

MILTON SILVER

Director of Advertising National Screen Service

It would be a pleasure to again serve on the Quigley Awards 1942 Judging Committee.

It might be interesting to you to know that in my opinion with each passing year the value of these Awards mount. The campaigns seem better from year to year—more alive—with more bounce

LATE EXPLOITATION FLASHES

ALL WINDOWS OF BUILDING LETTERED WITH TITLE

The windows of one of Gloversville's most strategically located buildings on one of the four corners of the City Square were made into an unique and traffic-stopping giant poster for "40,000 Horsemen" at Schine's Hippodrome, when Lou Hart had all the windows on every floor lettered with title and date. Other downtown street-level windows were decorated with water-color layouts pointed up with action stills.

Schools were tied in with history classes using essay contest on the part Australians and New Zealanders had played in the first World War. Essay contest for geography classes was built around Australia's part in the present conflict and its geographical position in relation to the war in the East.

Named the "Fulton County Daily Times" was the special four-page tabloid made up by Hart for distribution within a 35-mile radius. In addition to every town and village, rural homes also were covered. Lobby was featured with clippings on Anzac deeds in present war.

FITZ TIES "TARZAN" DATE TO PAPER'S PHOTO CONTEST

Breaking in advance of "Tarzan's Secret Treasure" at Loew's Poli, Waterbury, with a 60-inch house ad, Ed Fitzpatrick has tied in with one of the dailies on a four-week amateur photo contest. Paper will give the same space each week, copy stressing coming attractions, layouts topped with action shots from the pictures to suggest various contest poses.

Cash prizes are offered with winning photos published by paper and also shown in theatre lobby, runners-up receiving guest tickets. In addition, contest copy invites entries to "shoot" the theatre screen. Fitz has also arranged for attractive contest windows with leading camera store.

BRIEN TIES "R.A.F." TO FLYING WEEK

Flying Week, recently inaugurated in Pittsburgh, was utilized for his date on "Yank in the R.A.F." by Lige Brien at Warner's Belmar to form a "Hop Harrigan Club". For this purpose, he borrowed an eight-foot standee of Hop from the Army recruiting service, and used it as the center of a display where the kids could sign up for the club. Each member was presented with a "Yank" hat and then informed that those informing the most people about the date would be rewarded with guest tickets.

Brien also promoted Penn. Central Airlines for picture postcards which were imprinted with attraction copy and forwarded to the mailing list the week ahead.

THEATRES USE STAMPS IN MAKING CHANGE

To promote the sales of defense stamps at the New York Rialto, Arthur Mayer is asking patrons to accept stamps in lieu of the usual change. Boxoffice posters and screen trailers urge: "Do your share. Ask for your change in defense stamps."

Cashiers have 10, 25, 50 cent, one and five dollar denominations of stamps. Policy has met with immediate acceptance.

The same procedure is being followed by Harold Thomas at the Malco Fulton, in Fulton, Ky., who calls attention to it with a sign in the box-office and also in trailer copy. Hal uses post-office albums in which 10¢ stamps are affixed. When patrons request all of their change in stamps, cashier adds additional number.

SANTA CLAUS FIGURE CALLS XMAS GREETINGS

During the holiday season, patrons arriving at the Trans Lux theatre, at 85th St. and Madison Avenue, in New York, were pleased—and somewhat mystified—to receive seasonal greetings spoken by a figure of Santa Claus in the lobby. Directly in back of the figure was erected a papier mache castle concealing an usher who offered the theatre's salutations through a telephone communication system hooked up from the castle to Santa.

As reported by Manager George Merring, the majority of the customers voiced their thanks in return, which were acknowledged with a "you're welcome" or other appropriate remark. Greetings were also expressed by Santa to those leaving the theatre.

FEATURE STORY "CHEERS" LOCAL "MISS BISHOP"

The original inspiration for "Cheers for Miss Bishop" came from a school teacher in Brainerd, Minn., a cousin of the author of the novel, according to the series of newspaper feature stories ahead of the date at the Paramount, the publicity paralleling scenes in the picture with actual happenings in the career of the local woman.

Seizing upon this opportunity, Manager Gilbert Swenberger had the teacher at the theatre as guest of honor for further newspaper mention. The Round Tabler also used the event for a "first-time" announcement of the picture and date at the schools.

DAN LANDS SIX BREAKS FOR NEW SPACE "HIGH"

That enterprising space-grabber, Dan Terrell, sends along a recent issue of the Washington, D. C., News, to illustrate the record number of Loew's Theatres breaks obtained on different current attractions. Leading off was an illustrated double-truck on what to do "before and during air-raids", the Capitol Theatre Rhythm Rockets posing for the different shots, and credited accordingly in the captions.

For the world premiere of "Corsican Brothers" at the Palace, Terrell landed on three added pages—a cut of local co-ed posing with sword used in the picture, contributed on behalf of Station WJSV's relief fund. Second break was a two-column on Tony Martin, in town for the premiere; the third, a story on "Clouds Over the Pacific", booked with the feature. Also prominent, was another two-column break on the appointment of Carter Barron, Loew's division head, as chairman of the district's "March of Dimes" drive.

ROSY GETS HIGH SCHOOLS TO "RISE AND SHINE"

With his date on "Rise and Shine" at Loew's Majestic, Bridgeport, coming right after a headline football game between local high school teams, Morris Rosenthal had both squads as his guests for the opening. Since the game ended in a tie score, both schools were equally credited in the proceedings which embraced cheer leaders of both sides introducing their teams and leading school yells from the stage. School bands played for the party, publicity on which was carried in the school papers and in sports sections of the dailies.

Feature stories had to do with George Murphy, who attended Yale in early New Haven, where he was on the football squad. Music stores decorated windows to plug the song hits, using pennants spelling out the title. In advance, usherettes wore sweater-and-skirt costumes plus imprinted badges. Lobby attractors were six-foot cutouts of girl cheer-leaders and giant megaphones in shadow boxes.

INVITE HONEYMOONERS TO TAKE IN THE SHOW

For his latest promotion "Bic" Bickerstaff publicized "You Belong to Me" at the L&J Palace, Athens, Ga., with an invitation to honeymooners to see the picture. Listed honeymooners in and around the city were taken from court house lists. Invitations read:

"The Palace wants to express to you its best wishes for a very happy married life. It will please us if you will, as part of your honeymoon, use this letter to see", etc., etc.

EXPLOITATION BRIEFS FROM A-FIELD

For advance display on "The Last of the Duanees," James Frailey of the Keystone Theatre in Williamsport, Pa., had a large book set up in his lobby and also took advantage of the popularity of the Zane Grey books through tie-ups with local book stores which plugged the books and film by displays and card inserts. Frailey also had a young man wearing a cowboy hat and mask parade the streets for two days.

A tabloid newspaper, especially printed for the premiere of "40,000 Horsemen" was distributed by Herman Comer ahead of the opening at Warner's Capitol, in Philadelphia. In addition opening night was dubbed "British Navy Night" and attracted a contingent of British sailors stationed there, who accompanied by officers were welcomed from the stage by the British consul. Ceremonies were broadcast directly from the theatre lobby over WTEL and broke dailies. In addition 15 editors of foreign language papers were invited to attend a special screening, while a huge float toured the city streets, commandeered by Junior Leaguers.

For "Citizen Kane," T. J. Hanifin of the Strand Theatre in Binghamton, N. Y., sent personal letters of the clergy of Triple Cities giving brief synopsis of the film. He also distributed 6,000 heralds in the cities.

Two stage programs have been booked by Jack Mahon of the West Side Theatre in Scranton, Pa., with good box-office results. On Friday nights he has an amateur show which is broadcast free over local radio station. On Saturday nights his stage program is broadcast coast to coast from WARM, Mutual outlet in Scranton. Mahon also stages a Spelling Bee on Wednesday nights in conjunction with the other Comerford theatres in town.

Candy eaters and milk drinkers were the objects of the campaign on "Birth of the Blues" by George Bittinger of the Capitol Theatre in Bloomsburg, Pa. Picture and playdate copy was imprinted on candy bags from the 5 and 10-cent stores while Bittinger also arranged with local milk dealer to place card under each bottle of milk delivered.

To plug his films, Thomas Pawley of the Sayre Theatre in Sayre, Pa., distributes a program of the weekly attractions with brief synopsis of each picture. He also has a hook-up over 500 telephones announcing daily programs.

Bruce Hause, manager of the Stanley Theater in Selinsgrove, Pa., has arranged to make direct contact with students at Susquehanna University by having programs of the weekly attractions placed on their desks.

A. R. Tate is boosting his Saturday matinee grosses by means of a tie-up with a local auto shop whereby the shop advertises for worn tires. Kids delivering the tires to the shop receive tickets for the Saturday matinee show at the Keystone Theatre and are later redeemed at full value by the shop.

Your New Lamax Theatre

"GO TO A MOVIE AT LEAST ONCE A WEEK"

Another "relax" display, this one, above, a two-column from Manager C. A. Skelly, with "assurance" copy directed at the public of Wilmington, Ohio, on behalf of the New Lamax. Planted right after the bombing of Hawaii, the ad helped to bring folks back to normal.

A new twist on a stunt in connection with "King Tarz" National Jungle Tour was used by Bill Elder, Loew's, Indianapolis, when he got the local Times to cooperate with a contest, asking readers to guess the lion's weight. The contest drew added attention to the caravan's visit through additional space given it.

Through the efforts of Ted Pierpoint, Paramount's manager in Brazil, a tieup was effected with local daily in Rio for a model airplane contest in connection with opening of "I Wanted Wings." In addition, a reported first time for that sector, was front-page break which gave excellent breaks to the picture's opening.

In connection with the personal appearance of the Republic star at the Fox Midland Theatre, in Hutchinson, Kan., Max Davis arranged a "Smiley Burnette Trade Day" with the cooperation of merchants, newspapers and radio stations. Giant parade was staged which featured a doll, pony, pet, cowboy and Indian section, winners in each presented with prizes by Smiley in person on a huge platform erected in front of the theatre. Cooperating merchants featured window displays, etc.

Another Round Tabler who goes in for institutionalizing on his program is Bob Ingham at the Orange Theatre, in Orange, Mass. Sometimes Bob injects a little humor by such methods as using a small cut of a house from which head of a male may be seen. Copy above reads: "I'll be in the doghouse if I don't take her to see," etc., etc.

For "International Squadron," Phil Duffy of the Strand Theatre in Shenandoah, Pa., arranged a tie-up with local book store selling model planes which netted him an outstanding window display tying in picture, playdate and planes.

A teaser advertisement in the form of advice to bridge players from W. C. Fields featured the campaign of Joseph Dalton of the Lyric Theatre in Shenandoah, Pa., for "Never Give a Sucker an Even Break." The ad was placed on the woman's page near columns devoted to bridge.

Creation of a Tarzan Club, to raise funds for the purchase of a new animal for the local zoo, was one of the highlights of the "Tarzan's Secret Treasure" campaign put over by Francis Deering, Loew's, Houston.

Numbered "boy and girl" cards were distributed in Reading, Pa., schools, and boys and girls in the same school holding duplicate numbers were admitted free to "Kathleen" if they appeared at the theatre together, as a feature of the campaign for the film put over by George Peters, Loew's Colonial.

Twenty-five girls on bicycles, carrying signs reading: "Welcome Back Shirley Temple," aided the "Kathleen" campaign executed by Sam Gilman, Loew's Regent, Harrisburg, Pa.

One thousand cards were sent to local Campfire Girls informing them of the return of Shirley Temple, and 5,000 blotters were distributed in the Junior High Schools as highlights of the "Kathleen" campaign put over by Ed Pentecost, Loew's Grand, Atlanta.

Tying the picture in with the regular weekly comic strip adventures of Tarzan, Boyd Fry, Loew's Palace, Memphis, planted a newspaper contest in the Commercial Appeal asking readers to write "Why I enjoy the experiences of Tarzan and his mates in the Commercial Appeal every Sunday." The contest was open only to those under 18 years of age and guest tickets were awarded to winning entries.

Effective Window Display Sells "Blues" for Bickerstaff

To create interest and for publicity on "Birth of the Blues" at the L&J Palace, in Athens, Ga., City Manager Frank Bickerstaff promoted local dime store for a large window display week ahead of opening. To make the window more attractive, manager of store placed a number of records from the picture on display plus one sheet, the latter were also spotted in music stores around the city. Nickelodeon was planted in lobby of theatre playing hit tunes from the picture and 15-minute transcription was run over Station WGAU.

For "Lydia", Bickerstaff had his artist set up his easel in the lobby and draw a pastel of Merle Oberon. On the same program "Bick" ran a Metro News featuring the Georgia Tech football game, this was shown opening day for the coaches, representatives from local daily, University paper and a number of students. Blowup of the team was placed in front with tiein copy and playdates.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Hamilton Creates Display For "Swamp Water"

Copying the cover of the "Swamp River" pressbook, Edward C. Hamilton, artist for the Clearwater Theatres, in Clearwater, Fla., stretched a bed sheet on a frame and painted it with blue and green water colors from a spray gun. Side panels were painted similarly with large arch to give depth. The title, cast and other copy were cutout letters painted red and mounted on the arch.

Grass mat was placed in front of the display, while a stuffed alligator and a human skull were also secured and placed at base. Hidden electric fan with a funnel made of cardboard played a constant stream of air on the rattlers of a mounted rattle snake. For further atmosphere, broken tree limbs and sticks were used, Spanish moss draped over all with hidden green and blue lights giving faint illumination.

Children Sing Carols For Brown's "Valley"

A group of 75 high school students was recruited by Manager Clyde Brown of the Fox Theatre, in St. Louis to sing Christmas carols in the theatre's lobby as part of the advance exploitation for "How Green Was My Valley". Another group also sang on Christmas Eve. Exploitation for the film consisted chiefly of advertisements in newspapers, using quotes from local newspapermen, radio newscasters and prominent men and women who had attended a special preview of the picture.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Laby's "Dawn" Window

Live window stunt that proved effective for George Laby at the Victory, in Holyoke ahead of "Hold Back the Dawn" was girl seated in bed in furniture store window. Every five or ten minutes the girl would stand up, yawn, stretch a bit, look at a clock, smile at the people watching her and then get back into bed. Credit card alongside was self-explanatory.

Lady for a Night

Southern Aristocracy Under the Lens

Southern aristocracy as of Memphis in 1890 or thereabouts is placed under a microscope, inspected and found wanting, in this Albert J. Cohan production directed with skill and feeling by Leigh Jason. There is much of charm, warmth and appeal in the telling of the story, an original by Garrett Fort scripted by Isabel Dawn and Boyce DeGaw in a manner to interest the most exacting shopper for entertainment.

Joan Blondell is seen at her best as the girl from the wrong side of the tracks who marries the scion of a destitute family on the right side of them and tries to earn the respect and acceptance of the aristocracy.

John Wayne as the gambler who uses his underworld power to further her plans without her knowledge, turns in a telling performance.

Ray Middleton, Blanche Yurka, Edith Barrett, Philip Merrivale, Leonid Kinsky and Hattie Noel add vital portrayals to round out a solid whole. The Hall Johnson Choir furnishes musical background of moment.

The tale takes the heroine from éase and luxury aboard a river gambling-boat to gloom and disappointment in the home of her husband whose aunt, seeking to poison her, kills her husband instead and tries to fasten the crime upon the bride. Political venality, economic stresses, pride, prejudice and simple loyalty are among the plot ingredients employed.

Previewed at the Studio City theatre, a bit outside Hollywood, on a Saturday morning to an invited audience which filled the theatre and indicated enthusiastic approval of the picture.

Forbidden Trails

(Monogram)

Western

Monogram presents in "Forbidden Trails," the three "Rough Riders," Buck Jones, Tim McCoy and Raymond Hatton, whose names are familiar by-words to western audiences. The "Rough Riders" might well include Jones' horse, "Silver," one of the most spirited and beautiful horses on the screen.

The story opens with the attempts of two ex-convicts to kill Jones, who enacts a retired U. S. Marshal. He escapes but is wounded. Eventually, the three "Rough Riders" apprehend the two ex-convicts, and at the same time, also apprehend a racketeer who has been trying to intimidate a friend of Jones.

While the picture follows the familiar pattern of western sagas, there are enough of the usual ingredients to insure a satisfied audience.

Swamp Woman

(Producers Rel. Corp.)

Swampland Melodrama

Perhaps the most startling innovation of "Swamp Woman" is the appearance of Ann Corio, billed as the "Queen of Burlesque." Despite the execution of one or two dances calculated to raise an occasional eyebrow, she proves to be the heroine in the real sense of the word.

The swamplands form the background of the picture, to which Miss Corio, a honky-tonk dancer, is returning to resume an old romance with Jack La Rue, who is intent, however, on marrying Mary Hull. Complications develop when it is discovered that Mary is hiding an escaped convict in her cabin. Eventually Ann Corio is instrumental in establishing the innocence of the escaped convict, and wrestling a confession from the real criminal, whom she had originally shielded. Mary Hull resumes her romance with her now freed convict and Ann Corio and Jack La Rue do likewise.

The picture does have a degree of action, such as the attempt of the convict to escape in the swamplands with bloodhounds on his trail, and an occasional fight or two, including one between the two female principals. However, the entire film gives the impression of melodrama of the old school.

The power of suggestion in Miss Corio's role limits the film to adult audiences.

George R. Merrick and Max Alexander were the producers and Elmer Clifton was the director.

Don't Get Personal

Hugh Herbert Under Handicap

Hugh Herbert's followers, said to be many and faithful, will find him imparting to this comedy the few glints of humour which fleck an otherwise routine enactment of a tale about mixed identities and a radio program. He and his associates in the cast are handicapped by material which gives them more hindrance than help in their efforts to entertain.

Directed with humorous intent by Charles Lamor for associated producer Ken Goldsmith, the story is about an eccentric who inherits a pickle factory and seeks to bring harmony into the romance of some young people, participants in the factory's radio program, whose real life interests he misconstrues.

There is also an attempt to bilk him out of his inheritance. The tale telegraphs its points and the conclusion and the individual sequences intended to be funny perish of deliberation.

Three songs by Jack Brooks and Norman Berens penalized by placement in a script by Hugh Wedlock, Jr., and Howard Snyder, which builds no interest for them. The titles are "It Doesn't Make Sense," sung by Jane Frazee; "Now What Do We Do" and "Every Times a Moment Goes By," sung by Miss Frazee and Robert Paige.

The Shanghai Gesture

(U.A.-Pressburger)

Melodrama as of Yesterday

A title that demonstrates potency as applies to a stage play of yesteryear and the names of several players whose popularity as of today are the assets in hand for showmen offering their customers this first of Arnold Pressburger's contributions to the United Artists program.

Producer Pressburger's presentation of a revised and considerably renovated version of the stage play is performed by Gene Tierney, Walter Huston, Ona Munson, Victor Mature, Phyllis Brooks and a good many other able actors who are handicapped by dialogue veering from the trite to the inane and by direction which holds proceedings to snail's-pace in what appears to have been an effort to stress mood, tone or spirit. Protracted silences leading up to speeches which do not advance the story combine with sustained camera studies of gestures and grimaces to produce the effect of a melodrama from the pre-talkie era minus its subtleties.

The approach of the production, in apparent acknowledgement of unadmitted but real lines of demarcation between the sophisticated stage serving the minority and the motion picture serving the multitudes, is typified by the change of the cast name of "Mother Goddam" to "Mother Gin Sling."

At the core of a script stretched thin over costly and handsome settings is the tale of a Shanghai gambling queen's debauching of the daughter of an Englishman for purposes of revenge and her killing the girl on discovery that she is her own daughter as well. Over-deliberation in the telling and persistence in accentuation of the obvious deflate the story of whatever drama the plot suggests on paper.

Josef von Sternberg directed and adapted with the collaboration of Geza Herczeg, Karl Vollmoeller and Jules Furthman. As reconditioned, the item is by no means a shocker for adults, unless they supply connotations out of memory, although it retains enough of the original flavor to suggest telling the kiddies to skip it.

Previewed at the Four Star Theatre to a large invited audience which accorded it polite response.—W. R. W.

CAVALCADE OF AVIATION

Special (6110)

This rather remarkable short is exactly what the title implies, a "Cavalcade of Aviation." Beginning with the first flight of the Wright Brothers at Kittyhawk, N. C., it continues on directly to our own implication in World War No. 2, and our aviation preparedness. Men and women who have been the symbols of progress in aviation are shown, Byrd, Chamberlain, Lindbergh, Amelia Earhart and Ruth Elder and Ruth Nichols. The two war presidents are also pictured, Wilson and Roosevelt. There are moments of comedy, such as the various freak planes making attempts to reach the skies. Tragedy too, has played a great part in the development of aviation, and there are some spectacular shots shown of the fatal crash of Lowell Bayles, the dirigible Akron pulling men off the ground, the burning of the Hindenburg at Lakehurst, N. J., and the unfortunate Post-Rogers flight. Produced by Tom Meade and Joe O'Brien, with the narration by Graham McNamee, "Cavalcade of Aviation," has enough history, information and thrills to appeal to everyone.—I. S.

Learning that she is an entertainer at the Shoreleave Cafe, a service men's resort near the waterfront, the two rivals frequent the place and discover it is being run by their old commander, Captain Blake (Paul Kelly). Presumably having been discharged from the Corps for suspicious conduct, Blake is in reality working with intelligence officers to trap a nest of foreign spies. McGinnis and Curtis re-enlist in the Marines with sergeants' ratings and continue to vie for Vi, who is actually a member of the enemy espionage ring. The two sergeants suspect Blake of being a traitor and at the wrong moment they burst in on Blake, Vi and the other spies escape. Learning of their blunder, the marines set out in hot pursuit. The situation is shortly well in hand.

This luxurious, comfortable chair makes every show seem just a little better . . . and more enjoyable. That's why so many showmen have called the Cameo the "first real theatre man's chair ever developed." In these critical days, exhibitors can count on "NLS" to see them through an emergency or a real breakdown.

"NLS," of course, is National Loan Service . . . mechanisms, intermittents, lamps and other projection equipment—all for your use, without cost.

Here, if you like figures, are some statistics on National's vast stock of Loan Service equipment.

In a straight line three feet wide, National Loan Service equipment would stretch for half a mile. All told, it requires 7000 feet of storage space. It's valued at close to a half-million dollars.

In this stock there is a mechanism for every 35 theatres in the United States. There's an intermittent movement for every 25 theatres.

Every year National Loan Service does over one million hours of work in theatres, absolutely free. In total elapsed time, that adds up to 40,000 days, 1500 months, or 125 years' work.

MARKET NOTES

¶ News reports concerning equipment and materials, and those who make them

Lamp Prices Further Cut

PRICES OF fluorescent lamps were further reduced January 1st, affecting all colored types as well as the daylight and white. In an announcement by the General Electric lamp department at Nela Park, Cleveland, it had been stated that prices were to be lowered with the new year as a result of lower production costs due to increased demand.

The amounts of the reductions throughout the line are indicated by the changes quoted for the most popular types, the daylight and regular white: 14-watt T-12, from 90c to 80c; 15-watt T-8, from 75c to 65; 15-watt T-12, from 95c to 80c; 20-watt T-12, from 95c to 80c; 30-watt T-8, from 95c to 80c; 40-watt T-12, from $1.35 to $1.15; and 100-watt T-17, from $3 to $2.60.

This is stated to bring the total reduction in price since fluorescent lamps were introduced in 1938, to 60% of the original charge.

Aluminum Use Reduced

ALTHOUGH SOME scrap aluminum is available, the Wagner Sign Service, Inc., Chicago, has issued a statement of its intention to use the metal only for sizes of letters which it is not making out of plastic material. These sizes are 8-, 16- and 24-inch. Letters of plastic, which Wagner recently began manufacturing, are so far confined to the 10- and 4-inch sizes.

It is announced that the manufacture of 10- and 4-inch aluminum letters will be discontinued almost immediately.

Non-Defense Air Equipment

ALTHOUGH DEFENSE orders are necessarily receiving the emphasis in the production of air-conditioning equipment, John R. Rainbault, manager of the air-conditioning department of General Electric, Bloomfield, N. J., has issued a statement expressing the belief that there will be "sufficient materials available for us in 1942 to provide some fair portion of the civilian consumer demand" for air-conditioning equipment.

During the first nine months of 1941, it is stated, General Electric orders for air-conditioning equipment showed a 73% increase over the corresponding period of 1940.

Deodorized Paint

AN INSIDE paint that is deodorized before being canned, so that it can be used, even with doors and windows closed, without creating the smell of paint, has been announced by the American-Marietta Company of Chicago.

Marketed under the trade-name Valdura No-Odor paint, it is said to set in three hours, and to dry in twelve to fifteen hours. It may be used on plaster, wallboard, wood, cement, brick or metal. It is obtainable in flat and gloss white, and in egg-shell.

Cut with a pint of thinner to one gallon of paint, it may be applied with spray gun, while flat and egg-shell finishes may be stippled, it is pointed out.

The colors in which this paint is obtainable are cream, ivory, buff, grey, blue and green.

Reversible Fuse Changer

A FUSE CHANGING device designed to facilitate insertion of a new fuse has been marketed by Littlefuse, Inc., of Chicago. A fuse in place extends through one end of a soft rubber rectangular structure, held by clips; above this is an opening for a spare fuse, the caps of which project enough to allow seizure by two fingers. When the fuse blows, the fuse holder is pulled to free the blown fuse, and the spare fuse is inserted. So that a glance will show the need of a new spare, one end of the holder is painted red; this end is underneath, out of sight, when both fuses are good; when the holder is reversed to change fuses, the red end appears.

Carpet Price Ceiling

AN ORDER HAS been issued by the Office of Price Administration, dated January 2, limiting the price that may be charged for wool floor coverings. In general, the price is based on prices obtaining last year; the manufacturer cannot charge more than 105% of such prices.

For items in price lists in effect on October 13, the maximum price is now 105% of those list prices.

For items not listed on October 13, but sold or contracted for between January 1 and October 1, 1941, the fixed maximum is 105% of the highest net price charged during that period.

New Booklet on Pumps

A CATALOG comprehensively describing pump equipment for various purposes, including that of providing cold well water for air-conditioning, has been issued by the Pomona Pump Company, Pomona, Calif. The booklet is extensively illustrated, and in addition to case histories, presents application drawings.

HIGHEST EFFICIENCY IN SCREEN LIGHT PRODUCTION IS OBTAINED WITH THE "ONE KILOWATT" HIGH INTENSITY ARC

● The phenomenal progress in efficiency of projection lighting is shown in the accompanying chart. For each watt of power purchased the modern "One Kilowatt" high intensity arcs deliver approximately 30 times as many screen lumens as the old condenser type low intensity arcs and from 2 to 3 times as many screen lumens as the later reflector type low intensity arcs. The remarkable increase in efficiency of these modern high intensity arcs enables the owners of small theatres to offer their patrons the highest standard of projection in the industry. Installation and operating costs are low. If you are using low intensity projection it will pay you to ascertain what the new "One Kilowatt" arcs can do for you. Ask your dealer for a demonstration.

Keeping the Theatre Fit For Its Wartime Job

THE VIEW of Maury L. Ashmann, zone manager of New York's Interborough circuit, that our entry into the war gives the motion picture theatre business an opportunity for great service to the nation, may be regarded as show-business's own measure of its capacities. In his article beginning on the following page, Mr. Ashmann actually suggests remodeling where needed as an aid to this service, instead of an attitude that places all such activity on the shelf for the duration. His reason is that the whole policy of wartime theatre operation should be to intensify the effort to create in the theatre an atmosphere of good cheer, to which an ill-kept, down-at-the-heel theatre can contribute nothing but a negative effect.

This opinion of course raises the question of how much Government restrictions on non-essentials interferes with remodeling. One late development bearing on this question is the Government's request of the motion picture industry for a compilation of the industry's needs in 1942. The survey to be submitted by the Hays organization comprehend all of the requirements of the business, apparently—those of the theatre as well as production—and it is reasonable to expect that a priority rating for the film business will result.

But although the Government has freely indicated its readiness to accept the idea that the motion picture has a definite function to perform in the wartime scheme, as an aid to morale and a medium of news dissemination, critical materials are almost certainly to be available in necessary amount only for film production and to fill the absolute necessities of existing theatres. Remodeling, if the Government's attitude up to now is an indication, is not likely to be given any recognition in such a setup.

Materials Available for Remodeling

The answer to the question concerning the extent to which remodeling—at least in the sense of refurbishing and maintenance of a suitable atmosphere—can be undertaken during the war lies in the availability of proper materials that are not involved in military production or the scarcities derived therefrom. And there are such materials in ample kind and quantity.

► Fabrics for floors and walls, glass in most of the architectural forms (though some structural kinds are taboo because of their steel backing), coated wall materials and papers, some of the architectural plastics (such as Formica), wood veneers and fibre boards, outside and inside display equipment, lighting fixtures (there are reported to be ample inventories of metal ones, while plastic is now being applied to ornamental light sources, especially for fluorescent lamps)—these and others are pretty sure to remain on the market, and they, along with the basic materials such as plaster and concrete, give ample freedom in the refurbishing and modernization of theatres.

► As to the supplies and equipment parts needed for the mere operation of theatres, the picture is as happy as that of remodeling possibilities only to the extent that one can hope for prompt and adequate recognition of those needs on the part of the Government agencies. They have been unconscionably late (and one might add, so has the film industry itself) in giving the requirements of the theatre serious attention.

For months many equipment men have foreseen a day rapidly approaching when hundreds, if not thousands, of theatres would have to shut down for lack of necessary supplies and repair and replacement parts. The need might be only for a certain type of screw, but there are plenty of little dinguses in equipment without which you may as well throw away the whole chunk of machinery. In the compilation of the list of industry needs, these details of theatre operation cannot be overlooked if the nation's film exhibition plant is really to perform the service for which it is so extraordinarily cut out.

Figures Show Theatre Construction Blitzed

Reports of new theatre construction projects during the past year reflect, in their low total, no surprises. The world political situation—the United States was already active on the anti-Axis side when the year opened—got in its licks early, and by the time the second half of the year was underway, theatre operators began to toss their dreams into a lower drawer of the old desk in the corner. Up to July 1st, reports to BETTER THEATRES' Projects Bulletin Service totalled 143; during the next six months they amounted only to 94, bringing the grand total for the year to 237.

In 1940, there were 298 reports of new theatre projects up to July 1st, and the year ended with 492. These reports cover plans for new theatres or for remodelling of such an extent that the changes would substantially amount to the creation of a new theatre, and normally, according to experience, about 80% of the projects reported are actually placed in construction.

Of the conventional divisions of the country, the three Pacific Coast states led with 44 projects reported. The East North Central states—Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin—turned in 42 reports, while fifteen states of the South (not including Maryland and West Virginia, but including the Southwest) reported 85 projects. New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania were the other larger sources, aggregating 33.

In the valuation of 1941 construction, the Dodge Statistical Research Service, authorities in the building industry, give figures which, at least for the first ten months of the year, show last year's new theatres about equal to those of 1940. This service reports only for the 37 easternmost states, and for these the 1940 valuation is given as $18,496,000; that of 1941, $18,386,000, representing new construction and substantial remodeling during the first ten months of each of these years.

And as a further note on wartime show-business: Two theatres in adjoining Pennsylvania communities—the Refowich in Freeland, and the Legion in White Haven—are reported to have arranged with a garage for acceptance of old automobile tires brought to the garage by children, as the price of admission. Ultimately four pretty good ones may buy a motion picture theatre.

—That's the Showman's Main Job Now

By MAURY L. ASHMANN

Long Island Zone Manager, Interborough Theatres

THIS WAR . . . the showman must view it this way: The theatre—principally the motion picture theatre—has a job to do. It is part of the Big Job. And your Uncle Sam is offering everyone connected with the theatre a chance to help himself to a share of the Big Job.

Our business has had a taste of wartime operation before. But it wasn't the entertainment medium that it now is. And World War I wasn't the all-out affair that this one is. These times cry for more showmanship, a more alert eye to details of operation; they call for the theatre manager to be more ingenious, more earnest; and when it is all over, our efforts should have taught us how to be more successful.

Our job, as I see it, is not to do a lot of hysterical flag-waving, make passionate patriotic exhortations, but rather to do a smart job of selling a frame of mind.

Showbusiness is expert in selling the regular theatre attractions; and when it gets a big picture, it goes to town, merchandising with every trick of the trade. Well, "How to Take It with a Grin in Wartime"—that's the Big One for the duration. Let's go out and sell it!

Let's sell it, not with sensationalism, using shock for sock, but rather with an atmosphere of cheerfulness, brightness. We needn't be Pollyannas, but we can provide an atmosphere in our theatres that will light up those dark corners, lift the spirits of our patrons from the time they step inside the doors. And in our advertising—we should attune it to the times in tone as well as content, polish it up, not to a brittle hardness, but to a strong tone that has warmth without flip-pant unrestraint.

Quite likely there will be blackouts—in spots, anyway, and at least for purposes of rehearsal—but competently trained staffs, anxious to do their part, can give the theatre a reputation as one of the safer places to be. And during the rest of the time the whole house staff, from manager down, should express calm confidence. That, coupled with the release that the show itself affords from our unhappy realities, is pretty certain to bring them back for more.

We can't make people forget the war—and we don't want to! But our efforts can give them the relaxation, the revitalization that is needed in larger-than-normal doses in times like these.

Hedy in Clark's arms is to Sadie Smith just Sadie herself as she sits in the eighth row watching, thrilling, sighing, happily chewing Indian nuts. And the dashing Male Hero is Mr. Male Patron, be he a bucktoothed soda jerker or a bald, paunchy banker. For the moment, they are living happily in another world. . . . Well, if that makes them happy, then, says I, it is our job to make the whole theatre express what they are seeking.

MAINTAINING A CHEERFUL ATMOSPHERE

What can be done, what should be done, will vary according to the setup of each theatre and operating organization. One thing seems to me certain: The theatre itself should not for a moment be allowed to take on a run-down-at-the-heel appearance. There is nothing that will give patrons an I-don't-want-to-go-there-anymore feeling so quickly as dirt, disorder, shabbiness. And how can you develop cheeriness, pep and conscientiousness in a staff when the theatre itself looks all fagged out—merely limping along for the duration?

Whatever is needed to make the theatre look bright should be done, to the extent that it can be done. The writer knows of several instances of renovation recently undertaken to achieve just that kind of atmosphere. One such instance may be observed in the recent decision of the organization with which I am connected—the Interborough circuit operating in the New York metropolitan area. A remodeling program was contemplated for a year from now; when the U. S. A. got into the shooting business, it was decided to put it into execution immediately, so as to make doubly sure that the theatres expressed welcome, good cheer, confidence—and safety (for a psychological effect of shabbiness, when people are shaky anyway, is a sense of unsafety). The front and lobbies of Interborough theatres are being made brighter, for example, in actual lumen output, with 25-watt lamps installed where 15-watts were used before!

Yes, Priorities get in the way, cause delays, force changes in plans, even add to costs. But extra trouble is part of the patriotic sacrifice. There are plenty of materials available for remodeling a theatre. One may not be able to do in every case just what one would otherwise do, but we can do something to get the improved effect wanted.

Lighting can be quite readily modernized. Paint is always and everywhere available. How about the lounges? Need new mirrors, some new pieces of furniture? No SPAB permission is needed to buy carpeting, and new carpeting alone can do a whale of a job toward freshening up the interior.

Then while putting new life into the house staff, training them in extra courtesy and alertness, examine the uniforms. They certainly should not be threadbare; but even if they are passable in point of wear, perhaps they are a little too drab for these times. Your patrons will appreciate the change to the brighter side—and the effect on the wearers themselves is to induce the very attitude toward the job and the customers that we are after.

At the front—if no more is needed, if no more can be done effectively and within budgetary limitations, at least the displays, if stolidly old-fashioned, can be modernized, enlivened. Perhaps you have intended to do this for some time; now is the time, for never will liveness, brightness pay greater dividends, to the individual theatre and to the institution of the motion picture.

Then there's the candy counter and other refreshment services—these certainly should enter into the spirit of the occasion by being up-to-date, with sparkle and color to a degree suggested or permitted by the extent of these services. More than ever the theatre is a place for a good time; let the refreshment displays encourage this idea with their freshness, attractiveness, suggestion of leisure.

Theoretically every theatre is kept clean. But these new conditions demand that this be actually the case. Routine that has sufficed ought now to be intensified. There is nothing more depressing to the majority of Americans (a bathtubby race of people) than dirt and the disorder and odors that suggest dirt. We've got to be more fussy about it.

THE "RECREATIONAL CENTER" ANGLE

In an earlier paragraph reference was made to the tone of advertising. Generally speaking, the contents can well be varied somewhat. The picture business will always be merchandising pictures . . . but in times of emotional strain the value of the theatre just as a recreational center is more quickly recognized, and that's all in favor of the box office, of course. So we undoubtedly should play this angle up more than we usually do, using institutional copy in our newspaper advertising and posters.

As for poster and trailer copy directly concerned with emergencies, there are two schools of thought. To date the organization the writer belongs to has avoided the use of trailers and warning signs, feeling that legislation before long will lay down certain regulations, whereupon the theatre will do what it is called upon to do. The word war is especially questionable in such copy, but as an accompanying example of poster copy indicates, the message can be got over without it.

The suggestions made in this piece are of necessity pretty general; they are intended primarily to set forth one point of view regarding the theatre's job and policy in wartime. We showmen can take our new obligations in our stride.

You've probably heard the cigarette advertising catchline on the radio—"Something new has been added." And so it is with wartime theatre operation. It's the same business—with something added. That something, if we have to have a word for it, is personality. Let's make a slogan of it—Theatre Personality for Morale. A bright, cheery, responsible personality should be that of the theatre from front to auditorium, from manager to usher. That's the spirit of the theatre's wartime job.

Maury Ashmann got into the theatre business via advertising—on finishing school he worked on press book construction for an advertising agency. Once in show-business he went up fast—assistant manager of a theatre, then manager, then district chief, now zone manager for Interborough Theatres, important New York circuit.

The Theatre Has Personality, Too— Let's Merchandise It!

IN a time of peace or of war, those values of the theatre that don't vary with each program are merchandise—only just now, as Maury Ashmann points out in the preceding article, they are worth special emphasis. Here a specialist in selling pictures turns to these other marketable items

By A-MIKE VOGEL

Chairman, Managers' Round Table
Motion Picture Herald

LET'S NOT KID ourselves about it—for the most part, people simply do not go to the theatre; they are brought to the theatre. And what brings them? Personality, as a general thing—but personality skillfully advertised and exploited under the showman's guiding hand. Well, if a theatreman is smart enough to bring in the business by plugging picture personalities, why cannot he do as much to sell the personality of his theatre?

Certainly a theatre has it. Did you ever note the bulge that one house has over the competition, even with everything else equal? The reason? The more successful operation is given an opportunity of expressing those certain intangibles not usually spotlighted. The public is duly impressed with the theatre's constant values which back up those shifting performance values, those that vary in strength with each change of program.

All of this translates itself into a direct procedure to fashion these permanent values into other forms of personality that can also be depended upon to sell tickets. What are those other forms of personality? How can they be sold? Well, let's see.

Shall we start with equipment? That would be an advertising intangible of importance of which the public knows little. Theatre safety and convenience, perfection of projection, comfort of seating, the extreme care used to assure protection to health in theatre ventilation and air-conditioning, and so on.

SAFETY DEMONSTRATION

Today, theatre safety is taken for granted. Well, if patron protection is so well developed, then why not impress it upon your public by showing them what makes up this protection, and how it works. And without saying as much, would it not be good business at this time to indicate how the equipment and the staff are capable of meeting emergencies?

Depending solely upon the situation and skill with which all of it is sold, some solid publicity could be produced with a public demonstration of how quickly and safely the theatre can be emptied. This would be appropriate to a Saturday kid matinee and could be executed with the close cooperation of the police and fire departments. Of course, the proceedings would be nothing more than an elaboration of the usual staff fire or other emergency drill. Advance newspaper stories should invite the grown-ups to witness the proceedings, and radio stations should be offered an opportunity to broadcast the affair from the lobby.

As a part of the demonstration, there could be a lobby display of theatre protective equipment, an explanation of it by staff members, and perhaps drawings showing the detailed organization of personal safety procedure. Before the actual demonstration, the children would be informed of what was to take place. Talks from the stage could be given, as often is done, by police and fire department heads. Theatre men who do not care to go as far as the actual emergency demonstration, could confine the plan to the lobby display and stage talks.

SPOTLIGHTING PROJECTION

Perfection of projection certainly demands frequent spotlighting. This is decidedly a take-for-granted intangible that rates occasional bows. Among lobby displays used by exhibitors to publicize installation of new projection, we recall one in which the various parts were properly labelled, and their functions briefly indicated on a placard. The public was invited to the showing in special newspaper ads. Then when installed, the new machinery was started by the mayor, who turned on the juice to the accompaniment of flashing bulbs of newspaper cameras. Local eye and ear doctors were invited to test the adequacy of the equipment for correct hearing and vision. Their findings—favorable, of course—were carried in newspaper interviews. Talks before luncheon clubs by theatre men and visits to the projection room by interested groups are other means employed to publicize the "heart of the theatre."

It certainly affords a refreshing change of pace to use some of the ad budget for institutional copy on the theatre itself—it's facilities and services. For example, on projection, perhaps illustrated with a cut of the projection room, including the projectionists for human interest—

"It may be a bit too technical for you to understand, so we won't try to explain . . . But we will point out—

"That our projection equipment is the finest, the most modern, the best that money can buy. Year in and year out, we spend a lot of money on projection to guarantee you enjoyment of our screen programs.

"Our projectionists are students of a complex craft. Many of you know Joe Smith and Sam Jones. They are skilled technicians. In a sense, they too are artists in their profession.

"Way up under our roof is the fireproof, streamlined home of the modern Aladdin's Lamp that performs the magic of the motion picture screen. Modern science has produced nothing more wonderful than the delicate machinery one finds there."

Copy of this kind can be tied directly to a coming program, the size and layout of course to be determined individually, according to budgetary restrictions and local line rates.

"SELLING" NEW SEATING

It wasn't so long ago that one of MOTION PICTURE HERALD's "Round Tablers" unveiled his new auditorium with a display of one of the chairs in the foyer. A poster invited patrons to try it, and an attractive girl stood by to point out the chair's advanced design, especially with respect to comfort and protection.

Chairs, like many other components of the physical theatre, lend themselves to the more elaborate exploitation treatments. For example, one of the chairs, mounted on a small platform, can be taken around to organization meetings, to be used by the chairmen, or the guest of honor, if any. Or how about a "Correct Posture Class," in cooperation with the High school gym teacher, perhaps also that of a newspaper beauty editor. Prizes could be given to those seating themselves most gracefully and most healthfully, and of course the demonstration would bring out how the design of the chair is based on scientific posture studies.

There is also the "health oldie" in which persons are tested for nervous exhaustion, first after sitting in an ordinary chair, then in a modern auditorium chair. The head of the local health department might go for this. The stunt is bound to be good for some newspaper space, and the "city hall boys" like to get their names in the papers, too, as you must have heard.

Reseating always merits space in newspaper advertising and the inclusion of a picture of one of the chairs is surely desirable if the budget permits. The copy might run something like this, at least in spirit:

"For your comfort—when you attend the Princess theatre—now completely reseatd with 800 chairs of the expensive, luxurious model pictured.

"Scientifically designed for perfect posture, they have the most modern spring construction, so made as to assure everyone complete relaxation.

"Beautiful in their streamlining, these modern auditorium chairs have no parts to catch on clothes.

"Beautiful in their costly fabrics, they have cushions soothingly soft to the touch.

"The management of the Princess theatre knows how much comfort means to the enjoyment of the performance—we have provided it, in the fullest possible measure, in these handsome new chairs. Come to the Princess and relax, while the drama on our screen unfolds before you."

Theatre air-conditioning is one of the few advertising intangibles that has got the exploitation spotlight with some consistency. We have had the mayor or some other prominent person start the cooling system; there have been features by health department heads on the benefits of air-conditioning; newspaper stories have frequently appeared on the careful watch of auditorium temperatures. However, these breaks appear more often in the summer months than otherwise. The importance of any equipment controlling air conditions rates it attention throughout the year.

SERVICE IS MERCHANDISE

It is not far fetched to say that one theatre thrives because of excellent service while another fails for lack of it. And, paradoxically enough, while millions of words have been written about service, too little has been said about it. Personnel conduct is one of those things that must never be allowed to grow stale.

Recently, the capacities of the house staff were outlined in the Managers Round Table (MOTION PICTURE HERALD of December 13th), by two of the attaches of the Marquis theatre in Hollywood, John McMar Wylder and Ralph C. Nordmark. As the authors noted, the rules they offered "may be obvious, but are grossly neglected." Theatre men with fine service staffs have every reason to boast—and in public. Patrons only now and then find occasion to praise an usher, a cashier, or a doorman. It is to the manager's profit to impress this excellence upon the customers, in every way he can. A few weeks ago in New York, Zeb Epstein, managing director of the Broadway Strand, loaned the services of some of his ushers for a few hours, to seat hundreds of people attending an industrial meeting. The theatre name, lettered on the uniforms, was inevitably observed. It proved fine advertising for the theatre. That's an idea for other managers in situations where civic and other locally important gatherings, or comparable "front-page" occasions, might provide reason for offering whatever staff services the theatre can spare, temporarily. Participation of uniformed personnel in street parades, grand marches at dances, guards of honor, etc., also rate consideration.

Usherettes are coming more into the picture, due to the demands of war service upon young men. Publicity can be made of this policy change wherever the switch has been made. In fact, only a few weeks back, Tri-Stater Bob Fulton broke a lot of fat space in the Des Moines, Iowa, dailies on such a change in personnel because of the draft.

The pleasing atmosphere engendered by the personnel can also provide effective copy for advertising. How's about some space for the service staff, with individual face cuts or a group shot? Copy suggestion—

"You don't have to meet them . . . You know them—these local boys and girls—your smiling hosts at the Strand.

"We do not select our attendants merely for efficiency. We select them with the same care that you invite guests to your home. They are at the Strand to bid you welcome, to "make you feel at home," to insure that your visit to the Strand is as pleasant as one to the home of your best friend.

"Our boys and girls do not go in for regimentation. They do go in for the old-fashioned, unobtrusive courtesy that has long identified Strand theatre atmosphere and service."

COMMUNITY CENTER ANGLE

Club contacts, too, may be directed to the theatre's box office, and nothing need be given away, either. Camera clubs, most assuredly. They have never been more popular. It is a poor stick of a newspaper without some kind of a photography department. No, don't turn them loose to shoot the screen, or the audience. That's been tried and found too wearing for the rest of the house. They can be invited to do their stuff in the lobby, engine room, projection room, auditorium and lounges, at those hours when these facilities are not engaged—in the morning, perhaps. Tie this to the papers. The theatre offers a wealth of good shots.

Over a period of weeks, one "Round Tabler" found that weekly book reviews, coming just before the first matinee showing, sold extra tickets. The commentator was paid by the local book store, which plugged the idea. It was discovered that the informal atmosphere of the gathering helped to get these early patrons acquainted with the house, especially those patrons who were not "regulars."

Defense activities of course bring many opportunities for co-operation. Where local facilities are limited in training first-aid and similar groups, theatre men might volunteer to hold sessions for patrons in the mezzanine, perhaps, or other places where space permits. Stores might tie-in by making available knitting instructors to teach patron groups at the theatre. Information service for visiting servicemen can also be worked out, as well as the countless other things that ease the theatre into the news, focus attention on its community significance. The more things of community concern that can be made to happen in and around the theatre, the more the theatre can win local regard as a community center. And that's about as lasting a box office foundation as any theatre can reasonably hope for.

NOVEL DETAILS IN MODERN STYLING

Q Located in an outlying residential section, the new Bard theatre in Louisville, Ky., seats a little over 1,000 on a single floor, and the facade, as well as the main housing, is kept to a height appropriate to its community of small-home owners, while sign and other displays are similarly unobtrusive. The Bard, which represents a reported investment of approximately $100,000, is owned by Louis Wiethe, who operates also in Cincinnati and Columbus, Ohio, and Latonia, Ky. The architect was F. T. Winnenberg of Louisville; general construction was by the J. N. Jackson Company of Louisville; equipment was supplied by the Falls City Theatre Equipment Company of Louisville. Sam Bacon is resident manager.

FRONT: Of brick, steel and concrete construction, the Bard has a front section faced with glazed architectural brick into which are introduced architectural design elements consisting in panels and base course of maroon porcelain enamel pointed with tangerine squares above related in an eccentric pattern to a metal ribbed inset painted tangerine above the marquee. Display frames are chrome.

FOYER: The view at left looking into the lobby also shows the stairs leading to lounge area behind the projection room. Foyer doors are natural birch, and the walls are paneled with wood mouldings enameled white. The plaster panels are painted in the medium shades of pink used in the auditorium, while the ceiling is pale blue. This section of the foyer, centrally located on the axis of the auditorium, is continuous with standee area, where the ceiling is of auditorium height, and drapes are provided at the edge of the lower ceiling to isolate the auditorium during a performance if that is desirable. Set into the ceiling here are two white fluorescent lamp recesses suspending plaques from around the edges of which the light is emitted.

GENERAL LOUNGE: Reached by the stairs shown in the foyer view, this room provides spacious lounge area and gives access to both men's and women's toilet facilities. Walls are papered in pastel rose and blue; the ceiling is papered in ivory. Immediately opposite the head of the stairs is a large mirror set into a projecting panel having rounded border of Flexglass.

Detail view of lounge mirror panel with Flexglass border.

Looking into women's cosmetic room.

Section of standee area, showing rail with red leatherette "leaning pad" and facing in white leatherette.

AUDITORIUM: Designed in a modern-styled graduated band pattern, the auditorium, with 1,018 seats entirely on one floor, has striking sweep. The wall bands emanate from fabric over rock wool across the rear, and converge slightly toward the stage opening; the ceiling, however, supports a broad light trough-plaque which originates at the proscenium, reversing the conventional form of such structures. The wall colors are shades of pink, the ceiling tones of blue, while trim (wall dividers are wood moulds) is off-white. The ceiling plaque also carries the air outlets, which are Anemostat flush type aspirating diffusers, supplying conditioned air, cooled in summer by mechanical refrigeration (Carrier plant). With the floor having a slight rise at the proscenium end, the chairs (by Ideal) are staggered in the center bank from the twelfth row back, using 30-inch chairs at alternate row ends. Illumination of the auditorium is by both neon and filament lamps in coves along the ceiling plaque, the lamps being on dimmer circuits.

Getting Efficient Cooling In Spite of Priorities

• Mechanical refrigeration is the best means of assuring summer comfort and, although some application materials are hard to get, you can get around this problem. Here are some of the ways of doing it

By CARL F. BOESTER

WITH WAR NOW directly involving our own country, the question of many theatre men at the moment is: What about air-conditioning of our theatres for the duration, or is it possible to do something about it?

Well, the answer is simply this: If you are halfway resourceful yourself and get resourceful engineering help, the chances of going ahead with your plans for theatre cooling are good. The big question, then, is how to go about it.

One of the answers is in the employment of mechanical refrigeration. True it will take some very clever application engineering to work it out, but there is no reason to believe that it cannot be done. However, you can't start too early in order to have a system in full operation come summer time. Some of the larger and more reliable manufacturers of mechanical refrigeration equipment have substantial stocks of equipment still available, particularly equipment for air conditioning jobs. These, however, consist principally of what are known as condensing units, which are built-up units comprising the motor, compressor, and shell and tube condenser. The cooling coils and other apparatus are nearly impossible to get; but if we have the heart of the refrigeration unit, which is this combination of equipment known as the condensing unit, there are ways and means of accomplishing a first-class job of summer air-conditioning. And there is every reason to want to do so; for when it comes to extracting the heat from your theatre to produce comfortable conditions in the summer time, the overall cost of removing heat units is, in the final analysis, accomplished at least expense by the employment of mechanical refrigeration equipment. For air-conditioning jobs and temperature ranges at which a refrigeration system is operated in the function of air-conditioning, the mechanical compressor is operating at its greatest efficiency. The refrigeration gas at this temperature range is quite "heavy," with the result that it is highly laden with heat units, and for every stroke of the compressor tremendous quantities of heat are pumped to the condenser for rejection, either to condenser cooling water, or to the air outside.

WHAT COOLING AMOUNTS TO

Let's briefly describe what happens in a refrigeration cycle as a sort of reminder and to lead to a better understanding of just what takes place. The coils that do the cooling contain the refrigerant, whether Freon, methyl chloride, or ammonia, in its liquid state, and the pressure of the refrigerant in the cooling coils is so low that heat from the air being cooled is able to boil the liquid refrigerant into refrigerant gas. Now common sense tells us that when any liquid is changed to a gas it requires heat to change it into that gas; therefore, the refrigerant gas becomes heat laden. The pressure on the refrigerant in the coils is quite low, because the pistons of the compressor are always sucking on the coils, causing a tendency towards a vacuum; and of course when you lower the pressure over any liquid it boils more readily.

The heat laden gas is then drawn into the compressor where the gas is compressed by volume, while at the same time its temperature is raised because of the compressing of the gas. This very hot gas is then discharged into the condenser, which is cooled either by air or by water, and when the heat is taken out of this hot refrigeration gas and while the pressure is still on it, the gas condenses into a liquid.

The liquid then flows into a receiver until it is needed for cooling purposes in the cooling coils. It is passed from the receiver to the cooling coils through a pressure reducing valve (also known as a thermostatic expansion valve), which is operated according to the demands placed on the cooling coil as a result of temperature variations in the cooling coil. So the valve meters this refrigeration at exactly the rate of load imposed on the cooling coil and the rate at which the compressor is able to handle the load.

COOLING IN SPITE OF PRIORITIES

The whole cycle is really very simple, and because of its sheer simplicity it is quite efficient in taking heat out of the air. There have been many attempts at applying other apparatus to accomplish the extraction of heat in air-conditioning jobs, but few of them work as simply, therefore as efficiently, as does the present-day refrigeration cycle. It therefore remains one of the best known methods of providing summer comfort in theatres.

Now the question is, how can we apply this refrigeration machine to our summer cooling requirements when it is impossible to get tubing with which to connect up the refrigeration system to the cooling coils? Most cooling coils are made of copper, and it is impossible to get fin cooling coils except under priorities, which the average theatre man cannot get. There must be ways and means of doing the job, anyhow. I can well remember my early experiences with the application of refrigeration to air-conditioning, which was before the days of Freon; we used to use iron pipe exclusively, since ammonia was the refrigerant and copper and ammonia don't get along together.

When Freon did come into the picture, as did other low pressure refrigerants, it was rather difficult to switch to the use of copper tubing in refrigeration work, and for a while after the advent of Freon, methyl chloride, and the like, we continued to use iron pipe for the installation of air-conditioning systems employing Freon or other low-pressure refrigerants. And, believe it or not, we used ordinary single-strength piping for this work (double strength pipe had been required for ammonia). We didn't weld up the pipe; we simply used screwed fittings; and a recent check of some of these early jobs revealed the startling information that none of them had ever lost their refrigerant charge as a result of bad piping!

Most ammonia refrigeration piping is done with screwed fittings and the use of a compound known as Litharge, which is mixed with glycerin. When this pipe dope sets up, you have a joint that is every bit as tight as a welded connection, as far as refrigerant leaks are concerned. So why not go back, at least for the time being, to the use of iron pipe and screwed fittings, with Litharge compound as the pipe joint dope?

Iron pipe is still available in quantities and priorities are not needed on it. You just have to be careful that the pipe is reasonably free from dirt and scale on the inside of it. Running a stiff brush through the pipe usually cleans it out and gets any free scale loose; and by the employment of an oversized strainer you should not have any trouble from dirt.

It is going to be next to impossible to get Freon as a refrigerant; however, you should be able to employ methyl chloride with comparable success. While methyl chloride is somewhat toxic, if it is carefully handled there is no reason why you should have any difficulty with it. You will have to change the speed of the compressor because of the difference in the density of the gas, and you will have to use expansion valves of different capacity, which are designed for the employment of methyl chloride; but otherwise there should be no trouble with the system.

PUTTING THE WASHER TO WORK

Well, you say, since we can't get fin coils, what good does that do? That brings back into consideration our old friend, the air washer. Many of you theatre men undoubtedly have air washers in use at the present time. Many of these are single-bank air washers, because they are used for evaporative cooling; but by putting in another bank of spray nozzles, these same air washers can be used to do a good job of cooling.

The next trick is simply to put a sufficient quantity of pipe coil in the bottom of the air washer to keep the air washer temperature down to a temperature of 45°, or thereabouts; and this pipe coil in which the refrigerant will be circulated can do a swell job of keeping this air washer water cool.

It may be necessary to use a second pump because of the second bank of spray nozzles. This will also serve to circulate the water in the tank of the air washer at sufficient velocity over the refrigerant pipe coils in the tank so that all of the water is kept thoroughly agitated, and thereby thoroughly cooled. The amount of water should be 4 gallons per minute per ton of capacity of the air washer, and the air circulated to the air washer should be cut down to about 400 cubic feet a minute per ton of cooling capacity.

Most air washers handle too much air through them for ordinary refrigeration jobs. You will then have to readjust the grilles in your air outlets, so that the air is thrown farther, rather than just dumped into the theatre. The air will of course have to be recirculated.

OPERATION AND CONTROL

The controls of this application can be rather simple. The condensing unit comes with a high- and low-pressure switch, and this can be used to start and stop the compressor according to the temperature of the refrigeration coil, which in turn is reflected by the pressure of the coil. It can operate more or less independently of the theatre temperature, because the refrigeration system's main job is to keep the water in the air washer tank cool. Because there is a substantial quantity of this water, you have a "stored refrigeration" effect, so that a slightly smaller compressor can be used, since during lighter periods of operation the water can be cooled down for use when a larger amount of cooling is required. The thermostat in the auditorium can be used to start and stop the chilled water supply to the spray nozzles, and the fan should be left to run continuously.

It is very important that the water in the tank of the air washer be rapidly agitated in order that a very high rate of heat exchange can be accomplished between the pipe coil in the tank of the air washer and the water. This will make possible the reduction in the amount of pipe coil to a rather small amount, which of course will reduce the cost for this coil and the cost of installing it. Because of the fact that you are using an air washer you can do a better job of cleansing the air than if you had ordinary filters, which is somewhat of an advantage.

In the case of completely new installations, air washers are still available from the companies that make them, and there seems to be no priorities on them. There is of course a considerable demand for them, and it is necessary to order them early in the season. But by this arrangement you can certainly get around the need for any copper cooling coils—and don't forget that with an air washer and 45° water you can do every bit as good a

Q Making the Theatre a "Safe" Place in Wartime

IN THESE TRYING TIMES, the theatre business has both a great opportunity to demonstrate its place in community life, and extraordinary responsibilities for public safety. It has a tremendous contribution to make to the maintenance of healthy morale, and it must carry out its special wartime function with all possible assurance of personal protection. We must consider it always a possibility, however remote, that enemy attack will some time extend to our towns and cities. Should anything of the sort occur, and we of course are thinking almost entirely of an air raid, the public will expect the theatre management, in any instance, to be prepared for the emergency.

To date there are no definite rules and regulations drawn up by city, state or Federal authorities setting forth, in a really authoritative way, precautions, duties and restrictions during an air raid. There have been some general attempts along this line, but the press reports (and the writer's investigations have revealed) more confusion than knowledge of what to do and what not to do. In time there doubtless will be definite rules of procedure, backed up by legislation; in the meantime, in view of the fact that theatres are hosts to millions of people at night as well as during daylight hours, theatre managements probably should take immediate interest in air raid protection—and make this interest known to the public.

AID PHYSICAL AND MENTAL

The first thing the management of a theatre should do is to select at least four "key" employes (average-sized theatre) that have proved their initiative, quick-thinking and assumed leadership in an emergency. These "key" employes should be assigned to regular permanent stations in the theatre and be instructed how to handle both their fellow employes and the patrons when an emergency arises.

General panic of patrons will be the most dangerous thing to control. An employe who is a convincing talker and who has memorized a prepared speech of just what to say to the patrons, should be instructed to be always ready to get quickly to the stage (this duty should be assigned to one or more stage-hands if they are available in the theatre, and suited to the job). In addition, a microphone should be installed in the manager's office and interconnected with the public address speaker on the stage so that when a sudden emergency arises orders can be quickly given to the audience. It is surprising, but nevertheless true, how a panicky person or crowd will unconsciously obey commands or orders if given before the stampede begins.

CHOOSING HOUSE "WARDENS"

Another important thing is to have the selected group of "key" employes schooled and trained in first aid methods that are considered adequate and necessary for air raid victims. Several well known relief organizations, such as the Y.M.C.A., Red Cross, etc., have written instructions for first-aid procedure; fire departments of many cities are also conducting classes in this subject (An illustrated article on first-aid methods for the theatre appeared in the August 20, 1940, issue of BETTER THEATRES.—Editor).

For war-time operation the theatre should provide first-aid kits, proper "cravat" bandages, disinfectants, stimulants, etc., to take care of at least ten persons at a time, for in addition to its own patrons, some people might come into the theatre off the streets, for protection and even attention in an emergency. The exact complement of articles for the first-aid kits should be determined by the proper authorities, who most likely would be the city's police or fire emergency aid departments. In any case it is better to have all the necessary first-aid equipment and more than required, even if it is never used!

Arrangement should be made to have several cots, blankets, sheets, etc., available for disabled patrons, or for old people and young children, to be on hand in case they must remain in the theatre several hours or more during a heavy and long blackout or actual raid. Later on, as authorities may think advisable and as the equipment becomes available, extra gas masks should be kept in the theatre for patrons who forget theirs, or to replace the ones that are defective in one way or another.

To give the public assurances of safety and well-being while in the theatre, the management might well arrange to have a short trailer on the screen before each show, telling of the means taken to protect the patrons and also giving some instruction on their co-operation. This trailer should be so arranged that it will not instill fear, but rather confidence and courage.

Another measure, in addition to the announcement on the screen, is a little placard posted in the box office, or a conspicuous spot in the lobby, denoting briefly the theatre system in protecting patrons. To provide additional safeguards to the patrons, the theatre should construct a portable partition or barrier that can be easily and quickly set in place to protect large areas of glass.

EMERGENCY ILLUMINATION

It is really important to have a proper emergency lighting system in the theatre in case the regular system fails. This is highly desirable in normal times; in war-time it may prove to be a "must" item. Most large theatres have storage battery emergency lighting systems that provide lighting for the exit signs, aisle lights and directional signs; however, this might not be sufficient to provide adequate light, especially in some confined area where emergency first-aid might be going on. In most small theatres today there is no emergency lighting system at all, so some means will have to be figured out to give necessary light in these houses. Besides the battery sets, which are of course excellent, emergency lighting systems on the market include one that can produce about 1,250 watts of electricity. This system is a gas-engine-driven generator that uses about one gallon of gas mixed with oil and can be operated on this amount of fuel over a period of several hours. It has about six plugging boxes into which electric cords of almost any length can be inserted to light up regular mazda lamps. With this system, the unit can be located in a remote spot, preferably in a room having ventilation or windows to carry off the gas exhaust, and the portable cords with lamps can be strung to almost any place where they are required. Such a system is of course much better than the open flame carbide-gas-fed hand lights that should be used only if absolutely necessary.

EMERGENCY WATER

Not to be overlooked is drinking water that will be required, especially under heavy and long blackout, when and if actual raids destroy the main supply any water tanks on the roof. This water could be stored in several one gallon containers, charged and refilled regularly in normal times; or in one large storage tank installed in a safe place, easily available, holding about 275 gallons. Should conditions become serious enough, this storage tank could be connected to the regular water supply pipes, with a cut-off valve, and in addition have a small nozzle about 1½-inch in diameter with valve at the bottom for obtaining drinking water or for connection of fire hose and pump in an emergency. A 275-gallon water tank takes a space 60 inches long by 30 inches wide by 46 inches high, which in most theatres can be spared easily.

FIRE PRECAUTIONS

The regular fire equipment in the theatre should have two heavy iron crow-bars, two long-handled metal shovels, and a metal bin on or near the stage for the storage of sand. The crow-bars would be used in case heavy material collapses on some victim and needs prying away. The long-handled shovels are to enable one to keep away from a fire while throwing sand on it or removing burning portions. In case an incendiary bomb should penetrate through the roof and land inside the theatre, there is very little that can be done except to keep the fire from spreading by using sand, or if available, talcum. Incendiary bombs, when they explode, generate terrific heat—about 5,000° F., which will fuse or melt all ordinary iron. To pick it up by a shovel is out of the question, and the use of water makes things worse.

At present there are three well known types of air raid bombs—the magnesium, incendiary of solidified oil, and the thermite. The use of water on a magnesium bomb scatters the fire. A thermite bomb of about 10 pounds will pierce a ½ inch thick steel plate and burn in a water filled container.

Thermite and magnesium thermite bombs can be fought by the use of water, sand and various special types of extinguishers, mostly to prevent spread of fire. However, when carbon-tetrachloride, which is used in regular-type extinguishers, contacts burning magnesium, it generates phosgene gas, which is deadly. The use of a water spray, particularly when applied from a stirrup or knapsack pump, does an excellent job in controlling the fire, as does a 1½ inch line stretched from a trailer pump equipped with a fog nozzle. Dry sand and foam can be used rather well, though principally as retarders only. Sometimes bombs of burning phosphorus are used for smoke screens in air-raids.

As to the different types of gases used, there are several in a "mustard" group, Lewisite, chlorine and phosgene. Each has its own characteristic odor—mustard: garlic; Lewisite: Geranium; chlorine: fly-paper; phosgene: fresh cut hay.

Of the four, mustard gas affects the exposed parts the most. About 13/1000 of one gram of liquid mustard has a distinct blistering action on the normal skin. For proper protection, clothing must be of a type impervious to the gas, or be chemically impregnated, in addition to the use of a mask. Buildings, etc., contacted by this gas must be decontaminated.

affected by actual raids and patrons are waiting for the "all-clear" signal the ventilating or air-conditioning and exhaust systems should be in operation; however, when there is fire or smoke within the theatre, the air-conditioning system should be shut down; especially the recirculating duct system should be isolated so as not to carry smoke, embers, etc., through the ducts starting new fires as well as forcing this smoke, embers, etc., back into the auditorium at a high velocity. The outside exhaust system should of course be used to carry the fumes, ash, etc., to the outdoors.

If an "alert" signal is given during a show, warning of an approaching air raid, the manager and the appointed employees should proceed promptly (1) to quiet, (2) put out all outside lights, (3) cover any windows, skylights, etc., with "blackout material" and (4) protect areas of glass with barriers. Then be prepared to place the emergency lighting system in operation it needed. Try to keep patrons' minds off the threatening raid—music on the non-sync equipment should be of service here. If the fire or police department is needed, use the regular outside police or fire boxes to notify it. Every minute the manager or "key" employe should give his attention to the patrons so as to avoid, by all means, a general panic.

In this discussion we may have seemed, at least at certain points, unduly alarmed. It is necessary to consider all possibilities, however. The main point is: Be prepared. The public should be made to regard the theatre as one of the safer places to be. Proceed with the training of the staff at once, get protective equipment and supplies promptly upon the advice of the regular and emergency authorities. And if you never have to use either the knowledge or the gadgets, that, of course, will be all to the good.

that should be checked for faults, any of which are found from experience to cause a breakdown or trouble in a theatre motor-generator set in use for some time. Any of the following faults if checked carefully and competently can be fixed by any reliable electrician or electrical repair shop.

SETTING OF BRUSHES

Not set diametrically opposite: Set properly by counting bars or by measurement on the commutator. This can be done if necessary while generator is running by moving rocker arm until brush on one side sparks least, then adjust other brushes.

Brushes not set at neutral points: Move rocker arm back and forth slowly until sparking stops.

Brushes not properly trimmed should be trimmed before starting. If there are two or more brushes at fault, one may be removed and retrimmed. Clean with alcohol or ether, then grind slowly and reset.

Brushes not in line: Adjust each brush until bearing is on line and square on commutator bar; bearing evenly the whole width.

Brushes not in good contact: Clean commutator of oil and grit. See that brushes touch. Adjust tension screws and springs to secure light, firm and even contact. This is usually about 1½ pounds per square inch on the commutator and may be determined by using a "spring balance."

COMMUTATOR CONDITIONS

Worn in grooves on ridges, or out of round: Grind with very fine sandpaper on curved block and polish with crocus cloth. Never use emery in any form. If too bad to grind down, turn off true in a lathe—or better, in its own bearings—with a light tool and reset, using a light cut running slowly. Armature should have 1/16 to 1/8-inch end motion when running to wear commutator evenly and smoothly.

Commutator has high bars: Set high bars down carefully with mallet or block of wood, then clamp tightly end nuts, or file, grind or turn true as required. A high bar may cause "singing."

Low bars: Grind or turn commutator true to the surface of the low bars.

WEAK MAGNETIC FIELD

Broken or short circuit in generator field coils: Repair if external, and rewind if internal.

Machine not properly wound, or without proper amount of iron: The only remedy is to rebuild it.

GENERATOR ARMATURE

Excessive current in generator armature: Reduce excessive load then test out, locate trouble and repair. Ground any leak from short-circuit on line. Dead short-circuit on line may cause this trouble; however, dead short-circuit will, or should, blow safety fuse. In this case, shut down, locate fault and repair before starting again, and put

Emergency Repair of Rectification Equipment

NOW THAT everyone of us has to depend to a greater extent on his own initiative and resourcefulness to get things done for the "duration," it is time to take careful stock of all essential equipment in the theatre. Certain items that could be easily and quickly repaired or serviced through regular channels in normal times, now must be fixed "on the spot" in an emergency. This means that the theatre owner should have a competent service man always available in his theatre, or make connections with a reliable service shop near his theatre to take care of any or all emergencies that may arise.

It is surprising, but true that the theatre in the small outlying districts will probably have less trouble adapting themselves to these abnormal times than those in the larger centers, as they nearly always have had to depend on their own resources pretty much to make repairs in an emergency. These theatres, being a hundred or so miles away from the nearest source of service, or too far away for an emergency call to a regular service man, have had to make emergency repairs the best they could. Far more theatres are going to find themselves in much the same boat.

The main thing is to know how best these repairs can be done, with such facilities as may be on hand. For example, a motor-generator set is one of the most reliable sources of direct-current for the projection arc. It is sturdily built and very dependable, even over a period of years, when kept in good operating condition; but as with any piece of machinery, it requires proper maintenance and even repairs when troubles arise in time. Where there are two motor-generator sets installed, the one good set can readily carry the load of the two projectors while the other is being repaired. But when there is only one motor-generator set, and it breaks down, repairs must be done in a hurry. In any case, there are certain definite items in a new fuse. Make sure that there is no undue friction or mechanical resistance anywhere.

Shore-circuit coils: Remove copper dust, solder or connect other metallic contact between commutator bars. See that clamping rings are perfectly free and insulated from commutator bars, and that there is no copper dust, carbonized oil, etc., to cause electrical leak. Test for cross-connection or short-circuit, and if such is found, rewind armature to correct fault. Make sure that brush holders are perfectly insulated. There should be no copper or carbon dust, oil or dirt to cause an electrical leak.

Armature has broken coils: Bridge the break temporarily by staggering the brushes until generator can be shut down—to save bad sparking—and then repair. If possible, shut down generator completely and repair loose or broken connection to commutator bars. If the coil is broken inside, rewinding is the only positive remedy. Break may be temporarily repaired by connecting to next coil across the mica insulation. Commutator lugs may be soldered together, or a jumper put in to cut out and leave open the broken coil; however, be careful not to short-circuit a good coil in doing this. Cross-connections may have some effect as short-circuit. Each coil should test complete without cross and with no ground.

BEARING TROUBLE

Bearings are worn so that the air gap has been reduced at the lower side of the armature rotor to almost zero: With this condition, the rotor rubs on the stator or outside housing and causes friction, which stops the motor "pull." The only remedy is to replace with new bearings. If bearings get exceptionally hot, this may be due to dirt in the grease, or improper alignment of the motor to the generator. In this case, check also whether the voltage is normal, or if the air-gap is such that it clears both the stator and the rotor. This air-gap clearance is very important for proper operation of the generator. The manufacturer's recommendation for clearances should be followed.

TESTING FOR FAULTS

In "exploring" for common faults in the generator armature and commutator, a simple home-made outfit is easily made that can be used also for locating trouble in any other electrical equipment, including the sound system. This consists of a watch case type of telephone receiver (ordinary buzzer or vibration), two dry-cell batteries, about 24 feet of two-conductor lamp cord, and two wooden handles with steel wire needle points in each.

The buzzer or vibrator and telephone are connected in series in the dry cells circuit. When in use on the generator, the phone is placed on the operator's head and the two needle points are worked over the commutator bars by the hands. The variations—appearance or disappearance of the sound—of the pulsating current in-

MISCELLANEOUS TROUBLES

There are other causes of trouble that is well to know of in checking motor-generator troubles.

Drop in voltage may be caused if the fit of the brushes or the commutator is poor.

Grooves in the face of the commutator by the use of coarse sandpaper or to a part of the brush not touching.

Brushes may be improperly spaced.

Sparking of the brushes: Insufficient pressure of the brushes on the commutator. Brushes burnt on ends. Commutator is rough. Commutator bar is loose or is too high. Commutator is dirty, oily or worn out. Wrong carbon in brushes. High mica. Brushes are loose. Brushes may be wedged in the holders. Brushes not set exactly at the point of commutation. The generator may be overloaded or have an open circuit or loose connection in the armature.

Glowing and pitting of carbon brushes: May be caused by poor design or wrong position of the brushes on the commutator.

Chattering of brushes: Very seldom experienced in theatre motor-generators, but if so, reset brushes so that they trail instead of lead on the commutator about 10° with a radial line passing through center of the carbon and the center of the commutator. When "long" and heavy sparking extends around the entire circumference of the commutator, this may be due to an open armature circuit. When the sparking rings the circumference of the commutator and is of a reddish color, this may be due to carbon dust, oil that is carbonized, paraffin and harmful compound used, wedged in or on the mica insulation between the bars. Where this "ring fire" sparking is a bluish-green color, the fault is in the armature circuit or in undercut commutators. When undercut commutators cause "ring fire," they should be cleaned frequently with a stiff brush to dislodge the foreign materials collected in them.

COPPER DISC RECTIFIERS

In the case of copper-oxide or magnesium-copper sulphide rectifiers there are few moving parts, but the parts that make up the units must be thoroughly understood should trouble arise. Present day rectifiers are nearly troublefree if proper maintenance is practiced. They should be installed in a well ventilated room that has a forced-draft exhaust fan to carry off the heat. When the rectifier bank, rectifier exhaust fan and remote control relay are supplied by a 3 phase circuit only, care should be taken in case of over-heating, that the exhaust fan is exhausting air through the elements instead of pulling in air.

When this fan is found to be pulling in air, any pair of wires in the 3 phase circuit should be reversed to correct the trouble. When it is found that this exhaust fan in the rectifier fails to start by operating the remote control switch, try turning it by hand; then if it still fails to revolve, take off the entire front cover of the rectifier and place an ordinary large desk fan, or two small ones, directly in front to blow air on the rectifying units while in operation until a replacement fan can be obtained.

At this time, it is a good idea to order an extra fan if possible, for just such emergency use, especially if rectifiers are the only means of d. c. are supply.

In case of fan failure, check also the remote control relay in the rectifier to see if the contacts are clean and are making a positive electrical connection. To clean these relay contacts use only #000 or finer sandpaper—and do not use a heavy object to force them into position. Having an extra relay in the projection room for emergency use will come in very handy for quick repairs. Make sure that an extra set of 30-ampere fuses are always available at the rectifier for the 3 phase a. c. supply; and if a single phase a. c. supply is used in addition for the relay circuit, have an extra set of 10 ampere fuses on hand. Never use larger fuses for replacement in an emergency, as in many cases "burn-outs" have resulted by their use with the rectifier in operation.

When there is a "flicker" on the screen and the amperes drop at the lamphouse, a fuse may be blown inside the rectifier. If new fuses continue to blow, the trouble may be in the rectifying bank; or there is an open contact in the control relay making a loose connection. Sometimes a loose connection at the fuse block itself will cause this trouble.

When the ammeter on the lamphouse fluctuates, this may be due to improper carbon trim, poor d. c. arc connection, poor switches, defective fuse, burnt carbon arc jaws, as well as to defective arc control rheostats, potentiometer and arc control motor commutators or brushes. When checking this trouble use only an accurately calibrated ammeter, as the lamphouse meters quite frequently become defective. Also make sure that the arc gap setting is held steady on the arc image card on the lamphouse, which should be about 5/16-inch.

Another possible source of trouble in a rectifier may be the use of flexible wire on the tap connection instead of straps. Use straps of the same type that came with the rectifier; if flexible wire must be used in an emergency, replace with proper straps as soon as possible. In case one rectifier becomes "dead," both arcs can be fed from the other or an adjacent rectifier by disconnecting the d. c. wires from the bad rectifier and paralleling them with the d. c. wires of the good rectifier; however, the polarity must be kept—plus to plus, and minus to minus.

In doing this make sure that the bad rectifier is actually "dead" in order to avoid feeding back through it. Put back the handle on the arc switches in order to operate them and leave the remote control toggle switch of the good rectifier in the "on" position at all times. With an emergency setup of this kind make sure that the two arcs are not "on" at the same time.

TUNGAR BULB RECTIFIERS

In the case of Tungar bulb rectifiers make sure that the room is well ventilated to carry off or reduce excessive heat accumulation. The 3 phase supply should have only fuses of 30 ampere capacity, and the single phase supply for the remote control relays, 15 amperes. When these rectifiers are used on 110-220 volt, single phase, the fuses should be 30 ampere, 110 volt; or 25 ampere, 220 volt. The single pole control switch at the projector should be at least of 10 ampere capacity, and if it causes trouble, a double pole, single throw toggle switch can be used, strapped to operate single pole.

These rectifiers should be located as near the projectors as possible in order to avoid drop in the d. c. lines. Unsteadiness in the arc is found many times to be caused by these rectifiers being too far away from the projectors. The rectifier bulbs should be solid in their sockets and properly connected from the protruding wires on the top to the "pinch" clips on the circuit wires. Never pull these clips off the projecting rods on the top of the bulbs, for harm can thus be done. Always squeeze the clips with the fingers to remove them.

When replacing bulbs always use the same type and capacity as recommended by the manufacturer. A good idea is to have several spare bulbs on hand. When there is loss of amperage, or the ammeter on the lamphouse fluctuates, one or more bulbs may be defective. Sometimes a bulb will light up and still pass no rectified current to the arcs. To check, first turn off the control switch of the rectifier, then turn on the a. c. supply switch and move the rectifier control switch to the first position. The arc should then be struck and if the ammeter shows low amperage, advance the control switch on the rectifier point by point until the proper current is registered (or should be registered). If this does not help, test each rectifier bulb by squeezing the clip off the connection at the top of the bulb and watching if a spark occurs when it is taken off. If there is no spark, the bulb is "dead" and should be immediately replaced. A bad rectifier bulb will cause flicker on the screen since it is designed for "full wave" rectification, and when it becomes "dead" its load is automatically transferred to the opposite tube, resulting in unsteady half-wave "rectification."

If all the bulbs are good, check the d. c. wiring, switches, fuses, rectifier control switch contacts, and the relays. A mercury type relay can give trouble when it is defective or is loosely connected to the circuit. In case the wires are burned or torn loose from the switch, it is best to replace it with a new one, as repairs done by hand on the job cannot equal the factory product. A spare mercury relay should be in the projection room for the relay is of prime importance in proper rectifier operation.

Protection Through Injunction

By RUDOLPH ALLEN

Member New York Bar

WE are all familiar with the fact that when an individual right has been invaded, the person so affected may bring an action at law to recover any sum of damages which he might have sustained.

RUDOLPH ALLEN

The wheels of justice, however they may grind surely, very often move slowly and there are frequently presented problems which must be solved speedily and cannot await the necessary delays of judicial procedure.

In such cases where time is of the essence, there has been provided the quick remedy of injunction. This relief can sometimes be obtained upon the mere submission of affidavits, and although the relief granted may be temporary in nature, its effect will be the same as if it was a final determination of the Court.

In view of the fact that the remedy of injunctive relief is both provisional and drastic, the Courts are very reluctant to grant it unless a definite invasion of personal right has been established and no relief at law would be adequate.

Basis of Injunction Denial

An excellent example of a state of facts where an injunction will not be granted is best illustrated in the case of Message Photoplay Co. Inc. vs Bell, reported in 166 N. Y. Sup. 338.

The plaintiff produced a motion picture film entitled "Birth Control." He incurred considerable expense in advertising and exploitation, and had arranged a gala premiere. It was announced that the picture was suitable only for adults and made no secret of the fact that it contained various scenes depicting numerous methods of preventing gestation.

The Commissioner of Licenses notified the theatre that should the picture be shown, their license would be revoked. The plaintiff applied to the Court for an injunction to restrain the Commissioner of Licenses from revoking the license of the theatre.

The Court refused an injunction contending that a theatre license was a privilege granted by the State and that like all privileges, there were certain obligations that went with it and that one of the important responsibilities of a theatre owner was to see to it that the pictures which he exhibited did not adversely affect the morality, decency, public safety and welfare of the public; that it was solely within the jurisdiction of the Commissioner to determine whether or not any picture interfered with the safety and welfare of the Public; and unless the Commissioner could be charged with bad faith, an injunction against him would not be granted.

There is, however, a leading case of great judicial distinction where injunctive relief was granted. In this case (Peekskill Theatre, Inc. vs Loew's Inc., et al., 200 N. Y. Sup. 726) it appears that the plaintiff constructed a new motion picture theatre known as the Peekskill Theatre. While the building was in the process of construction, certain of the defendants warned the plaintiff that they would be unable to secure films for exhibition in their theatre, and that they, the defendants, would use their offices and influence to that effect.

After the building was completed, plaintiff entered into various contracts with several film producers and distributors. The defendants induced these various distributing companies into breaking their contract with the plaintiff.

An application was made by the plaintiff for an injunction to enjoin the various defendants and all persons acting in concert with them or under their direction from in any way urging, advising, requesting, inducing or coercing or attempting so to do, the distributors of motion pictures not to deal with the plaintiff or to cease dealing with the plaintiff or to bring about the breaking of contracts between producers and distributors of motion pictures and the plaintiff.

The Court, in granting the injunction, strongly criticized and castigated the defendants in language which is seldom used by a Justice of the Supreme Court. In one part of its opinion the Court said:

"Where a wrong is being perpetrated for malicious purposes, the Court will not look for technical reasons to refuse relief; but on the other hand, speedy relief should be granted both that the plaintiff may be protected and that the public may learn that the principles of fair play and free competition are a part of the fundamental and statutory law of this State and the Nation."

And in conclusion, the Court stated:

"This interference must be stopped and the Courts will have no difficulty either by injunction or, if necessary, by the administration of the criminal law, to prevent these unlawful acts. The courts have little patience with those who trifle with the clear legal rights of another."

CHECKING THE SCREEN

A GENERAL check up on the motion picture screen and the manner in which it is installed is an item which should not be overlooked by the exhibitor. The following is a check list which may be used in this connection:

1. Determine if the screen has the ability to reflect as much of the projected light required of it.
2. Determine if the picture size capable of being projected on to the screen is correct for the minimum and maximum viewing distances (multiplying the picture width by 5.55 and by 1.0 gives you the respective maximum and minimum viewing distances).
3. Determine if there is any waste space between the screen and the rear wall of the theatre behind the screen. If there is any more depth in this area greater than that which is needed for the sound amplifying horns, the screen, if at all possible, should be placed closer to the rear wall so that the picture is as far from the first row of seats as possible.
4. The lacing of the screen on to the screen frame should be properly tightened to insure an absolutely flat and true reflecting surface.
5. Reduce the size of the black masking around the projected image to as little as 3" for pictures of 18' and less in width, and 4" for bigger pictures. This masking need not be real black. It is more important that the masking have a high pile or other rough finish to make it light absorbing. The color could be a dark gray if the texture is correct. A check up should be made of the aperture plates in the projectors to determine if any nicks or cuts in them are the cause of any serious irregularity in the outline of the projected image. If the aperture plates are clear-cut there is no reason why the narrow masking recommended cannot be used since the only purpose for masking is to absorb unsteadiness. Large areas of black surrounding the picture are no longer used and no longer proved necessary since adequate illumination of the picture has become a common condition. The poorly illuminated pictures of the past prove to need dark surroundings to make them appear brighter by comparison. The color of the surface beyond the narrow black masking should preferably be of a neutral or gray tone.
6. If any change at all is contemplated in the position of the picture, the distance of the bottom of the picture from the floor at the picture should be adjusted to give the maximum benefit to the maximum number of viewing positions for the purpose of eliminating as much obstruction of the screen image as is possible.

The higher the screen is placed, the more will the seating positions furthest from the screen have an unobstructed view, however, the viewing positions nearest the picture concurrently would become less desirable if the picture proves to be high for them. This is so because of the neck strain caused by the upward angle of vision.

A happy medium should be chosen for the picture position which will improve the rear half of the seating area as much as possible without penalizing the usefulness of the front half of the seating area.

Cooling in 1942 In Spite of Priorities

dehumidifying job as with fin coils with 45° water, or Freon, circulating through them.

UNITS CAN DO THE JOB

I was recently through several air-conditioning manufacturing plants, and I was amazed to see the number of self-contained units that were being made up. I wasn't advised whether or not these units were for defense factories or not, but it seems to me that more of them were being made up than are needed for such purposes, and some manufacturers may have a substantial supply of 5-, 10-, and 15-ton self-contained units. In many of the smaller theatres the employment of one or more of these units may be the simplest way to work out your summer cooling problems. I know some manufacturers have a fair stock of these units, and you should be able to satisfy your needs in this regard if you order early enough.

The greatest need today, however, in solving your air-conditioning problems is a substantial amount of intestinal fortitude and a flare of resourcefulness in working out this application. There is no reason why it will not perform as well as other ways of doing the job.

The first of the year is now here and you should not delay any longer if you want and intend to have summer cooling in 1942. The motion picture theatre, along with the radio and the press, is one of the most effective methods of disseminating information, and it therefore is certainly part of the machinery of defense. And you can't get people into a theatre very often unless it is comfortable.

Another way of looking at it is that physical fatigue and emotional irritations are greatly relieved by the comfort that air-conditioning produces, and the theatre is one of the few sources of such relief in the summertime. To air-condition a theatre this year is not quite so easy as it normally is, but it can be done, and well done, too. Get in touch with manufacturers advertising in this issue. Explain your needs; they will suggest suitable procedure.

A Milk Bar for Spare Lobby Space

THE REFRESHMENT lounge idea, whether it emphasizes health or the sweet tooth, is taking hold in a manner that says some changes are going to be made in many an existing theatre during the year 1942—and afterward.

Were construction of new theatres to continue at a normal rate these coming months, few of the projects would be contemplated without consideration of such facilities. But it is not only in planning a new theatre that suitable accommodations can be supplied; a large percentage of existing theatres are adaptable to the installation of a refreshment bar or lounge in a the latter, the milk and soda bar was located on a mezzanine level, just opposite a general lounge. In the Chateau, an existing property of traditional ornamental styling, similar refreshment facilities have been located in the lobby, where both incoming and outgoing traffic passes them—and the bar, with its candy counter, extends out a little way into the lobby-proper to make sure that no one overlooks it (see accompanying picture).

The bar, built in a horseshoe shape, has soda and related dispensing equipment essentially built in. It is finished in walnut veneer and has a red Formica top. There feasible location, adjoining lobby, foyer or lounge areas.

An interesting and, at least physically a highly successful, instance of such adaptation is the "Milk and Health Bar" that has just been installed in the Chateau theatre in Rochester, Minn. The Chateau is a property of the Minnesota Amusement Company, headed by John Friedl, who first experimented with the idea of an elaborate refreshment layout, with lounge characteristics in the circuit's newly constructed Norshor theatre in Duluth. In are attached counter stools, upholstered in ivory leatherette, to accommodate fifteen.

Besides the usual fountain concoctions, such "health drinks" as papaya, beet, spinach, prune and sauerkraut juice—and of course milk—are also served. Chimes, controlled from the projection room, warn of the beginning of a feature picture.

The public reaction, according to Ray L. Niles, manager of the Chateau, has been excellent, with women's organizations giving this bar full approval as a welcome substitute among youths for the tavern.

F. H. Richardson's COMMENT

Narrowing Exciter Beam For Damaged Tracks

FROM THE supposedly cold winterland of North Dakota—the town of Lisbon—comes a letter by Fred Walls, projectionist at the Scenic theatre, with some constructive thinking and doing about cues and changeovers. Says he:

"It so happens that I let my subscription run out for about a year and have only recently started getting it again, so I am behind in what the other boys are thinking and doing. However, in a recent issue I noted that film mutilation is the present problem and there is one point that has been brought up that interests me—that of excessive mechanism pickup in connection with S. R. P. cues and changeovers. By coming in late I may have missed the vital part of the feature which explains the basis upon which a graduate engineer, among others, centers his comments. I hesitate to challenge this talented gentleman or his judgment, but will stick my neck out with the assertion that mechanism pickup has nothing whatsoever to do with changeovers, except that proper starting frame must first be determined for each installation.

"To illustrate, there are 11 feet between properly spaced cues. Therefore threading 11 feet of leader in the incoming projector (framing on eleven) would provide the flawless changeover if the incoming projector attained full speed the instant the motor cue hit the screen—obviously a mechanical impossibility; yet it represents the fastest pickup imaginable and ample proof that too fast pickup simply does not exist when considering changeovers.

"The equipment I am handling, RCA PG 105, does have fast pickup, and I find that framing on ten with about eight frames turn down, provides the perfect changeover. Have I settled a point or started an argument?

"I am using a gadget that may be of interest to others. It is original with me, but is so simple that undoubtedly it has occurred to some others. About three times a year feature prints arrive with the sound track so badly scratched the noise level over-rides the recorded sound level. Replacement prints are not readily available, so we have been forced to make the best of them. In every case the damage has consisted of a single scratch, often broken up in short sections, causing a machine gun effect.

"With the use of my 'brainstorm' we have run such prints with complete success. We simply narrow down the width of the exciter beam just ahead of where it strikes the film, then by manipulating the lateral guide it is possible to select whatever portion of the sound track has remained undamaged. Narrowing down the beam on the PG 105 is accomplished by the use of a stove bolt in a readily attachable bracket. Screwing the bolt into the beam does the business.

"This idea has been submitted to equipment manufacturers, who have answered that such adjustments are beyond the ability of the average projectionist and that distortion might be introduced. As to the first, let us hope there are few among us who are really so incompetent. As to the other points, obviously the constant amplitude-variable density type of track can be blocked out at any point without distortion. As long as any light gets through the track at all and reaches the photocell the reproduction is faithful, as the track is the same throughout its width (of course, a modern high-grade, properly compensated amplifier is necessary).

"In considering the variable amplitude type of recording, of which RCA is one user, the most common of this type consists of a double transparent line running the length of an opaque track. Modulation causes these lines to widen out with a saw-tooth edge on each inner side of each line. Our present run of such film has a broken scratch running down the center of the track. The beam has been narrowed down to where we are using only one half of the total track area at points of heaviest modulation, and we narrow down to less than one half where the low volume spots prevail. The reason for this is that audible distortion is present if the 'peaks' are cut off, and on heavy volume spots the peaks extend over into the blocked-off area. At such points there is sufficient volume to over-ride the heaviest of noise levels.

Distortion? But Can Audience Tell?

"For those who wish to get technical, we will admit that an oscilloscope would likely show presence of distortion during much of the time we have the gadget in use, but there is no audible distortion—and bear in mind we are running a print which would ordinarily require closing the house. I question the ability of the normal human ear to detect when we have the gadget in use—and our patrons are not provided with oscilloscopes.

"And now as to the film mutilation practice which seems to be most prevalent, that of the cue artists: In 1932 it was my practice to measure off tail footage and add my own bit of damage, which I could easily recognize as a cue, disregarding all others. My only excuse is that I did my dirt at the proper SRP footage when cues had been eliminated by the reel doublers.

"After a few such attempts the boss received a strong letter of protest from the distributor, which ultimately landed, justly, upon my defenseless shoulders. I countered with the argument that I had no desire to manufacture cues and would gladly be relieved of same if the producer would suggest a means of getting along without them. The distributor promptly advised they had conducted a short canvass of the theatres in their city to see what common practice was being used in screening such prints, and that the china marking pencil was the most common. So lay off the small town guy. The city slicker is right in there pitching a pencil and with the approval of at least one major distributor.

"I have long since abandoned any attempt at cue manufacturing, relying solely on the somewhat mutilated SRP, which is usually at proper footage in features and can readily be picked out of the maze of damage with a little practice. The secret, I find, is that the guy who mutilates the SRP cue invariably concentrates on the original as the centre of attack, and therefore the resultant scratch usually jitters in one spot whereas all other homebrew marks are all over the northeast corner of the screen. Also, with quick pickup machines and short leader, it is surprising how readily one can learn the knack of observing the sound on the outgoing short subject and run in the next subject with no losses whatever. Excessive pickup is unnecessary.

"It is glaringly obvious by the location of many of the crudely inflicted cues that there are many operators who actually believe that the start frame must be used over the aperture with no run-down. They have found from experience that the SRP cues then show up too late to avoid flashing an inverted series of numbers on the screen, and actually compensate for this by placing their own cues many feet ahead of the SRP! Education is the only real answer, regardless of what system is used. Film salesmen are gifted with sufficient intelligence usually to impart the necessary information to any so called projectionist and they are constantly in the field.

"It is my opinion that the SRP system is as faultless as possible, that projectionists who ignorantly inflict damage are the entire weakness, not the system. The cue is there originally and is clearly visible if the projectionist will focus his attention on the proper section of the screen and completely disregard the action.

"Let those of us who are dissatisfied with the present system look back a few years to the old cue sheets which were the ultimate in inaccuracy, allowing no provision whatever for differences in projector pickup. Remember the mileage of opaque leader without frame lines? Boy!

"Statistics of recent years estimate the life of the average print in theatre use at 200 runs, as set forth in Motion Picture Almanac. I am not familiar with the practices of the distribution centers, but I should think a record of each print in service would indicate less than 30 to 35 bookings per print. By vigilant observation and simple record of each print by an inspector, it should be an easy matter to segregate cue artists' from projectionists, so the cue artists could be singled out for some badly needed instruction.

"All in all, it's a great occupation and the majority of us engaged in it are interested in its perfection rather than its destruction."

"Piedmont," he writes, "is a town with 1,120 happy souls and about 50 heels. BETTER THEATRES ran an article in one of the 1933 issues about our first theatre, and now we have a new one I want to tell you about.

"Last summer we purchased a building and added 50 feet on the rear, tore out everything except the walls and ceiling. Now we have a 300-seat house we are really proud of. This theatre still has Powers projectors and we challenge anyone to project a steadier and clearer picture than we do. [That's quite a challenge for those projectors to meet!—F. H. R.] If you will observe the photo, you will see that our Powers are a little unusual because of the fact that they have rear shutters. Our other equipment includes Ultraphone sound heads and amplifiers, Jensen woofers and tweeters, Morelite lamps, and Forest rectifiers.

"You may wonder what the little 7½-watt lamp is for on top of the lamphouse. It is connected across the motor arc feed line, and really floats on the line. Our power here is not so steady on voltage, so by the way this light burns, the operator (no, he is no projectionist, but is learning to be one) can tell if his arc is burning properly and how it is feeding. This is a one-man room.

"The little dingbat of a wheel at the bottom of the amplifier is a gear box that has a rod extending through the projection room floor, down into the lobby. This rod has a wheel on the other end by which I regulate the volume of sound from downstairs.

"The shutters on the ports are all on drop-cord fuse and link system. I know the observation ports are large and that they are located too low. The reason for this is that the top of the port is at the auditorium ceiling line. It is not too objectionable, however, because the man in charge of projection usually sits down at the working projector, anyway.

"The distance from the lens to the screen is 104 feet. We use a Hurley screen 12 feet wide, Bausch and Lomb Super-Cinephor lenses, 7-inch e.f.; and an 8x13-mm. carbon combination which, from many tests, seem to give the best results. Note also the Pyrene guns on the back of each stand.

"The projection room itself is 14x14 feet, with an 8-foot ceiling. The front wall of this is of 8-inch concrete, the side walls of Portland cement plaster on metal lath, over metal lumber, and the ceiling is 20-gauge sheet iron riveted to channel irons every 3 inches. The room has passed the Missouri Inspection Bureau of Fire Underwriters 100%. The floor, incidentally, is 4-inch concrete, reinforced by iron rods every 8 inches, running in both directions.

"The picture does not show the rewind bench, wash basin, work table, film cabinets or supply cabinets, all of which are metal. The stand for the stereopticon is an old pin-ball table stand. We also have a two-turntable non-sync machine on the back wall, but the turntable is controlled from the switch on the cabinet to the right of the port.

"Although our room is not as elaborate as some, we believe it is as good as, or better than the average country town projection room and we offer this photo with no apologies.

"Regarding the photo. I used an old 5x7 camera, f/6.3 lens, stopped down to 16, with one lamphouse door open and arc burning, and a 400-watt stereopticon mazda bulb at the right of the right rectifier, back of the camera range. Exposure 2 minutes, over-exposed, and under-developed. I did not use a pan film, so the walls show up lighter than they really are. The top part is buff, the lower part a neutral grey. Picture vision is good.

In a country town—and no apologies.

"We have your handbooks dating from 1914 to the present time. No, Dad, I do not profess to know all there is in them, but I do study them and try to improve myself. Our last projectionist quit last September, notifying me at 9 p.m. and quitting at 11 p.m. I had to pinch hit for 30 days, as there were no available men in this section, and I had to break in a young man. He is doing nicely and some day will be a full-fledged projectionist, if he continues his interest and study."

I am reminded of the many letters asking me how a new man can find an opening. Here is an exhibitor who had to go it alone for 30 days because he didn't have a projectionist available!

He's a Projectionist—So They Put Him in the Band!

SEVERAL YEARS ago I received quite regularly interesting and constructive letters from Albert Cook, projectionist of Helper, Utah. Also, if my memory does not fail me I received, one Christmas, a delectable fruit cake which Friend Cook insisted he made all by his own self. One would think that when the Army reached out its long arm and gathered in a fellow with such talents, they would have assigned him either to a motion picture theatre, or to the kitchen. But listen to this:

"Hello Dad: It has been a long time since I've written, and since the last letter, Uncle Sam has seen fit to draft me into his services, and of all things, he is trying to make a musician of me! Have you ever heard the likes of it! Me, who should be worrying about how to get the dust out of an intermittent sprocket, studying Tchaikowsky, Beethoven and Bach!

"While working in the Strand theatre at good old Helper, Utah (how fine that place seems now that I am away from it!), I practiced a little on the trumpet. I knew a few musicians in the army, so, presto! How to change from projectionist to musician in ten easy lessons.

"I have a chance to work in one of the Army theatres and am saying my prayers that I'll get it. It would be a pleasure to handle their equipment. They have Simplex E-7 with Peerless Magnarc lamps and RCA sound. It is a shame what a beating that fine equipment is taking from the present 'projectionist.'

"It would be a pleasure to hear from you if you can spare the time to write to a lowly private, first class, in the U. S. Army. The address is Band 145th F.A., A.P.O. 40, Camp San Luis Obispo, Calif."

I have included the last paragraph just in case others than I might like to drop a few lines to this "lowly private."

Add to Your Collection: "V" for Film Mutilation

And here's something timely in home-grown cue marks! From Alex G. Barclay, Shaunavon, Sask., Canada, comes this letter.

"I am a projectionist in a small-town Canadian theatre. While I, myself, am not extremely young, I must confess my knowledge of motion picture projection is more or less in its infancy. I am, however, ambitious and conscientious and, I hope, not too old to learn.

"A membership in the Society of Motion Picture Engineers appears to me to be a step in the right direction for one seeking knowledge, so I am asking your advice as to whether or not I am eligible and what benefits this society would have for a man of my ability?

"Cue problems of late have been foremost in your department. I do not wish to heap more curses on this already sore subject, but think you might enjoy hearing of an amusing one we recently received which proves there is at least one patriotic film mutilator on this circuit. This artistic fellow used a large and commanding 'V' instead of the usual scratches, crosses or punch marks."

Almost excuses him—but not quite!

I think it would be a good idea for any projectionist, even though not in a position to attend the meetings, to be an associate member of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. The SMPE Journal can give him a good "feel" of the ramifications of projection, and some of the papers published would be definitely of interest and more or less instructive. Then just to belong to an organization dealing with the technical problems of the field one works in, stimulates interest and pride in that work.

IN WAR TIME

THIS week the United States Census Bureau announced that it had counted a total of 15,115 motion picture theatres. Each of these theatres is an institution of The American Way, intimately related to both the community and national life, and all of its causes.

Inevitably there are concerns about the manner in which the motion picture theatre and its business of exhibition must be involved in the functioning of the nation-at-war.

Two considerations, and only two, control. First, the screen theatre must render such special service as is to be asked for by the Government engaged in the conduct of the war. Second, the theatre must continue to serve its people in the function for which it has been enfranchised, commissioned and supported. That function is entertainment.

The obligations of the theatre are identical with, and a part of, the obligations of citizenship.

The war is being fought for the preservation of the order and manner of life which America has evolved, continues to evolve. A large part of the responsibility for the preservation of this order and manner of living is to be borne now, as always, by the arts of expression and communication, among which the screen holds a place of dominance.

The motion picture and its theatre can make the largest contribution to the national effort in affording normal, competent entertainment service, continuing to do the job in which the art and the industry have been implemented and experienced.

THERE have been, and will be intermittently, flurries of distraction and invasion. The war will be heard from in the theatre in perhaps somewhat the same frequency and intensity as in the home, but in the main the theatre will be a house of refuge, escape and relief from the cares of war just as it has always been delivery from the tedium and woes of all the workaday world.

Immediately at hand is the evidence of Britain where life in the British way goes on, including a healthy attendance at the theatre, with a program that gives five minutes to Government war films from the Ministry of Information and the rest to entertainment, with the American amusement picture as usual the predominant component.

Clearly the biggest single contribution that Hollywood and its production machine can make to the whole cause is the continuing production of competent pictures of entertainment.

At this juncture, too, it may be well to observe that the only important menace of the continuing status of the motion picture as a component of the life of the land is the perhaps inevitable endeavour of certain marginal forces to seek special license for subversive catch-penny productions and devices of operation. Pandering and hungry perversity are willing enough to try to wear the colors of patriotism, no matter how unbecoming.

This is a time when the maintenance of standards of American decency is a vital service of the commonwealth and the kind of a world we have gone to war to save.

This is no time for civilization to lose ground on the home front.

Hollywood, which is always a land of fevers, is running a slightly subnormal temperature just now, while enjoying in spots some acute individual cases of personal war fever. Presently the controlling forces will bring readjustment and Hollywood will plunge back into show business with a quickening pulse.

ALL indications point to an active box office market in the months ahead. The distribution of money in wages, with its spread of buying power among the multitudes, has always brought an upturn in box office receipts and picture grosses. That buying power will be the last and least depressed by taxations. Rationings of gasoline and rubber, while they can and may change the pattern of amusement patronage, will also tend to a compensatory reduction of the competition that the motor car and the open road have long given the theatre. The pressures against installment buying and against the consumption of many kinds of durable goods will also tend to put more jingling money in spenders' pockets—the kind of money that goes to the box office to buy on impulse.

IN this week's issue of Better Theatres will be found an interesting and significant expression from its editor, Mr. George Schutz, bearing on the institutional and community relation of the motion picture theatre. He makes pointed there the significance of certain important atmospheric values that showmanship creates and maintains by a good job of cheerful theatrical housekeeping.

It is to be remembered that to the multitudes the motion picture theatre is an institution of special comfort, elegance, grandeurs and beauties in vivid and enjoyable contrast to their humble and too often drab homes. Nowhere else do many of the patrons have access to this order of environment at so little cost or on any terms at all. To millions the excursion to the movies is an anodyne for the depression of monotonous jobs, and the gloom of hall bedrooms, boarding houses, crowded flats, the tedium of small town, farm and cross-roads life, and the depressions of drab associates and associations. Sophisticates may smile at the pretensions and goldbraid of screen theatre operation, but they are required components of the business of running everyman's palace.

The inevitable trend of our war time economy and its programs of taxation is to reduce the capacity of the multitudes to buy luxury in the home. We are coming swiftly into the period when there will be much less cream on the top of the bottle. And so the motion picture theatre with its flamboyances and gaieties of light and color and textures represents a maximum service to a whole public with a minimum customer cost, an efficient pooling of buying power.

So long as the motion picture is competently produced and the motion picture theatre is competently operated there will be about fifteen thousand places to go and, for an hour or two, relax with make-believe and put away care. That's service.

The Cost of War

THEATRE admissions will yield approximately $122,600,000 in Federal taxes for the 1941-42 fiscal year ending July 1st, President Roosevelt told Congress Wednesday in his annual budget message. He added that the collections might increase to $159,600,000 for the 1942-43 fiscal year.

Original estimates placed theatre tax collections at $70,963,094 for this fiscal year. But the elimination of exemptions, effective last October 1st, added approximately $50,000,000 more to this amount. In 1940-41 theatre collections amounted to only $21,887,916.

The budget message disclosed war expenditures of 59 billion dollars during the coming year, requiring, the President said, 9 billion dollars in additional taxes.

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau is expected to tell the House Ways and Means committee next week how it may raise this nine billion dollars. Other aspects of the budget are reported on page 24.

Stromberg & Wallis

HOLLYWOOD at midweek hummed with speculation on its favorite theme, the transferring of top production talents from studio to studio. Names in the gossip were those of Hal Wallis, executive producer, long in charge of Warner product activity, and Hunt Stromberg, generally regarded as MGM's Number One producer. Delay in renewal of the Wallis contract, now in negotiation, gave rise to reports ranging from complete severance of relations with the studio in favor of a United Artists deal shared with Maurice Silverstone, to the setting up of an independent Wallis unit to produce films for Warner distribution. Variants between these were plentiful and unsubstantiated, neither Wallis nor Warners talking for the record.

It was a short cut, as Hollywood gossip travels, for speculation to link with the Warner situation the action of Hunt Stromberg in tendering his resignation to MGM without revealing reasons or plans. Acceptance of the Stromberg resignation, like renewal of the Wallis contract, continues to hang fire. Next to the war, the movings or stayings of the two producers was Hollywood's liveliest conversational topic of the week.

Hunt Stromberg, since 1925, has been responsible for many of MGM's outstanding pictures, among them, "Pride and Prejudice," "Susan and God," "Northwest Passage," "Another Thin Man," "The Women," "Idiot's Delight," "Sweetheart," "Marie Antoinette," "The Great Ziegfeld,"

Mr. Stromberg's contract has until 1944 to run. It calls for a salary of $5,000 weekly, plus 1.05 per cent of the company's profits. He received the profit-sharing contract in January, 1938, along with new profit-sharing arrangements for Messrs. Mayer, Lichtman, Rubin, Mannix, Katz, Hyman, Weingarten, and Benjamin Thau, in percentages ranging from Mr. Thau's seven-tenths of one per cent, to Mr. Mayer's 6.77 per cent.

Pathe Lab Buys PRC

PURCHASE of the controlling interest in Producers Releasing Corporation by Pathe Laboratories, Inc. this week linked the oldest and one of the newest corporate names in the film industry. O. Henry Briggs, president of PRC announced the stock purchase by Pathe at New York on Wednesday.

The transfer, he said, does not affect the territorial franchises or operations of the 28 PRC distributing exchanges. The present management headed by Mr. Briggs and Leon Fromkess, vice president, continues in office. The stock was purchased principally from the franchise holders. Robert Young represented Pathe in the negotiations.

An expansion of PRC operations will probably follow the association between the two companies Mr. Briggs indicated. A detailed statement of plans now being formulated will follow the PRC annual meeting.

Stabilizing Canada

CANADIAN exhibitors looked this week to R. G. McMullen, newly appointed Director of Theatres and the Film Branch of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board to solve some of the industry problems which have followed the pegging of admission prices.

Film rentals may also be stabilized by government order, Mr. McMullen indicated, at a meeting in Toronto, Monday, with 40 independent theatre operators. Exhibitors have been demanding that film costs be held constant as long as admission prices are frozen under the wartime controls.

Following the meeting, unaffiliated theatre owners formed an association to represent them in negotiations with the Government board and Mr. McMullen's office. Henry Falk, of Toronto, was named president of the group. The Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors Association this week also elected B. Axler, of Kingston, Ont., its president.

Subsidies will not be granted the film industry to meet higher prices on essential imported equipment the Dominion government announced meanwhile. Certain other industries subject to price control have been granted government aid to offset the higher costs of imported equipment whose price control cannot be controlled by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board. The film industry, it appears will have to absorb the higher price of film projectors and other equipment. Admission price curbs prevent exhibitors from sharing increased costs with the public.

War Notes

REPRESENTATIVES of Eastern theatre circuits and independent exhibitors were to meet in Washington Friday with representatives of the electrical appliances and consumers' durable goods branch of the U. S. Office of Production Management, to canvass the problems confronting exhibitors as the result of shortages of critical materials.

The meeting was called on short notice, invitations being sent out only Monday, January 6th, with a view to ascertain how the material requirements of the theatre branch will be met. A. Julian Brylawski, former MPTOA official, is in charge of film priorities for the OPM.

Invitations to participate in the discussions were sent to Joseph Bernhard, Warner Bros.; George Schaefer, RKO; Sidney Samuelson, Pennsylvania Allied; Carter Barron, eastern district manager of Loew's Theatres; William Crockett, president, Virginia MPTO; Abram F. Myers, Allied general counsel; Arthur Lockwood, Connecticut MPTO; Frank Horning, Maryland MPTO; Charles A. Arrington, North and South Carolina MPTO; and Si Fabian, New Jersey Circuit owner; Nathan Yamins, Fall River, Mass.; Knute Carskadon, Keyser, W. Va.; Kenneth Duke, Leonardtown, Md., independent exhibitors.

OPM officials in Washington, Tuesday, declined to discuss Capital reports that the industry might be asked to go on a single-feature basis, to reduce production in order to preserve materials which could be used in war manufacturing. It was implied, however, that there was no likelihood of interfering at this time with affairs of the motion picture industry.

Mrs. FDR, Co-Worker

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT once again demonstrates the solidarity of the working classes. Tuesday night she refused to pass a musician's picket line in front of the Mansfield Theatre, New York, housing "In Time to Come," which has for the leading character the late President Wilson and for plot Wilson's attempt at world peace by the League of Nations. A rather pertinent subject.

Seeing New York musicians' Local No. 802 pickets, Mrs. Roosevelt turned about, after saying: "I cannot cross a picket line."

Companion to Mrs. Roosevelt's at the picket line episode was Joseph Lash, general secretary of the International Student Service—about whom columnist Westbrook Pegler has written.

Can't Happen There

LAST week's news of the New York Film Critics selection of Orson Welles' "Citizen Kane," RKO, as the picture of the year filtered into Hollywood via radio, by direct wire to studios, and by press wire services, but not via the news columns of William Randolph Hearst's Los Angeles Examiner. Preserving the record of ignoring Mr. Welles' picture, which is not named in the Examiner advertisements of the theatres which exhibit in the area, the newspaper also ignored the Critics Circle's awards to Gary Cooper, Joan Fontaine, John Ford and the fact that an awarding of any kind had taken place.

Good New Year

1942 GOT OFF to a flying start at most of the country's box offices, war or no war, continuing the recent marked upturn.

Film houses along New York's Broadway reported skyrocketing grosses for New Year's holidays. The Roxy and Paramount established new records. At the Paramount, a record was shattered Saturday when Paramount's "Louisiana Purchase" turned in an estimated $25,000. Ending its first week on Monday night, the film brought $93,000, playing to an estimated 200,000. "Remember the Day," 20th Century-Fox, at the Roxy, broke another record, finishing its first week with $99,800.

At the Radio City Music Hall, MGM's "Babes on Broadway" drew $72,500 Thursday through Sunday. The film's predecessor, "H. M. Pulham, Esq." took in $202,000 during a 13-day run. The Music Hall grossed $320,000 in the three weeks beginning December 18th.

Out-of-town openings also drew heavily. Goldwyn's "Ball of Fire" nosed out "Kitty Foyle" top grosses by 20 per cent, said RKO. "The Man Who Came to Dinner" opened to business reported to be from 40 to 220 per cent ahead of last year in the same situations. "Louisiana Purchase" and "Bahama Passage," Paramount reported, were running well ahead of last year's holiday attractions.

"Forty Thousand Horsemen," produced by Goodwill Pictures, in its second week at the New Mayfair, Baltimore, broke house records and was held for a third week.

From the Walt Disney office in New York it was announced on Monday that "Fantasia" would return to the Broadway Theatre in New York on a continuous run policy, beginning Saturday, following close on "Dumbo." "Fantasia" ran 51 weeks at the Broadway last year.

That Inquiry

IT ISN'T debatable now whether to make pictures with war themes.

And so, coincidentally, there formally ended in Washington Tuesday the long dragging Wheeler-Clark Senate subcommittee hunt for "war propaganda" in films. Dissolution of the subcommittee of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee was formally announced in a letter by subcommittee chairman Senator D. Worth Clark, Idaho, to Senator Burton K. Wheeler, Montana, chairman of the full committee:

"In view of the fact that our country is now at war" . . . "quite controversial" . . . "in the interest of national unity."

The letter was studded with such phrases.

The propaganda inquiry, repeatedly postponed since hearings last September, which virtually put industry leaders on trial without rights of legal trial—had been virtually dead since then.

STUDIOS CAST 'MONEY-MAKING' STARS IN HUNDRED ASSIGNMENTS FOR '42

Shortage of Name Talent in Hollywood Adds Pictures to Schedules of Winners in Annual Poll of Exhibitors

Name-conscious Hollywood has placed the first 25 Money-Making Stars of MOTION PICTURE HERALD-FAME's newest poll of exhibitors in 100 assignments.

Some of the pictures already have been finished and some are now in work. All are announced, however, as for the balance of this season's schedules.

Hollywood ascribed added significance to the poll in view of the current shortage of "name" talent and the premiums placed on the services of top players.

One star has had a total of eight pictures announced for him, two of which are finished.

Other casting assignments will be made shortly to round out the schedules. Shortage of top talent is counted a serious "bottleneck" in production at this time.

Three for Rooney

Mickey Rooney, again the Number One box-office star, in currently working in MGM's "The Courtship of Andy Hardy," and has on his schedule "Babes in Hollywood," a sequel to "Babes in Arms," and "Girl Crazy" to do before making another Judge Hardy Family series picture.

Number Two Star Clark Gable, whose box-office longevity, is something of a record, has "Somewhere I'll Find You," newspaper story, and "This Strange Adventure" to do at MGM. His last release was "Honky Tonk," with Lana Turner.

The meteoric Abbott and Costello, who placed Third, are now working at MGM in "Rio Rita," and have finished "Ride 'Em, Cowboy" for February release at Universal. "Pardon My Sarong" and a murder mystery with a radio studio background are also on top for the pair at Universal. Under the "Rio Rita" deal, MGM has a right to exercise an option for another picture for them.

With two pictures, "Nothing but the Truth" and "Louisiana Purchase," now in release, Bob Hope has one of the busiest schedules of top players. The radio-film star who broke into the voting of the showmen with fourth place has six pictures to do, should they all materialize. Announced for some time is "Treasure Chest," which he will do for Samuel Goldwyn, but for which no release has been set; and, at Paramount, he is currently working in "My Favorite Blonde," with Madeleine Carroll. Others set for him are "Road to Morocco," "Road to Moscow," "The Murder Farm," and "Ready Money."

Spencer Tracy, Number Five in the selection of the exhibitors, has just finished "Woman of the Year" with Katharine Hepburn at MGM and is working in "Tortilla Flat." His next will be with Miss Hepburn in "American Cavalcade," announced last week as a history of America from the time of the Pilgrims to the present war.

Cowboy Gene Autry, Number One Western Star and Number Six in the general poll, has a busy schedule ahead of him at Republic. This week he starts "Dusk on the Painted Desert," an din February goes into "Home in Wyomin'." "Call of the Canyon," to be made as a western "special" with a high budget, is next, with "The Gay Ranchero" to follow.

"KEEP 'EM YOUNG," SAYS THE 'POST-DISPATCH'

Taking editorial cognizance of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD-FAME "Money-Making Stars" poll (Dec. 27), which determined Mickey Rooney as the box-office champion, the Pulitzer-owned St. Louis POST-DISPATCH last week pleaded with "movie moguls, spare that young man a few more years of amusing youth."

The newspaper pointed out that in the space of a few short years, "we've seen Rooney shooting up from a callow youth to a grave and dignified college student and at this rate, it will be only a short time until middle age has crept into his hardening arteries and again a bit until senility has withered his frame." The editorial added that the sight of "Andrew Hardy dandling his grandchildren on his knee might not prove so diverting."

The POST-DISPATCH said Mr. and Mrs. America did not prefer Lana Turner, Clark Gable, Hedy Lamarr, Bette Davis as a steady dish. "No, it's Rooney the nation demands and Rooney it will get."

"Pride of the Yankees," biography of Lou Gehrig, will be Gary Cooper's next picture for Samuel Goldwyn, who has set no release plans for the picture. Cooper, Number Seven in the exhibitors' voting, may be loaned to Paramount for the role of Robert Jordan in "For Whom the Bell Tolls."

Another busy actress is Bette Davis, whose most recent picture, "The Man Who Came to Dinner," is awaiting release. She is currently appearing in Warners' "In This Our Life," and has "Ethan Frome" on her schedule. Announced for "The Gay Sisters" and "The Damned Don't Cry," she was relieved of those assignments in order to lighten her schedule. Ida Lupino has been set for "The Damned Don't Cry." Miss Davis achieved eighth place in the Poll.

James Cagney, Number Nine, is currently working in "Yankee Doodle Dandy," and his "Captains of the Clouds" is awaiting release at Warners.

Four for Judy Garland

Four pictures await Judy Garland's attention at MGM. She will be co-starred with Mickey Rooney in "Babes in Hollywood," and do the top roles in "The Youngest Profession," story of autograph hunters, and two musicals, "Very Warm for May" and "Girl Crazy."

In 11th place is Tyrone Power, who has five pictures set at 20th Century-Fox. Awaiting release is "Son of Fury," and he is currently working in "This Above All." Being prepared for him are "The Gift of the Magii," "The Black Swan," and "The Gentleman from Carolina."

Alice Faye, in 12th place this year, has retired from the screen for a year because of family reasons.

James Stewart, in 13th place, is still in the Army, having been given a second lieutenant's commission.

Warners has four pictures set for Errol Flynn, in 14th place. In a switch of schedule, he will next do "Desperate Journey," instead of "Gentleman Jim," the latter based on the life of James Corbett, boxer. Also on schedule are "The Sea Devil" and "Captain Horatio Hornblower."

With "Malaya" and "The Fleet's In" finished, Dorothy Lamour, holder of the 15th spot, as "Road to Morocco," "Amateur Admirals," and possibly "Dark of the Moon" to do for Paramount.

"Song of the Islands" having been finished, Betty Grable, in 16th position, next will do "White Collar Girl" and "Coney Island."

Currently working in "Holiday Inn" with Fred Astaire at Paramount, Bing Crosby, who placed 17th, has "Road to Moscow," "Road to Morocco," "Happy Go Lucky," and "Manhattan at Midnight" on his program there.

The future will be extremely busy for Ginger Rogers. The star, who is in 18th position in the poll, has just finished "Roxie Hart" and "Tales of Manhattan" at 20th Century-Fox, and has announced to co-star with Cary Grant in Gabriel Pascal's "Arms and the Man." However, since then, Pascal has left RKO, which was to have released the picture, and is negotiating with United Artists. Whether the cast remains the same in the new deal remains to be seen. Nevertheless, 20th Century-Fox is preparing "Self-made Cinderella" for her and RKO has "Behold the Bridegroom" and "There Goes Lona Henry" as possible vehicles for her. Paramount is preparing "The Crystal Ball" for her.

With "Steel Cavalry" awaiting release, Wallace Beery is working in MGM's "Jackass Mail," and is announced for Universal's "Butch Minds the Baby."

Benny for Fox, Paramount

Jack Benny, who will make one picture annually at both 20th Century-Fox and Paramount, has just finished "To Be or Not to Be" with Carole Lombard for Alexander Korda-United Artists, and reports soon to Warners for "The Widow Wouldn't Weep." "George Washington Slept Here" is also set for Benny at Warners. No vehicles have been announced for Benny at 20th Century-Fox or Paramount yet.

Robert Taylor's next role will be opposite Norma Shearer in "Love Me Not," from the play "Strictly Platonic," at MGM. He is announced for "The Gentleman from West Indies," based on the life of Thomas Jefferson. "Johnny Eager," in which he stars with Lana Turner, is being released this month.

Twentieth Century-Fox has no pictures set for Don Ameche, who, although announced for the role of Paul Dresser in "My Gal Sal." Studio executives did not want to permit him to enact the role of another songwriter, after he had portrayed Stephen C. Foster in "My Old Kentucky Home." His last was "Confirm or Deny."

Cary Grant is starred in the forthcoming Warners' picturization of "Arsenic and Old Lace," and is currently working with Jean Arthur and Ronald Colman in Columbia's "The Gentlemen Misbehave," formerly called "Mr. Twilight." He has a commitment at RKO, in addition to the Pascal assignment, "Arms and the Man."

Deanna Durbin has been under suspension at Universal, over a contract dispute. Her next was to have been "They Lived Alone."

William Powell's next will be an untitled "Thin Man" picture with Myrna Loy at MGM. Robert Riskin was engaged last week to do the screenplay.

15,115 THEATRES AND 10,029,009 SEATS COUNTED BY U. S. CENSUS

Census Bureau Reports 3,872 Houses Gross Over $50,000 Annually and 3,964 Take in Less Than $10,000 a Year

by FRANCIS L. BURT in Washington

There were 15,115 theatres in the United States, seating a total of 10,029,009, operating with an annual gross income of $673,045,000, according to the last count by the United States Government, the Census Bureau in Washington disclosed at midweek.

The count, made for the turn of 1939-40, was for the regular quadrennial theatre business census, conducted as in other large industries of the country. Because of the vast clerical work involved, results are not made public until many months following completion.

The Bureau revealed that not all of the $673,045,000 gross represented admissions, showing that sales of candy and other merchandise and receipts from other sources totaled $13,600,000, leaving the figure for actual admissions at $659,445,000.

The Bureau showed that the 15,115 houses counted compared with 12,024 in 1935-36 and the last receipts of $673,045,000 with $508,196,000 in 1935.

The legitimate stage appears to have accomplished something of a comeback in the four years between censuses. The Bureau report showed that there were 231 legitimate stage and opera houses and theatrical productions with a total revenue of $32,461,000 in 1939-40, compared with 158 theatres, with a revenue of $19,630,000, in 1935-36.

Details of the manner in which the nearly one billion amusement dollars spent in 1939-40 was divided among the several branches of the industry are shown in the following table:

ROCKEFELLER AND WHITNEY HIRE DISNEY TO MAKE GOODWILL FILMS

South American Cartoons To Be Produced at Cost in the Home of Mickey Mouse; Use of Native Folklore Planned

Walter Elias Disney, the creator of Mickey Mouse and Minnie Mouse, of Snow White and Dumbo, Pinocchio, Fantasia, et al, who emerged, last October from a tour of South America as Hollywood's No. 1 "Ambassador of Latin American Goodwill"—after others had been delegated to the same task both by filmland and the White House—has been selected by Nelson Rockefeller and John Hay Whitney as first Hollywood producer of motion pictures specifically intended to carry a message of democracy and friendship below the Rio Grande.

The overall commission to improve goodwill, conceived by the U. S. as a result of the encroachments by the Axis Powers, was assigned to the Motion Picture Section of the Office of Inter-American Affairs by direct Presidential Order, in February, 1941, under a special Executive budget.

Besides pictures to come from the Disney Studios in Hollywood, the Rockefeller-Whitney unit will circulate others in South America, obtained from many sources, but, only a few of them produced on special order. Typical of the others are those already obtained, some of them now on the high seas, about molecules, cardinals and cows, birds and bees, technology and travels. These and others about the American Way of Life, coming from some U. S. film distributors, the government, aircraft and other manufacturers, from health and social organizations, documentarians and whatnot, listed in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on December 27th, page 31.

Plans Completed

The motion picture division of the office of Inter-American Affairs has completed arrangements for half of Mr. Disney's time as a production adviser and will use a large section of the Disney studio for the production of short subjects with Latin American background, or destined for South American distribution. Mr. Whitney, as head of the film section of the Rockefeller Office, is understood to have made arrangements with Mr. Disney for his services.

"Disney is the greatest goodwill ambassador of our time" an executive of the government committee in charge of the exchange of films between the U. S. and South America observed. "People all over the world know Disney and love his characters." He indicated that they would believe Disney's message of Americanism.

This message, the aim of the films program of the Rockefeller office, as stated by Mr. Whitney in November, is to "show the truth about the American way." It was made clear then that the program is nowise a propaganda project. Rather, Mr. Whitney, declared, it involves the interchange between the American republics of cultural and informative motion pictures.

A member of Mr. Whitney's staff, confirming the arrangements with Mr. Disney said the South American cartoons would be produced at cost for distribution by the non-

FILM CAMPAIGN vs. WAR NEWS

In an effort to regain lost patronage since the advent of the war and re-interest the public in things cinematic, Bernard Haines, manager of the Plaza Theatre, Perkasi, Pa., opened an institutional campaign. The slogan of Mr. Haines' drive is "Replace Rumor with Humor—Go to the Movies."

theatrical division of the Inter-American affairs. They will center chiefly on educational themes.

Additionally Mr. Disney will augment his 1942 program of short subjects with a series of cartoons using material gathered during his recent research journey through South America. These will be distributed in English and in Spanish and Portuguese versions, it was said, by RKO-Radio as part of its regular commercial program. At least 12 of these subjects are already in story preparation or on the drawing boards at the Disney studio.

Characters in the South American pictures will be drawn from the folklore and animal life sketched and studied by Mr. Disney and his staff during their tour. Many traditional Spanish American and Brazilian stories will be used.

Disney Urges Tours

Mr. Disney, on his return from South America, warned that conscious "South American touches," aimed specifically at the Latin American market do not build goodwill for Hollywood. In an interview in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for October 25th he urged Hollywood writers, producers and directors to go themselves to South America to "discover and use the wealth of native color and story material" there.

"In itself this is a superb source of film entertainment, not just dressing" he said and outlined his plans for using the material gathered on his trip. The government contract is expected to greatly increase the opportunity to use this subject matter for goodwill purposes.

Priority will be granted to the Whitney committee pictures by the Disney studio, it was reported. The agreement with Mr. Disney, it is understood, calls for the services of all animators, story experts and other members of the Disney staff on a cost only basis. Mr. Disney, without personal recompense, will devote half of his time to supervision of the Whitney pictures.

The Disney studios are already engaged in a number of wartime film projects. These include 20 aircraft recognition pictures for the U. S. Navy, defense bond campaign pictures for the Treasury department and civilian defense, military insignia and other allied projects.

Current programs will be completed as swiftly as possible. Future government demands on the Disney studio, according to Washington reports, will all channel through the Whitney group.

On Monday Mr. Disney, his brother and business manager, Roy, Joe Grant and Richard Huemer, story editors, and other members of the Disney staff met in Washington with Henry A. Morgenthau, secretary of the treasury. The conference, it was reported, outlined a program of short subjects in which Disney characters will promote the sale of war savings bonds and stamps. Presumably the pictures will be released through the motion picture War Activities Committee.

Hollywood cooperation in the program of the Whitney committee is now 100 per cent according to reports to the Whitney office in New York. Previously there had been indications of conflicting advice to producers from their own Latin American experts, the Production Code Administration, and the Motion Picture Society for the Americas, Hollywood committee founded under the Whitney auspices.

Addison Durland, appointed to the review board of the Production Code Authority as a Latin American expert, is now reviewing all scripts for details that might be inadvertently offensive to South America.

Additionally studio Latin American experts are checking production and suggesting scenes and details which will help to clear up Latin American misunderstandings about the United States. Proposals for a central clearing house for such suggestions, to make them available for all production, have also been voiced. They are under consideration and it is considered likely that the Motion Picture Society for the Americas in cooperation with the Whitney office will work out a specific list of do's and don'ts to guide producers.

Government Shipping Subjects

Production of the non-theatrical short subjects which are being shipped southward by the U. S. government, the Whitney group is being speeded up as much as possible, the Whitney office reported. Since publication of the first list of 42 non-theatrical subjects selected by Kenneth MacGowan's documentary section of the Whitney office for South American distribution on the number of reels ready or almost ready for shipment has been increased to 51, it was reported.

Another 100 pictures are in various stages of preparation. A large number of these are in the hands of the Museum of Modern Art in New York City where they undergo cutting, editing and the addition of Spanish or Portuguese sound tracks. The Museum, which is a non-profit educational organization endowed by Rockefeller, Guggenheim and Whitney money, is processing the U. S. films in the film library headed by John A. Abbott and Iris Barry. It has a cost contract with the office of Inter-American affairs. Nelson A. Rockefeller resigned as president of the museum last year. John Hay Whitney is still a member of the board of trustees.

The Museum, under supervision of Mr. MacGowan handles all sound tracking, cutting and editing. Spanish and Portuguese narrations are written and prepared by Museum personnel and they frequently suggest rephrasing and changes of emphasis to fit Latin American distribution.

Reviewers employed by the Museum have the task of giving first scrutiny to all pictures submitted for distribution by the government. To date they, with members of Mr. MacGowan's staff, have viewed approximately 1,500,000 feet of film.

Synopses of all pictures are prepared for the Whitney office along with recommendations that the film be given further consideration and personal inspection by Mr. MacGowan or his staff, or dropped. The Museum staff, on films that are under consideration for shipment Southward, also makes recommendations for editing, consolidating and rewriting. Final approval of all changes is left in the hands of the government agency, with the Museum handling all of the physical work. The contract calls for delivery of the pictures to the Whitney office ready for shipment.

United Artists Sets Up Three Sales Divisions

As an important step in the realignment of the United Artists sales setup, Carl Leserman, general sales manager of the company, announced Monday in New York, the creation of three divisions in place of the two now in operation. To the eastern division, headed by Harry L. Gold, and the western division, headed by Bert M. Stearn, has been added the Canadian division with David Coplan as division manager.

The Canadian exchanges heretofore included in the western division will now operate as a separate entity in the United Artists sales organization. Mr. Leserman also announced the transfer of the exchanges in the southern district, including New Orleans, Dallas, Atlanta, and Charlotte—to the western division under Mr. Stearn.

District Realigned

At the same time a realignment of the exchanges in the district under the supervision of Jack Goldhar was announced. These will now include Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Pittsburgh, and will be under the eastern division's supervision.

A realignment of the far western district under W. E. Callaway now includes the territories of Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Salt Lake City and Denver.

Mr. Leserman left New York Monday night for a meeting which was held in Cleveland on Tuesday with Mr. Goldhar and the following branch managers: M. Dudelson, Harris Dudelson, Nat Beier, G. R. Frank and James Hendel. In Cleveland, Mr. Leserman also attended a testimonial dinner to Bert M. Stearn, recently appointed western division sales manager.

On Wednesday, Mr. Leserman met in Chicago with Mr. Stearn; Charles Stearn, district manager of the Chicago territory, and the following branch managers: Ralph Cramblatt, J. S. Abrose, Ben J. Robins, D. V. McLucas and William E. Truog.

At the meetings, Mr. Leserman discussed the completion of the current season's selling, dating and liquidation, and presented the set-up for new productions to be released by United Artists during the remainder of the season.

Film Collection Presented

King Vidor, motion picture director and native of Texas, and E. B. Coleman, MGM publicist, presented the first collection of film material to be used for research to the University of Texas in Austin, Tex. The donation included model sets, costume designs, film scripts and production stills.

Universal Borrows George Raft

Universal has borrowed George Raft from Warner Brothers for the starring role in a modernized version of "Broadway," which was made by the company 12 years ago. Bruce Manning will produce and do the script with Felix Jackson.

British War Theme Films Continue

More feature films about the war are coming from Great Britain. The first of the current product to be completed will be "Life Line," a story of German intrigues in the Near East, while another due for early filming is "Revolt," a story of the growing sabotage movement in Nazi-occupied Europe.

A new Will Hay comedy is "The Goose Steps Out" in which the comedian finds himself masquerading as a Nazi professor in a German university. Tommy Trinder, who gained recognition for his performance in "Sailors Three," will appear in a sequel to this film, in which he plays the part of a Cockney soldier in the real life story of a British factory foremen who journeyed across France at the time of the Nazi invasion, bringing to safety some valuable British machinery. United Artists will distribute these films which will be made at the Ealing studios.

Consumer Co-op Film Debuts

Premiere of "Here Is Tomorrow," a dramatized documentary produced for the Cooperative League of America by Documentary Film Productions, Inc., was held Friday night at the Museum of Modern Art in New York. Willard Van Dyke and Herbert Kerkow directed the picture which tells the story of how 2,000,000 people in the U. S. organized consumer cooperatives for such purchases as groceries, fuel, farm equipment, clothing and other commodities.

"Here Is Tomorrow" is a three-reel 35 mm. sound picture which the League plans to distribute both theatrically and non-theatrically. Phil Brown, actor in the cast of "H. M. Pulham Esq." and Jabez Gray, actor in summer stock theatres, are in the picture.

Preceding the opening of the picture, Francis Hackett, author of "I Chose Denmark" and "What Mein Kampf Means to America" was scheduled to speak.

Barthelmess, Stewart In War

New Trust Suits Facing Networks

The U. S. Government struck again at alleged radio network monopolies, this time through the courts, when on New Year's Eve at Chicago the Department of Justice acting under the Sherman anti-trust law filed complaints in U. S. District court against the two leading networks.

The two civil suits were filed by Daniel Britt, head of the anti-trust division of the Department of Justice in Chicago, against the Radio Corporation of America, the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting System to break up, what are charged to be, monopolistic holdings and to enjoin network owners from practices through which it is averred they control the industry.

Mr. Britt said his action was independent of the FCC network dissolution order, an appeal from which is now pending in the New York federal court. The Chicago case is a legal proceeding as distinguished from FCC administrative regulation.

At New York this week it was considered probable that network attorneys would seek a consolidation of the Chicago case, and the action which they filed at New York to test the legality of the FCC order.

Restraint Charged

The midwest suits charge that the defendants "unreasonably restrained commerce in radio broadcasting and electrical transcriptions" and prevented "unknown thousands of listeners" from hearing programs of a quality expected in a competitive industry. One of the complaints basically seeks to restrain all of the defendants from entering into an exclusive contract with any radio station, from signing any radio station contract for more than two years, and from barring transcription manufacturers from "reasonable access" to their studios for the placement of recordings.

The suits, Mr. Britt said, seek to dislodge the system of ownership and licenses through which the chains are alleged to dominate present-day broadcasting. They charge further that the chains made contracts with affiliated stations forbidding the latter to use programs from other networks even at times when the stations were not engaged by the chains.

It was asserted also that the "competitive advantage enjoyed by the defendants in the talent field" discriminated against thousands of entertainers and was reducing the number of talent-management services.

In a statement issued in New York, William S. Paley, CBS president, said the Chicago proceeding "is evidently an outgrowth of the persistent attempts by the FCC to tear apart the present system of network broadcasting in favor of its own impractical theories."

"The commission has issued a series of regulations which it describes as the promotion of competition and which we described as the promotion of chaos. We argue this chaos will be at our expense and, more importantly, at the expense of the listening public, and that freedom of the air will be destroyed if the commission is able to seize power which will make all broadcasters completely subservient to it."

Niles Trammell, president of NBC, said: "Substantially, these same matters are already in suit in a case brought by the National Broadcasting Company against the FCC in the federal court in New York, which is already set for hearing during the next two weeks. Why another suit was brought in Chicago on the same matters prior to the determination in New York of the powers of the FCC, we are at a loss to understand."

EXHIBITORS DOING FULL TIME JOB ON PART IN NATIONAL EMERGENCY

Industry Cooperating Fully with Military and Civil Plans; Production of Training Films Set; Stamp Sales Boosted

As box-offices revive, after the first alarms of a country at war, the country's theatre owners, like the organized production and distribution industry, and theatrical labor continue to form plans to combat panic among patrons, and provide cooperation with army and civil defense organizations.

Too, they are devising myriad ways of boosting the country's defense efforts. They sell bonds and stamps; they give stamps; they collect paper and rubber, as they collected aluminum; they assume posts of public importance; they join the army; they run trailers; they give special shows.

Even as theatre owners once again prove themselves important cooperating citizens, the industry at large continues its job, now more vital: the job of entertainment—the job of keeping morale. The U. S. O.-Camp Shows, Inc., second circuit, of 13 shows, gets under way next week in 141 army and navy posts; and it is a project possible only by the cooperation of the film industry's talent.

And the organized industry continues another job: the production of war and civilian defense training films. Several more were viewed last week by the War Department in Washington, graced by the attendance of one responsible to a great extent for them: Lieutenant Colonel Darryl F. Zanuck, vice-president in charge of production at Fox.

Air Raid Plans Rushed

Theatre men in various localities continue to plan for possible air raids.

Cooperation was achieved among Philadelphia's houses last week, after a meeting called by Ted Schlanger, Warner circuit zone chief. Present were John Nolan, Comerford circuit; Joe Egan, Wilmer and Vincent circuit; Sam Schwartz and Abe Einstein, Warner theatres; William G. Mansell, Warner branch manager; Lewen Pizor, president of the United MPTO; Sidney E. Samuelson, business manager of Eastern Pennsylvania Allied, and Jay Emanuel and Frank McNamee.

John Pavone, Universal manager, is chairman of air raid defense organization for the New Haven film district. Mr. Pavone has appointed Rose Romanoff of his staff, in charge of fire drills; and Richard Lee, chairman of the Committee on Civilian Defense, is scheduled to speak to representatives of the exchanges and appoint air raid wardens for each.

Connecticut managers will be air raid wardens of their own theatres, the Office of Civilian Defense has decided. They and their assistants will take a 20-hour course under OCD supervision.

In Milwaukee, independent theatre operators and representatives of the circuits have discussed wartime operations.

The Washington blackout rehearsal last week did not harm theatres overmuch. Theatre personnel was well prepared; so were customers. Theatres darkened fronts, stopped ticket sales, kept performances moving, prevented people from leaving.

Managers of theatres in all parts of Rhode Island met in Providence Monday night, in the office of Edward L. Reid, at the Strand theatre, for initial discussions of air raid precautions.

BOOING BRINGS THEATRE BAN

Booing President Roosevelt, when his image appeared in a newsreel at the Empress Theatre, Chicago, last week, will keep Rose Hoffman, a domestic, out of movie theatres for six months, it was ruled by Judge Jacob M. Braude in the Women's Court of Chicago. He also fined her $100 but suspended the fine when she said she did not have the money.

Chiefs of the Providence police and fire departments, and the city's chief air raid warden, Captain Leo E. Gorman, addressed the meeting and plans were made for future gatherings at which managers will be instructed by fire and police officials in the safe handling of audiences during raids and precautions against sabotage.

William E. Spragg, district manager of M & P theatres, said that the experience of houses in England has shown the wisdom of audiences remaining in theatres during alerts, so the meeting agreed to continue shows and keep audiences in theatres when air raids occur.

The meeting was arranged by Edward M. Fay, chairman, and Mr. Reed, Mr. Spragg and Martin R. Toohey.

Collect Rubber, Sell Stamps

More than ten tons of wastepaper carried to eight regional theatres by an estimated 4,000 youngsters has been converted into $128.50 for civilian defense use in the Scranton area. The theatres, all operated by Comerford Theatres circuit, staged special film presentations for the youngsters, who gained admittance by giving wastepaper or other salvage materials collected from their homes and homes of their neighbors.

The Refowich and Legion theatres in White Haven, Pennsylvania, have cooperated with a nearby garage, so that free tickets to Saturday matinees are given to children bringing old tires to the garage. The latter pays for the tickets.

In Rochester, the Schine theatres have a variation. On certain days, they have been offering free admissions to children bringing old tires.

The Churchill Tire Company, Eau Claire, Wisconsin, is doing the same with the O'Klare Theatre. The Lake Region Oil Company, Antigo, same state, is giving admissions to the Palace to children bringing tires.

Some theatres in St. Louis, led by the Majestic, are paying winners of Bank Nite in defense bonds and stamps. Fred Wehrenberg, president of the local MPTOA, said he would recommend the association's surplus be converted to bonds. He added theatres of his chain would sell stamps over candy counters, and that other theatres might.

The Astor Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania, reports success of its drive to have patrons take stamps in lieu of change.

Loew's State, New York, among other theatres, this week is running a trailer, worded:

"I resolve to remember Pearl Harbor, to buy defense bonds and stamps, to serve my country in whatever capacity I can, never to repeat a rumor.

"I resolve to keep my courage high, to co-operate with the city, State and Government in observing all wartime regulations, to obey blackout and air raid rules, to save all materials vital to defense, to consider sacrifice a privilege of free men, women and children.

"I resolve to be free."

In New Haven, the Fishman theatres have inaugurated a giveaway of defense stamps. On Thursday, Friday, Saturday evenings, they give a 25 cent stamp to every tenth adult.

The Comerford circuit announced from Scranton, that each of the six managers and four district managers winning top prizes in the annual managers' drive, will receive three $100 defense bonds, in lieu of the planned trip to Hollywood.

The Indiana-Illinois circuit, Chicago, reports great demand for stamps in lieu of change, at its box-offices, adding that, last week, over $500 in stamps had been given. The houses are running an admonitory trailer as part of the drive.

The Casino theatre, New York's Yorkville (German) district, is distributing stamp books containing ten cent stamps, without charge, to patrons. It formerly played German pictures.

The Crescent circuit, Tennessee, is holding weekly defense rallies. They feature patriotic programs, and a feature; and admission is gained by presentation of a 25 cent stamp.

The Washington Theatre circuit, Cleveland, has cooperated with other local theatres in pushing defense stamp matinees, in which youngsters buy 10 cent stamps, are admitted thus.

Lamour Selling Bonds

Paramount picture star Dorothy Lamour left Hollywood last week to importune Midwesterners and Easterners to buy defense bonds. Thus, she devotes her vacation, Paramount stated.

"Fun to be Free," the propagandistic extravaganza presented at the Madison Square Garden, New York, in October, by the Fight For Freedom Committee's theatrical division, will be put into a Broadway theatre for two weeks beginning January 27th. Receipts will go to varied war work organizations.

Beginning New Year's Day, all Warner theatre circuit advertisements boosted purchase of defense stamps and bonds, and will continue.

The American Federation of Musicians and affiliates have bought $700,000 of bonds in the past two months.

Detroit exhibitors are generally bringing admissions down for men in uniform. First runs are lowering the 65 admission to 30 cents. Second runs charge 25 cents; subsequents, 15.

The Strand, Cincinnati, operated by a subsidiary of Associated Theatres, Detroit, is admitting soldiers and sailors without charge.

Omaha theatres are enforcing a 25 cent "top" for service men. Some theatres charge as little as 11 cents. They advertised the cuts, and the maximum, and have been rewarded by a flood of good-will.

The Tri-States circuit, Des Moines, began cut prices for armed services Christmas Day, for theatres in Iowa, Illinois, Nebraska. The RKO Orpheum followed suit. In Des Moines, Tri-States first runs are charging the men 25 cents; second runs, 20 cents.

Many Wisconsin exhibitors admitted service men without charge during the holidays.

Vaudeville Units Opened

Thirteen vaudeville reviews open next week in military posts from coast to coast. They are sponsored by U.S.O.-Camp Shows, Inc., and feature 156 acts.

Head of the organization is Eddie Dowling. The shows supplement 11 others, featuring musical comedy and legitimate plays, now playing.

Zanuck or Capra To Head Defense Films

Whether Darryl F. Zanuck or Frank Capra would head defense film production was unconfirmed Monday in Washington. They were reported candidates. Mr. Zanuck, vice-president in charge of production at Twentieth Century Fox, and a Lieutenant Colonel in the Army Reserves, working with the War Department, has cooperated in making of war training films in Hollywood. He was in Washington last week, New York this week and was to leave for Hollywood later.

Mr. Capra, producer for Warners, and now independent again, was in Washington last week, talking with officials on subjects undisclosed, but possibly connected with films.

The Office of Emergency Management has a film section under Robert Horton, head of the information division. Lowell Mellett's coordination of government films is said not to envision production. War training films in Hollywood, or in army posts, are under or in cooperation with it. Coordination and centralization of these activities, possibly with other film activities by other Government agencies, may be envisioned.

While in Washington Colonel Zanuck and

Captain Gordon Mitchell attended War Department review screenings of the following Training Films recently completed: "Operations of a Reconnaissance Patrol at Night," "Safe-guarding and Proper Handling of Classified Material," "Cryptographic Security," "The Emplacement of the 37 MM Antiaircraft Gun Battery," "The 37 MM AA Gun Battery-Preparation for Firing," and "The 37 MM AA Gun Battery-Fire Control Equipment."

The first official training film approved by the Office of Civilian Defense, entitled "Fighting the Fire Bomb," had its premiere Monday in New York, by means of television over Station WNBT and in other simultaneous special showings in 81 schools, before air raid wardens being trained by the Police Department of New York City.

Fire Technique Taught

The film, which was under the technical supervision of the Chemical Warfare Service of the U. S. Army and the National Fire Protection Association, is a fifteen minute production containing all vital information on methods and equipment to be employed in fighting fire bombs and preventing the spread of fire.

It was produced by Transfilm, Incorporated, 9 Rockefeller Plaza, New York City, which specializes in national defense training films, and, among others, is currently engaged in producing for the War Department a series of reels teaching the use of the Thompson Sub-machinegun. Author-director-producer of the bomb film was Sherman Price, president of Transfilm, Inc. Narration was by James Lehmann.

In order to insure effective educational use of "Fighting the Fire Bomb," a special instructor's manual accompanies the film. The manual was prepared by Safety Research Institute, 420 Lexington Avenue, New York City, and approved by the Training Section of the O.C.D., and contains instructions for using the film in class work, lectures to be given before and after the showing of the film, questions and answers for a "quiz" period on fire bomb fighting, and other instructional material.

Prints of the bomb film in 16 mm. form are being released to state and local civilian defense training organizations as well as to private groups and industries that may be subject to air attack. A limited number of prints are being sent out directly from the Office of Civilian Defense, through the OEM Division of Information, but copies can be obtained from Transfilm, Inc.

Plans are being rushed for the release of a special 35 mm. theatrical version, which has been shortened to meet crowded projection schedules but is long enough to give spectators all essential information enabling them to protect themselves and their properties from incendiaries.

Invitations were received this week by Washington officialdom to attend a reception and preview of "Private Letters of Private Dobbs," sponsored by the U.S.O. The showing of the anniversary motion picture was at the National Press Club, Tuesday.

Coast Group Renamed

The Hollywood Coordinating Committee for Stage, Screen and Radio is now the Hollywood Victory Committee for Stage, Screen and Radio.

The talent group elected new officers in addition to Fred W. Beetsen, chairman, and Jock Lawrence, secretary. They include: Kenneth Thomson, vice-chairman; Bert Allenberg, treasurer; Howard Strickling, assistant secretary. The finance committee includes Allenberg, E. J. Mannix, Cary Grant and I. B. Kornblum.

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau has appointed, as special consultant, Ted R. Gamble, Portland and Pacific Northwest theatre executive. His headquarters will be Washington, D. C.

Samuel M. Pinanski, of the Mullin and Pinanski circuit, of New England, has been appointed by Governor Leverett M. Saltonstall, Massachusetts, Commander of the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Public Safety.

John McManus, manager of the Loew's Midland, Kansas City, has been appointed assistant for public relations, in the civil defense organization of that city.

Daylight Saving and New Taxes for War

Legislation on daylight saving and taxes will be among the first matters to receive consideration in the new, second session of the 77th Congress, which convened at the Capitol on Monday. Both will affect motion picture operations and persons, like others.

Swinging into the term with nothing more than a week-end recess, Congress prepared to give President Roosevelt something like $59,000,000,000 with which to prosecute the war during the next fiscal year alone—more than half of the total national income—and paved the way for consideration of a new tax bill through which at least $5,000,000,000 and perhaps as much as $10,000,000,000 will be added to the tax load of the Nation.

During the first session, which began on January 3, 1941, and adjourned on January 2, 1942, Congress found itself confronted with matters of gravest importance, sidetracking all less essential legislation, with the result that the motion picture and radio industries escaped new restrictive measures.

Only a few bills affecting films were introduced during the session, and while they are still alive there is absolutely no chance that they will be considered until after the war. Most of the bills dealt with copyright matters, but the usual block booking and divorce bills were thrown in by former Senator Matthew M. Neely of West Virginia and Congressman Francis Culkin of New York; a resolution for investigation of the industry was fathered by Representative Lyle Boren of Oklahoma, and Representative James P. McGranery of Pennsylvania again sought the creation of a Fine Arts Bureau.

The film industry, however, was affected by the revenue act of 1941, which eliminated the 20-cent exemption from the admissions tax and repealed the exemptions which theretofore had been granted to charitable and certain other organizations.

Further tax problems are expected to be handed the industry in the 1942 bill, but details of that measure will not be revealed in full until after the House Ways and Means Committee begins its consideration of the legislation on January 15.

President Cites Taxes

Seven billion dollars in new taxes will be superimposed upon the current tax burden this year, it was disclosed Wednesday by President Roosevelt in his annual budget message.

In addition to this direct taxation, probably $2,000,000,000 more will be raised by increases in social security taxes, making a total tax bill in 1943 of approximately $26,000,000,000, or roughly half of the nearly $59,000,000,000 which it is proposed to spend to win the war.

Accompanying the President's message were intricate tables showing receipts and expenditures, in which it was estimated that the Federal admission tax would return a revenue of

$37,000,000 TAX INCREASE HINTED

$122,600,000 during the current fiscal year and $159,600,000 in the coming fiscal year.

President Roosevelt laid before Congress only the broad outlines of his financial program, leaving it to Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau to submit definite tax recommendations when he appears before the House Ways and Means Committee next week.

The budget made provision for the funds for the various Federal agencies, allocating $4,991,219 to the Federal Communications Commission, of which $2,300,000 is for administration of the Communications Act of 1934 and the remainder for its national defense activities. The appropriation is $77,510 less than appropriated for this year, that sum representing equipment and other expenditures.

No funds are allocated for agencies which have a direct responsibility for the motion picture and radio industries, such as the Coordinator of Information, under Col. William J. Donovan; the recently created censorship under Byron Price, Lowell Mellett's coordination of Government film activities, Nelson Rockefeller's Office of Inter-American Affairs, or the Office of Production Management. The Office of Information is expected to spend $1,590,260 this year, the Rockefeller office $5,281,787 and the OPM something over $9,000,000; expenditures of Mellett and Price have not been estimated. All of these agencies will be financed from a $25,000,000 emergency fund to be given the President.

The desirability of daylight saving legislation, proposed early in the session but at that time given little support, has been emphasized in recent weeks by blackouts on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and by threatened shortages of power in many areas. President Roosevelt last week renewed his suggestion to Congress that legislation be enacted, and a bill authorizing him to advance the clock by not more than two hours during the period of the war emergency and for six months thereafter.

Tuesday the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee reported favorably on the bill but Senator Taft of Ohio checked an attempt to give it immediate consideration. On the House side the Interstate and Foreign Commerce committees also considered daylight time following introduction of a bill by Representative Clarence F. Lea of California. The bill was approved Wednesday by the House Ways and Means Committee. Later that day the Senate passed the Wheeler bill.

Radio and Television Push On for the War

Television as a medium of mass instruction in defense subjects, as long discussed, was given its first large scale test at New York on Monday night.

The National Broadcasting Company, over WNBT, New York and a network link with Philadelphia and Schenectady stations broadcast an hour of defense instruction. Air raid wardens, police and fire officials gathered in selected listening posts throughout New York City, Philadelphia and the Schenectady-Albany area to see the televised defense lessons.

New York Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine arranged for zone, sector and post air raid wardens to watch the demonstration over 122 television receivers in 50 precincts throughout the city. The receivers were located in homes, radio stores and public schools. Although a large number of receivers are in tap-rooms and cafes the demonstration purposely excluded sets in places where liquor is sold. These would be available in an emergency however.

The program consisted of an illustrated lec-

EXHIBITOR OFFERS THEATRE'S SEATS

The 1,500 seats being removed from the balcony of the Twentieth Century theatre in Buffalo, N. Y., have been offered to any church or patriotic organization which wants them, according to John G. Finley, manager. Mr. Finley said if the offer is not accepted the seats will be turned over to the government for scrap metal.

ture by police lieutenant William F. Maley, aide to the coordinator of New York civilian defense, and the exhibition of one of the first of a series of Office of Civilian Defense motion pictures, "Fighting a Fire Bomb."

Relay of the program to the Philco station, WPTZ, Philadelphia and General Electric's Schenectady station marks another attempt to organize an east coast visual broadcasting network. Programs have been relayed to Philadelphia several times but this is the first three station link for a regular program. According to Noran (OK) E. Kersta, new general manager of NBC television, the establishment of a regular eastern television network is one of the main objectives for 1942. He asserted that such a network would be of vital aid.

Under the direction of William C. Eddy W9XBK showed how television could become an important means of communication and instruction. Through English documentary films it was shown how fire bombs should be extinguished while another film showed what to do in case of an air raid.

It was pointed out in the preview that the multi-lingual characteristics of television's pictorial presentation make it possible to broadcast to all language groups irrespective of their ability to speak or understand English. By putting a receiver in every defense zone headquarters (Chicago would need 88) an emergency communication and instruction system could be established that could be used even if regular radio had to be silenced. This would be possible because television comprises two separate transmitting systems, one of sound and one of picture, either of which could be operated independently of the other. If the sound end were silenced, printed or written bulletins could be broadcast and the beam could not be picked up by incoming planes. The television signal has only slightly more than horizon range.

"Chicago, and for that matter, all large cities," Mr. Eddy said, "has a large foreign population. This pictorial instruction is a universal language. First aid, fire fighting, nutrition, all things vital to national defense may be taught by pictures, maps and charts."

"At the present time there are in this country more than enough receivers, privately owned, to equip all civilian defense centers and fire and police stations."

Balaban & Katz recently filed application for conversion of W9XBK to commercial operation.

The American Television Society, headed by Norman D. Waters, advertising agent, has asked motion picture companies to clear patriotic short subjects and other related films for use on television defense programs. Mr. Waters wrote Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA, asking a meeting with producers representatives and Mr. Hays to discuss release of historic and patriotic motion pictures to television.

The exodus of government agencies from Washington to provide working space for war agencies will not carry the Federal Communications Commission to new headquarters, James L. Fly, chairman, said on Monday.

Mr. Fly explained that the FCC's defense work is now "so much more extensive and intensive" and requires such close contact with the army and navy departments and other defense agencies that there is little likelihood that it will be shifted from the capitol. The FCC may be moved to temporary quarters in nearby Alexandria, Va., however.

Priority applications by communications agencies will be handled by Leighton H. Peebles, who was named head of the communications section of OPM on Monday. Mr. Peebles, who has been with the Department of Commerce NRA and SEC since 1931, will work with and have office space in the FCC. Three advisory engineers will be appointed by the Defense Communications Board to assist him.

Radio Industry Centers Efforts on Defense Work

The American radio industry will drastically restrict the production of receivers and broadcasting equipment for civilian entertainment use during the coming year, in order to devote from 60 to 100 per cent of its output to war material. Heavy demands are already being made on radio manufacturers, according to several newspaper surveys.

Entertainment broadcasting will not be affected in extent or calibre, it was predicted. There are approximately 55,000,000 receivers now in use in the United States.

All of the principal manufacturers of radio equipment are now on three shift production of defense orders, with huge backlogs. Laboratories too are concentrating on military radio problems, most of them secret.

The Radio Corporation of America, producer of 13,000,000 radio receivers in 1941, and a large proportion of motion picture sound equipment revealed that its backlog of future work is now on a proportion of 20 per cent for civilian use with 80 per cent for defense.

Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, pledging full support to the government production plans, as did RCA, indicated that almost 90 per cent of its orders are of a defense nature.

Philco Radio and Television Company expects to cut its production of non-defense sets by 60 per cent. Priority curbs have led to substitution of non-essential materials in as many as 40 such materials one radio research group reported.

According to the Radio Manufacturers Association the OPM is expected to issue an order soon curtailing radio set production for the first three months of 1942 to 25 per cent of the output for the same period last year. This will provide approximately 675,000 receivers a month during the period.

Settle Warner Suit

Settlement of the $75,000 breach of contract suit by Alvin Harnes and Howard Gray against Warners and Vitaphone was seen Tuesday, in New York, after filing of a stipulation of settlement in Federal Court here. The sum was not disclosed. The plaintiffs had claimed they were entitled to compensation after the production of "Dr. Ehrlich's Magic Bullet," allegedly having entered into contracts in 1936 and 1937 to dramatize the doctor's life.

Joan of Paris

(RKO-Radio)

Adventure in Occupied France

Producer David Hempstead breaks new ground in more than one direction with this contribution to the field of topical fiction.

His picture is the first to deal extensively with conditions in Paris since its occupation and the setting turns out to be a fertile one for fictioneers.

His leads are two newcomers, but he works them like veterans and has surrounded them with seasoned players. Possibly no pair of beginners ever started their careers under more auspicious circumstances than Paul Henreid and Michele Morgan.

Mr. Hempstead's picture, directed by Robert Stevenson, from a script by Charles Bennett and Ellis St. Joseph, drops five RAF fliers into occupied France by parachute, following the crash of their bomber, and depicts the efforts of their leader, a Frenchman, to smuggle them back to Britain by way of Paris. He enlists the cooperation of a priest and the aid of a girl, with whom a romance develops, in establishing contact with British agents in Paris who arrange for the return of the fliers across the channel.

The film creates in its first minutes a tension which is sustained steadily throughout sequences of stealth, violence and intrigue which depict the efforts of the Gestapo to locate and capture the squadron leader's associates. The ending in which the French girl sacrifices her life in order that the fliers may escape, is true to the rules of cause and effect, although tragic.

The production rates high as melodrama and in point of timeliness, and it is assuredly a natural for showmen in those locations where sympathy for the oppressed French and confidence in their ultimate triumph over the invaders continue as fervent as when the picture was started.

Broadway Big Shot

(Producers Releasing Corp.)

Comedy

Excellent comedy, novel plot, competently executed artistic and technical assignments mark "Broadway Big Shot" as one of the top offerings of the Producers Releasing Corp. program. Its chief character is a football playing newspaper reporter who pleads guilty to a felony in order to enter a prison and obtain the true story of a huge embezzlement from one of the convicts. The convict dies the day he arrives and the reporter's publisher and the district attorney, who knowingly sent him there, are unable to obtain him a pardon. Under a modern honor system, advocated by the warden with whose daughter he has fallen in love, the reporter trains a convict football team, averts a prison break and gets the story and pardon. The climax coming with the prison team winning the annual game with the professional eleven owned by his publisher.

Ralph Byrd as the reporter, Virginia Vale as the warden's daughter, William Halligan, Herbert Rawlinson, Tom Herbert, Stubby Kruger and Joe Oakie head the cast.

The original screenplay by Martin Mooney, moves swiftly and is replete with sparkling dialogue. Direction by William Beaudine paces action and humor neatly and effectively. Dick L'Estrange and Charles Wayne were Jed Buell's associate producers, with George R. Batcheller doing an over-all supervisory job.

Previewed at a private projection room in Hollywood to a press and professional audience, wise in the ways of picture making, which was loud in its praises. The picture is the first to carry after the finis insignia a plea to buy defense bonds and stamps.—V. K.

Valley of the Sun

Arizona Western

From the skilled hands of Clarence Budington Kelland, who has given to the screen such fine film fare as "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" and "Arizona," comes "Valley of the Sun," a story about Indians and the West, which ran as a serial in The Saturday Evening Post. It has sufficient adventure, fighting, shooting, Indians on the march, dance and warpath, to meet the requirements of the most demanding action fan, and enough humor and romance to satisfy those not of this category.

The background of the picture is Arizona in 1868, when the Indians and the authorities were clashing. James Craig, who portrays an Indian scout attached to the Army, is the hero and the one who understands and sympathizes with the Indians, and Dean Jagger plays the Indian agent, who is always breaking his promises to the Indians and cheating them. The two men are in perpetual conflict over the Indians and over Lucille Ball, with Jagger finally losing all, including the girl.

Among the films' more exciting moments are a good fist fight between the hero and villain, a struggle for supremacy in a tug-of-war on horses, in arrow-shooting and hatchet-throwing between Craig and "Geronimo," played by Tom Tyler, and a charge by many Indians on the town. Particularly humorous are the attempts made by Craig and his cronies to prevent the fair Lucille from marrying Jagger, one of which consisted of dropping red ants from the ceiling on the bridegroom during the ceremony.

Good histrionic performances are very much in evidence. Lucille Ball, who is more a product of the twentieth century, nevertheless makes a spirited and attractive western heroine, and James Craig and Dean Jagger are good in their respective roles. Honorable mention must go to Sir Cedric Hardwicke as friendly "Lord Warwick," and Peter Whitney as a brute with a kind heart. Billy Gilbert is humorous as usual as a justice of the peace, and oldtimers may be interested in seeing Antonio Moreno once again, playing an Apache chief.

Graham Baker has produced the picture with care and with real Indians, and George Marshall, who has directed such pictures as "Destry Rides Again" and "Texas" has kept the picture moving and interesting throughout. The musical direction by C. Bakaleinikoff and photography by Harry Wild are of a high calibre.

The exhibitor need not be afraid to meet the customers on their way out.

DuMont to Telecast Commercially

A construction permit for a commercial television station was granted by the Federal Communications Commission in Washington on Tuesday, to the Allen B. DuMont Laboratories of New York. The permit grants permission for operation on Channel No. 4.

Since July 1st of 1941, when the FCC permitted the start of commercial television, a DuMont station has been in experimental operation in New York. When the company starts actual commercial operation, it must telecast at least 15 hours each week. Both the National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System have been telecasting commercially since July 1st. DuMont's entry will give New York city three stations with regular commercial television programs. DuMont is an affiliate of Paramount Pictures, reported to own approximately 50 per cent of the stock.

VALUE OF MOTION PICTURE STOCKS INCREASED $28,956,979 IN 1941

Film Issues in Sharp Contrast with Others in Dullest Trading Since 1918; Companies To Strengthen Financial Structure

by THE ANALYST

Motion picture shares listed on the New York Stock Exchange gained $28,956,979 in market valuation during 1941, even though trading fell off to the lowest levels in years. The action of film stocks in showing a net cumulative gain at the end of the year was in contrast with most other sections of the market, which generally touched the lowest prices since 1938 in trading that was the dullest since 1918. Total valuation of film stocks at the end of the year was $580,896,464, compared with a valuation of $551,939,485, at the end of 1940.

Also in contrast with the general list was the fact that many motion picture shares made their highs in the latter part of the year when most stocks were selling low.

Factors that contributed to the comparatively good showing of film stocks included favorable earnings reports and dividend actions and high box-office receipts in the last quarter. Also, it became apparent that motion picture entertainment will play a leading role in maintenance of civilian morale during the war. This appeared to bolster film shares at a time when stocks of other lines were reacting to the shock of United States entrance into hostilities. The country's plunge into an all-out war economy, sending industrial production, employment and payrolls to the high levels, augured well for motion picture company earnings.

Extra Dividends Paid

Despite a record tax burden, American industrial corporations paid out almost four and a half billions in dividends in 1941, a figure that has been exceeded only twice in the past ten years, in 1936 and in 1937.

Among outstanding dividend distributions by film concerns were an extra $1 dividend by Loew's and four 25-cent dividends by Paramount on its common stock.

Highlighting motion picture company earnings reports was that of Loew's, for the fiscal year ended on August 31. This showed a net profit of $11,134,593, equal to $6.15 a share on the common stock, compared with a net profit of $8,908,470, or $4.82 a common share in the preceding year.

Loew's late in the year achieved the lowest cost financing in the industry's history when the company completed arrangements for a refunding loan of $18,000,000 from the First National Bank of Boston and eight insurance companies. The refunding, which is for the purpose of retiring all of the company's 3½ per cent debentures and 136,000 shares of first preferred stock, is expected to save holders of Loew common stock $700,000 in dividends and interest during the loan's first year. Of the total amount of the loan, $13,000,000 was borrowed at 3 per cent.

Steps to strengthen its financial structure also were taken by Paramount. The company decided late in the year to redeem its entire outstanding second preferred stock, with a face value of approximately $4,250,000. The redemption date was set for February 3rd.

GROSSES INCREASE IN CONNECTICUT

General reports for 1941 estimate the increase over 1940 in theatre business at 6 per cent for New Haven, 28 per cent for Bridgeport and 30 per cent for Hartford. Since the outbreak of the war, however, exhibitors report a marked drop.

General retail business in the state for the first 10 months of 1941 as computed by the Chamber of Commerce is 18 per cent over last year in New Haven and Waterbury, 20 per cent, Hartford, and 25 per cent Bridgeport and New London. Connecticut Department of Labor bulletins show employment increases over-shadowed by employment declines "actual and anticipated" as of the end of November and early part of December. Workers were being employed at reduced hours and further layoffs were anticipated up until the time of the declaration of war. New vigor in the defense program may resume the upward spin of employment figures, it is predicted, although non-defense industries will suffer from priorities.

Warner Brothers estimated that earnings for the 13 weeks ended November 29, 1941, probably would be about 50 per cent more than for the corresponding period of 1940. Universal's gross earnings for the year ended November 2, 1941, exceeded $30,000,000, a gain of $3,000,000 over the preceding year, it was reported in financial circles.

Columbia Pictures reported for the quarter ended September 27, 1941, a net profit of $261,705, which compared with a net profit of $153,878 for the quarter ended September 28, 1940. This was the first quarter of the company's fiscal year and Harry Cohn, president of the company, reported that "results to date for the second quarter indicate a continued improvement in earnings."

Indicative of the market's extreme dullness throughout most of the year, Paramount, which, as in 1940, was the film group's most active stock, had a turnover of only 1,517,800 shares, compared with 11,805,000 shares in 1940. Paramount issues also had the largest net gains of the picture stocks in 1941, the common rising 4¼ points to close at 14½, the first preferred showing a gain of 14½ points at 111, and the second preferred closing at 13, up 2¼.

Heavy Stock Trading By Film Officials

Unusually heavy transactions by officers and directors of motion picture companies in the stocks of their corporations in November was reported this week by the Securities and Exchange Commission in its first summary for that month.

Largest transaction was the disposition of 570,000 Paramount Pictures 1947 debentures held by Maurice Newton, New York, a director, through Hallgarten and Company, his entire holdings in that category.

Also reported was the acquisition of 38,100 shares of Warner Brothers common by the three Warner Brothers, with Albert Warner reporting 14,900 to make his holdings 74,548; Harry M. Warner, 6,200 to give him a total of 69,060, and Jack Warner 17,000 to make his interest 142,860. Another officer, Joseph Bernhard, New York, reported the purchase of 2,500 shares, to give him a total of 3,000.

In Monogram Pictures, Trem Carr, Hollywood, director, disposed of 20,169 shares of common stock by gift and 2,623 by sale, representing his entire holdings, and Herman Rifkin, Boston, officer, bought 500 shares, giving him a total of 9,518. Also in Monogram, W. Ray Johnston, Hollywood, president, received 3,274 shares of common as payment on a loan and purchased 1,714 shares, but disposed of 959 shares by gift and 4,000 shares by sale, leaving a net increase of 29 shares to make his holdings 24,261, and reported acquisition and subsequent disposition of 3,429 shares through Monogram Pictures of Cincinnati, through which he held 3,285 shares at the close of the month.

Companies Add Holdings

Three companies which have been adding to their holdings reported further acquisitions in November, Atlas Corporation buying 2,000 shares of RKO securities, buying 2,600 shares of common to give a total of 836,823 shares, and 1,500 shares of preferred for a total of 49,071 shares. In Columbia Pictures, Samuel J. Brisken, Hollywood officer, reported the purchase of 200 shares of common stock, giving him a total 200 shares of common stock.

Loew's, Inc., continued to buy up Loew's Boston Theatres common stock, acquiring 86 shares during the month to give it a total of 118,774. In Universal Corporation, Preston Davie, director, reported the acquisition of 500 common voting trust certificates, giving him a total of 4,900.

Reports on holdings of persons assuming corporation offices showed that Gordon E. Youngman, New York, held no Keith-Albee-Orpheum securities when he became an officer on December 5th, but Matthew Fox, Universal, held 6,000 Universal Corporation common voting trust certificate warrants when he became a director on June 30th, last.

Dissolution of Pathe Film under the plan for exchange of securities for shares of Du Pont De Nemours & Company, recently approved by the SEC, was noted in reports that Allen P. Kirby, Morristown, N. J., director, had exchanged 2,100 shares of Pathe common held direct, 5,600 shares held through holding companies and 6,000 shares held through an estate, and Robert M. McKinney, Morristown director, exchanged 11 shares. The number of shares received in return was not noted.

DuPont Film Officially Passes to E. I. duPont

"On December 31, 1941, the assets and business of Du Pont Film Manufacturing Corporation were acquired by its sole stockholders, E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company," it was officially announced by the latter company, in New York, last Friday.

The executive and sales officers will, for the present, be maintained in New York as heretofore. All correspondence should be addressed to E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company, Photo Products Department, rather than to The Du Pont Film Manufacturing Corporation.

"The business will be administered by the same personnel as in the past, and the policies of the former company will be continued," said the statement. G. A. Scanlan is general manager.

DOUBLE BILLS APPEAR AS THE NO. 1 PEEVE OF NATION'S THEATRE OWNERS

Cross-Section of Opinion Shows Theatre Owners Incline Toward Single Remedy for the Industry's Ills, Better Pictures

Double features are the chief complaint of exhibitors against the industry, as revealed in responses to MOTION PICTURE HERALD's invitation to the whole field of exhibition to speak its mind. And topping the long and varied list of suggestions for improvement of their own position, the producers' return and the public's enjoyment is, simply, better pictures.

In the six issues of November 8th-December 13th the HERALD presented a series of comments just as they came from the nation's showmen on the broad expanse of the No. 1 entertainment business as seen from its best vantage point, that of the man who buys the product and sells it to the people. Hundreds of exhibitors throughout the country and Canada welcomed the opportunity to contribute to a forum of opinion designed for them, their set projects and their principal annoyances. Replies were all voluntary, varied and often violent, with no topics barred.

There were few attempts at a reasoned analysis of the entire industry. Circumstances of the moment prompted many to write terse and pointed objection, and as circumstances differed so did the points covered.

Some topics, however, were recurrent and in these the stand of the exhibitors was invariable. Nobody wanted double features, especially not the independent exhibitor who felt himself forced to adopt this method of meeting the competition of circuit houses. And not one said there were enough good pictures. Many showmen suggested fewer pictures, with the thought that this concession might bring forth better pictures, eliminate the B's, C's and D's designed for dualing. Some felt the need was for better short product, which with one good picture, would fill out a satisfactory bill.

Exhibitors Want More Comedy

In line with the results of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD's latest Money-Makers poll (see MOTION PICTURE HERALD, December 27th) the first product demand, aside general improvement, was for more comedy, and the corollary of this, less war and propaganda.

Abbott and Costello and Bob Hope made money for the exhibitors this year and provided the patrons with the "escape" which many felt necessary even before the outbreak of war in the Pacific when these exhibitor responses were received.

Some of the frequent objections to "war propaganda" might not now be voiced, but the nation's exhibitors reiterated the principal aim of the motion picture business—entertainment. Certainly the tenor of comment suggested that this stand would be reinforced at the present.

That the much-discussed problems of adjustment between exhibitors and distributors should take second place in the showman's view of their position and business, bespeaking, as it does the balanced approach and genuine interest in the ultimate consumer, the public, should surprise no one. Product is the principal concern, and the terms by which they acquire it "the headache of the business". Like a headache, it is never on the credit side of the ledger, and the present one always seems worse than the last.

But the exhibitor seems to have faith in an arrangement bringing ultimate satisfaction to all, an arrangement often including all the features of all methods which were to his advantage, and omitting all opportunities for the distributor to "chisel". There is more than a sprinkling of discontent with the consent decree, high percentage pictures, recurrent clamor for lower rentals and 20 per cent cancellations. But more showmen were interested in pictures, while many who object to present distribution practices suggested also that an understanding of the separate problems of production, distribution and exhibition could be arrived at around a conference table.

Problems more particularly in the field of exhibition received attention from many. Chief of these was the "super-length" picture which is disliked on the grounds that it tired the patron as well as for the fact that it prevented the usual "turn over". The other bane of exhibition was described by one as the "throat-cutting competition of the crockery business and the poolroom tactics of petty gambling". In other and less vituperative words, bingo and dishes, games and giveaways were mentioned.

"Come Down to Earth," They Say

Comedy was not the only product type request. Theatre owners also presented the public demand for action pictures and "down-to-earth" stories for "plain Mr. & Mrs. Smith". Their principal complaint was against pictures variously described as "highbrow", "arty", "class", and one exhibitor pronounced as his rosiest dream, the time when sophisticated films would be given the lowest allocation so that he could take them but not have to play them.

New faces were also requested as a stimulant to greater public enthusiasm.

Suggestion offered with less frequency, but equal fervor, serve to reinforce the general trend of opinion, with product a primary consideration, trade practices following, and general trends in Hollywood and the industry receiving scattering mention.

The patrons as interpreted by their theatre operators want more musicals, more color, more humor, more series, more westerns. They are against remakes, cycles of the same story, quickies, horror stories, costume pictures, English films and too much talking in any of them. The showmen themselves object to chain favoritism, overselling, too much ballyhoo about pictures, present press books, forcing of product, free shows, annual percentage increases in rental, sliding scales and competition from 16-mm films.

Some "pet peeves" in the field of public relations cropped up in several reports, showmen had few good words for "gossip columnists" singling out Jimmy Fidler and Louella Parsons, radio appearances of motion picture stars and stories, and "letting the public in on the business" in magazine articles as particularly detrimental.

Several favorite projects were offered, some of them by many contributors. An idea with many adherents is of a serial with an adult plot, "no more cliff-hanging" and box-office stars. This, exhibitors felt, would keep the largest body of movie-goers coming every week, and incidentally substitute for the second feature of a double bill.

Another fond hope was for a new western story with some change from "Good guy never misses; bad guy always misses" as one exhibitor put it. A little experimentation with other plots was urged, also, with "Citizen Kane" offered as an example of public reaction to novelty.

Seek Better Prints

On the purely physical side of the exhibitor's problems there was practical unanimity. There should be more prints in better condition. Several responses contained a plea for standard cue-markings to eliminate that primary reason for defacing films. Also, showmen would like better houses for their customers, with proper visual and acoustical equipment, although one complained that the same percentage was demanded of theatres with "Mazdas and hard seats."

In spite of the great number of responses and the wide variety of locations from which they came, there were few really controversial issues. Showmen were for and some against "slapstick," but more for than against. Some liked and some decried historical films. One exhibitor even requested more "spice," once supplied by the Mack Sennett bathing beauties! But few agreed that the motion picture erred.

An encouraging number of contributors, encouraging to all those interested in the success of the public's favorite entertainment, ended their criticisms with an exhortation to "talk up our business."

There was little pessimism even with many complaints. The hope that suggestions would be considered objectively, and dissatisfactions would be eliminated when producers, exhibitors, and distributors looked at the other fellow's problems was fairly general, while the determination to go on selling the public entertainment was practically unanimous.

Exhibitor Sees 'Forced Pictures' the Big Issue

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

I have read with very much interest the various and varied opinions of exhibitors large and small as expressed in this column. (Referring to the recent "The Exhibitor Has His Say" series in MOTION PICTURE HERALD.) Each has expressed his pet peeve, and there are plenty of them, and others have offered constructive criticism by pointing out the evil and offering his idea of a remedy. Yet in the humble opinion of this belly-acher not a single man has hit the nail squarely on the head as to the best remedy to cure the malady, that all seem to agree in a round-about way ails us, namely forced pictures.

There's only one way to do anything. Do it right. Then it will stay done.

If you went into a store to buy a pair of shoes, and after picking out the pair that suited you the clerk said to you "I'm sorry, but I can't let you have those shoes unless you buy this suit and hat, and a suit of underwear," what would you say to him? Your answer would have to be censored by the publisher. Yet it is just as much right for a merchant of clothing to do that as it is for a film peddler. And as long as we independent exhibitors keep buying the little ones to get the big ones, the producers will keep making more little ones than big ones.

There's only one way to cure this evil overnight and that is to allow each exhibitor, little or big, to buy any picture he wants and leave off any picture he wants. Each distributor could have a standard contract with each exhibitor covering film damage, prompt return of films, clearance, etc. Then we would get good pictures, and the public would come to see them. The public has never failed. It's the producers and exhibitors who have let the public down so many times that it is a wonder we can get them in at all. This of course should be done voluntarily by the producers, but if they won't, then we should band together and worry our lawmakers until we do get it enacted into law that the sale of no picture be contingent on the sale of any other picture or group of pictures with the exception of serials (all chapters or none) and news.

I say "Fix it right and it will stay fixed."—TRACY B. BARNETT, Rex Theatre, DeKalb, Miss.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

A RATHER STRANGE piece of business came off in Chicago, the other day, when a murdered man proved to be so identical to Bill Galligan, manager of the Commercial Theatre, that a private arrangement was effected by John Shaffer, the theatre's press agent, to get both the newspaper and theatre some extra press attention.

The paper telephoned the theatre to report the murder and mention the name of the murdered man, whose name, strangely, was the same as the theatre manager's. Furthermore, his physical characteristics coincided with the manager's, and the deceased lived in the vicinity of Galligan. However, further investigation proved that the person killed was another.

Regardless, the paper said they would "headline" the yarn, because exhibitor Galligan is well known about town, and extra interest would accrue. They didn't mention in the story that the man murdered was not the theatre manager. So the theatre's telephone rang incessantly all day, on the day the story appeared, and for three days after, with calls from solicitous inquirers.

Bold (literally and figuratively) display advertising inserted by the Hollywood Colony Theatre in the local Citizen-News, urged the citizenry: "DON'T BE SATISFIED WITH LESS—see ALL of HEDY La MARR in 'Ecstasy'—Added Attraction, 'I'LL SELL MY LIFE.'"

Those Hollywood film females who received gifts of Jap kimonos from their Jap house-boys this Christmas are still hiding 'em. We mean the kimonos.

Bandman Raymond Scott, of the airlines and elsewhere, gave crystal-balls for Christmas.

Wasn't it Senators Clark and Wheeler who demanded an investigation of motion pictures for propagandizing for war on the screen?

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer announces in New York that Johnny (Tarzan) Weismuller "takes on clothes" in his new "Tarzan Against the World," quoting Weismuller as saying: "It'll be a funny sensation to go before the camera in a pair of pants."

For 48 hours police hunted the automobile of Joe Cotten, actor on Orson Welles' "Lady Es-ther" broadcasts, after the machine disappeared from in front of his house in Pacific Palisades, California. Finally, the house maid went to the garden in the back in pursuit of an escaping puppy and there found the car in the family swimming pool.

When Ralph Ayer, city manager for the J. H. Cooper Circuit, in Lincoln, Neb., opened the 100,000 remodelled Stuart Theatre on New Year's eve, his pick of an initial picture gave local film boys a laugh. It had been one of the worst Decembers in local theatre history, the normal slump augmented by the war declaration which kept the public at their radios. And prospects of a pickup were not too good.

The opening film was "Birth of the Blues."

Alfred Hitchcock, RKO British movie director working in Hollywood, has an awfully strange hobby.

He studies the histories of long-famed English beer joints, saloons, taverns and pubs and "decodes" baffling modern names of those places.

Mr. Hitchcock is credited with ascribing as a cockney corruption one of England's lauded pubs, "The Goat and Compasses." Today it has a wooden sign of a goat with compasses set at angles across it. Delving back, he found that two centuries ago it was called "The Good God Encompasses Us."

Another Hitchcock unraveling concerns "The Elephant and Castle," one of London's historic taverns in an area also called the Elephant and Castle. He probed into history and found the original name to be "The Infanta de Castilia," after the crown princess of Spain at the time of the Peninsular Wars.

One of his triumphs was the mystery of a pub called "The Cases Altered." Hitchcock found that years ago a retired Portuguese sea captain started a pub and named it "Las Casas d'Alteria," after his home in the Alteria province. With time, the slurring tendency in words Englished it to "The Cases Altered."

RCA Laboratories, from whence came radio tubes, electrons, movie sound machines and other gadgets, announces that in present high-speed electrolytic fac-simile recording it is using a compound which it is pleased to identify as diacetoacetylparapheylenediamine. For the same purpose RCA also has two other compounds: chloroacetoacetanilide and acetoacetylchlohexylamine.

A misunderstanding with Uncle Sam gave singer Tony Martin, who was appearing at the Chez Paree night club in Chicago at the time, some anxious moments last week. A complaint charging the actor with failure to report for a selective service physical examination was issued by Assistant U. S. Attorney Russell K. Lambeau, who said that Martin left the coast for Chicago without notifying his draft board or obtaining permission to make the trip. Martin had been under the impression that arrangements were made for examination in Chicago.

Martin, disturbed, said: "I'm going to fly to Frisco and join the Navy, any way, soon as I close at the Chez Paree. I'd have got on a plane and flown to the coast for the examination between shows if I'd thought everything hadn't been arranged."

Bert Lahr is now legally Bert Lahr. The Los Angeles courts have formally okayed the changeover made years ago from the family name of Irving Lahrheim.

Patsy Brogan, specialist extraordinary, deals in movie stars' second-hand clothes, in Hollywood.

That disorderly conduct charge against Edward Loss, Jr., the 23-year-old youth who booted newsreel pictures of President Roosevelt in the Telenews Theatre, Chicago, on December 14th, has been dismissed by local Judge Oscar Caplan, who said an individual has no more right to boo the President than to give a false alarm in a public place, but dropped the charge because Loss formally apologized to the President and then bought $200 in defense bonds.

THE turn of the year, and the days leading up to it, brought the usual elections and selections of the "best" this and the "best" that of the day and year. Basil Rathbone, in Hollywood, came out as "The Star with the most Expressive Eyes."

The American Institute of Dramatic Arts selected Basil because "his eyes alone can express all shades of the 36 recognized human emotions; express them with depths of feeling that completely black-out his own character."

The coast artillery boys at Fort Hancock and Fort Tilden, back here in the East, named Lana Turner "The Sweetheart of Harbor Defenses"; the football squad of a southern university voted the same little gal "The Girl We'd Like Most to be in a Huddle With." The campus poet of American University said, "Falling bombs will fall like manna, so long as U. A. has its Lana." Lana was also named "Blanket Queen" by Indiana University.

Hollywood press agent Russell Birdwell reported that his client, Loretta Young, had been enthusiastically designated by Professor Chang Shuchi, "famous Chinese artist," now touring the U. S. as symbolic of the "delicate, fragile grace of the Peony Mutan, which, in China, symbolizes honor, glory and beauty," that she is symbolic of "the stately white peacock, king of China's birds," symbolic, too, of "a Kingfisher, soaring from a twig, meaning exhilaration, buoyancy and happiness," etc., etc.

Priscilla Lane is "America's Hobby Queen," so dubbed by the Hobby Guild of America, because she collects historical stockings.

The Hollywood Photographers' Association voted Rita Hayworth "the most cooperative screen actress of the year." Ahem.

Even MGM's dog, Asta, got a best-of-the-year vote, "for outstanding service to his canine friends," by the McKinley Kennel Club of Canton, Ohio.

Paramount says its Dorothy (sarong) Lamour was picked by the California Millinery Guild as "America's Best-Hatted Girl," of all things.

Edward G. Robinson got himself a "Man We'd Like Most to Marry" title, from the Mannequins and Models Association, the vote being based on his "desire for permanence and friendly relations."

Columbia Pictures reported that Rita Hayworth was voted "The Person Best Able to Fill a Stocking," by the Santa Claus School of Albion, New York. The Santa Claus School trains Santa Clauses to act as Santa Claus.

The Federal Film Supervising and Censoring Department in Mexico City ordered deleted from the new Mexican picture, "La Gallina Clueca" ("The Brooding Hen"), the scene of a doctor's office in which a chipped wash-basin was shown.

The Mexican Government department considered that shabby furniture in a doctor's office would bring criticism abroad about untidiness of Mexican physicians.

ESTEEMED EDITOR:

The week's decline of production activity, noted in the product report transmitted herewith, is not a thing for exhibitors dependent upon a full flow of attractions to start worrying about.

It does not forecast a shortage of product.

It does forecast a tempering of pictures to their times and, if the tempering be successful, an improvement of pictures in point of marketability when and as delivered.

Some conditioning of merchandise to market, ranging from editing of dialogue to total reshaping of story, was a normal and necessary consequence of the changeover from peace to war.

Not much in the way of reconditioning could be accomplished with respect to the pictures which were in shooting stage on December 7th—commitments of a dozen kinds mitigate against material revision of a picture in mid-production—wherefore these have been carried along to completion largely according to original plan.

Properties in various stages of preparation for shooting have been and are receiving ministrations calculated to attune them to the tastes and temperaments of a public which, it is reasoned, will be affected in its entertainment requirements as it is elsewhere by events which have transpired.

It is to be noted that a degree of deliberation quite out of keeping with tradition characterizes the conduct of this reconditioning process. No stampede in the direction of quickies in behalf of timeliness has occurred. No avalanche of sensationalism capitalizing upon the emergency has descended upon the exhibitor's screen.

As was to be expected, Walter Wanger's acceptance of the presidency of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences was followed immediately by issuance of a statement restoring to proper perspective the question of how the awarding of the organization's annual distinctions shall be conducted, which had become something of a community football prior to his taking charge.

President Wanger got rid of not only the how but also the when of the matter, declaring, "The decision of the Academy's board of governors cancelling this year's annual awards banquet still stands. As no dinner has been decided upon, and even the date of presentation of the awards is now indefinite, no invitations to attend have been or can be extended. The Academy board is anxious not to anticipate or take chances of running counter either to specific Army regulations or general government policies. These are not yet clarified and cannot be clarified this early for an event which ordinarily takes place at the end of February or early in March. Decision on the form of presentation will be kept open until the last minutes for obvious reasons."

President Wanger is, as remarked in last

Columnist Jimmy Fidler's filing of a $1,000,000 suit charging defamation of character and citing references to him printed in the Hollywood Reporter failed to create the ripple of local interest stirred up by his previous, similar and subsequently "adjusted" action started a year or so back.

On that occasion the Reporter got itself widely quoted around Town by remarking in print, "Look who's suing who."

On this occasion not only the Reporter but also its local contemporary refrained from remarking, even newswise, upon the incident.

Your correspondent's fortnight-old observation that haste is made slowly in such matters as the adjusting the pass-preview practice to wartime conditions turns out to have been an understatement.

In the two weeks which have elapsed, haste has been made in reverse.

On Monday evening of this week one studio established an all-time record for something difficult to name by previewing different pictures simultaneously in two theatres twenty miles apart, each of them ten miles, in opposite directions, from the corner of Hollywood and Vine.

Competing studios have managed to complicate the lives of journeyman journalists in this fashion in the past, and some while ago set up a clearing house for dates with intent to prevent recurrence of such conflicts, but this is the first time in the memory of the oldest inhabitant that a company has elected to run one of its pictures against another.

You'll recall that the observation referred to above was volunteered on the occasion of the studios' announced decision to hold sneak-previews in town, instead of in the suburbs as formerly, because of "the hardships to the studio personnel involved in the necessity of having to travel long distances at night" under emergency conditions prevailing since advent of war.

No abatement of the emergency conditions referred to has occurred.

On the contrary, the fourth interceptor command, in finalizing its banning of the Santa Anita race meeting, declared officially on Monday that conditions have not only failed to improve but promise to get worse.

The gentlemen of the press, traditionally a venturesome company, have taken the situation in stride up to now, enjoying a variety of mainly humorous speculations on the comparative value of the lives and limbs of studio personnel and press people in the estimate of the studio executives who determine the places of preview for the two groups. Familiar as you are with humor of groups.

There is, of course, no basis in fact for the conclusion that the studios are a whit less interested in the safety of the press than in that of their own personnel.

Doubtless all will be forgiven if none of those suicide squadrons of long range bombers mentioned by the President arrive before the postponement ends.

And maybe you'd better not tell him, unless we've got him under contract, that she and Ray, that son of his out at MGM, are conspiring to persuade him to forsake Manhattan and take up residence out here on this sunnier if somewhat more exposed slope.

MPTOA JOINS ALLIED'S UNITY PLAN; 20th-FOX STARTS EXHIBITOR FORUM

Exhibitor Group Directors Vote Unanimous Approval of Five- Point Plan; Connors Opens New Forum at Minneapolis

What was forecast, and virtually achieved, at that Chicago "unity" meeting, is being sustained this week: the industry is getting behind unity; it approves the steps taken then and it is continuing steps specific and forceful.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America board of directors has approved the unity program enunciated at the meeting, and the program's executors, the Motion Picture Industry Conference Committee. Its approval was unanimous.

Meanwhile, Tom Connors, who recently went from central, eastern and Canadian sales managements at MGM to the side of Sidney Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, this week began hearing complaints of exhibitors at a round table conference in Minneapolis—the first ever to be held by his company. The Fox executive stressed unity, and that his mission was part of the unity program.

MPTOA Approval Is "Unanimous"

Edward L. Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, said this week from his New York office that all returns had been received on the poll of directors taken after the Chicago meeting, and that approval was solid.

The directors approve the "five points" for industry unity to outsiders, and harmony within—unified action on taxation, unified action to protect the industry's good name, specific plans for good-will advertising, obtaining of priority ratings, and formation of a program for adjustment of disputed practices within the industry.

They also approve the Motion Picture Industry Conference Committee, and its subcommittees to execute those points.

The MPICC is temporarily headed by Jack Kirsch, president of the Illinois Allied. It is to meet January 21st at the Hotel Warwick, New York. It comprises five MPTOA members, five from Allied, five from independent exhibitor organizations, and one representative each from the distributors.

It was thought this week that the MPICC might appoint a coordinating subcommittee, to act in lieu of full attendance, which may be at times impossible at meetings. It also was reported the committee might open a permanent New York office. The meeting in New York is expected to result in permanent officers, and in financing.

Connors Stresses Unity In Exhibitor Meetings

Meeting approximately 50 Minnesota territory exhibitors Monday at the Nicollet Hotel, Minneapolis, Tom Connors, executive assistant to Sidney Kent, Twentieth Century-Fox president, heard varied complaints, and opinions, and gave advice and answers, meanwhile stressing the over-all unity of the industry, in line with his company's support of the Chicago unity meeting.

There was some discussion of the company's sales policies. Effect of the state's anti-consent

MAJORS UNYIELDING, EXHIBITORS CHARGE

The majors won't modify or reduce their rental terms to members of the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California and Arizona, at least, at this time. So that organization disclosed last week, after wiring majors for relief, pointing out decreased receipts because of the war alarms in the West. The majority of the distributors answered they would be "glad to solve each exhibitors' problem individually," but would not grant a general reduction or modification.

decree law was examined. The company is selling films per season's output, in accordance with the law. If the law fails the test of court battles, new problems will occur; and these too were examined.

Mr. Connors pledged support of his company to the measure until it is declared unconstitutional by the courts.

Consensus at the conference was that the law had increased distributors' costs. It also "gives us quite a few other special problems from time to time," Mr. Connors said.

Exhibitors at the conference were reported believing the war would improve business.

Mr. Connors stressed the value of unity—a goal he said he would aid, in his new position.

Other Fox executives present were William Gehring, central division manager; M. A. Levy, district manager; J. M. Podoloff, branch manager.

The "round table meetings" may continue. The first such for Fox, they follow MGM's exhibitor forums, first held in November in Columbus, Ohio, and scheduled shortly for Memphis and St. Louis, under the direction of that company's exhibitor relations director, Henderson Richey.

Schaefer, Bernhard Write to Kirsch

Jack Kirsch, temporary chairman of the MPICC, Tuesday in Chicago made public letters received from Joseph Bernhard, Warner general manager, and George Schaefer, RKO president, upon the work of subcommittees they head. Mr. Bernhard called attention to the work done by his subcommittee on priorities, and that A. Julian Brylawski, Washington film man, had already been appointed by the Government to handle priorities for the industry.

Mr. Schaefer, writing to his subcommittee on protection of the industry's good name, said in part: "It is most important that the committee meet at an early date to select a permanent chairman, and discuss the general approach; so that our committee may be prepared to carry through its responsibility." He asked members whether Saturday would be convenient for meeting.

The New Jersey Allied held a meeting and dinner at the Roger-Smith Hotel, New Brunswick, Wednesday. Industry executives attended. Annual committee reports were read. Harry Loewenstein, president, presided.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association will elect officers January 22nd.

The Illinois Allied discussed its proposed co-operative radio advertising program, and other matters, at the general membership meeting Wednesday, in Chicago.

The Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina will meet in Charlotte, North Carolina, Sunday and Monday, January 18th and 19th.

The concerted refusals of Chicago independent exhibitors to buy Paramount pictures on percentage has stymied the sale of the company's product in the midwest city, the theatre owners feeling that if they yield to Paramount's demand for percentage it will be only a matter of time before other companies will ask for the same terms.

In the deadlock that has developed, Paramount finds itself much in the same situation that MGM was confronted with in 1935-36, when in Chicago independent showmen practically boycotted the buying of MGM pictures because the latter insisted on percentage. At that time the fight centered around the suburb of Oak Park, where the Essaness circuit had several theatres, and MGM went so far as to build a house in Oak Park, which was taken over by the Essaness circuit when the battle was over after six months.

No trouble has been experienced in selling outside of Chicago, Jim Donahue, Paramount branch manager in Chicago, said, and from their standpoint the situation in Chicago is not alarming. So far the local office has sold around 50 accounts in the city, including the Warner Bros. circuit but excluding Balaban & Katz, which runs about 45 deals. About 150 prospective accounts are holding out.

Sees No Cut in Film Cartoons

War will make little difference in production of cartoons, in the estimation of Leon Schlesinger, producer of "Merrie Melodies" and "Looney Tunes" for Warner Brothers.

Mr. Schlesinger, a visitor to New York last week, said production of the short subjects was necessary; that they would continue; and that the amount of film and other materials they consumed was not a large factor in the nation's economy, so they would not be hampered by "shortages."

Mr. Schlesinger will make 42 cartoons for Warners in the coming season—the same number as in the season past. He has no desire to make a cartoon feature. He leaves that "to the other fellow," confident he has a satisfactory money-earner, personally, and at the boxoffice, in the several series of cartoons and characters he and his small staff have evolved.

His best character, to date, is "Bugs Bunny," Mr. Schlesinger said; the rabbit is succeeding Porky Pig and Daffy Duck in popularity. A new character which may appear shortly is "Goofy Cat."

The popularity of his cartoon characters has enabled their marketing in cartoon books for children, published by Dell. So popular have these been that the publisher signed Mr. Schlesinger recently to a new five year contract.

Mr. Schlesinger's studio is doing its bit, he remarked. It recently finished a 150 foot Treasury Department short, "Any Bombs Today," using Bugs Bunny; and it is making insignias for units of the armed forces.

ARBITRATION DECLINE CONTINUES INTO 1942

Eleven Cases Filed in December; St. Louis Exhibitor Appeals Dismissal of Clearance Case

The motion picture arbitration system entered 1942, and its 12th month of operation, with indications that the decline in arbitration, which first became apparent in November, would continue. During December only 11 new cases were filed, in three tribunals.

Exhibitors gave no signs that they were going to start the new year with more arbitration actions. Criticism of the operation of the consent decree and the decisions of the Appeal Board continued unabated, however. Exhibitor organizations, attorneys and many distribution executives, off the record, were voicing disappointment at the decree.

A new case, from St. Louis, was received by the Appeal Board over the weekend when Victor Thein, operator of the Palm theatre, St. Louis, appealed the recent dismissal of his clearance demand against Paramount, 20th Century-Fox and Fanchon and Marco circuit theatres.

The dismissal by Judge J. Wesley McAfee, arbitrator, was reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on December 20th. Judge McAfee observed that he had "been considerably influenced" by old Film Board of Trade clearances and declared that the Palm had not proved that the margins held by the Aubert and Union theatres, competitive neighborhood houses operated by the F and M St. Louis Amusement Company, were unreasonable.

The Appeal Board reversed the decision of a local arbitrator for the second time Wednesday when it overruled the findings of Fred A. Armstrong, arbitrator in the third St. Louis complaint. The Board ordered Loew's, Inc., to sell some run to Louis M. Sosna, operator of the Sosna theatre in Mexico, Mo.

Cleveland

Cleveland received its second case, the first action before the tribunal in 10 months on Friday when the Park Theatre Company, operating the Dueber theatre, Canton, Ohio, filed a some run demand against the five consenting distributors. The McKinley, Mozart, State, Valentine and Strand theatres in Canton are named as interested parties along with the Botzam Theatre Company, Akron operator.

The complaint under section VI charges that distributors have denied requests for product over a six month period.

New York

The Mt. Kisco theatre, Mt. Kisco, New York, on Monday appealed the dismissal of its clearance action against the Big Five. The case was dismissed on December 17th by Lloyd Buchcase. He ruled that the seven-day margin held man, New York attorney, who arbitrated the by White Plains first run theatres was not unreasonable. The M. F. Theatre Corporation operates the Mt. Kisco theatre.

Chicago

Three of the five distributor defendants named in the complaint of the Don theatre, Downer's Grove, were dismissed from the action by agreement on Monday. Paramount, MGM, Warners and the Balaban and Katz theatres were dropped from the complaint, while the action against RKO and 20th Century-Fox was continued by Ray Jarman, complainant. Thomas C. McConnell, arbitrator, has the case under advisement.

By an order from Hayes McKinney, arbitrator, the time for filing all briefs in the Oriental Theatre clearance case, Number 6, has again been extended, this time until January 15th.

Drennan Slater, arbitrator of the ninth Chicago case, the Alcyon theatre clearance demand, has granted an extension to January 5th of the time for filing briefs by the Samuel Myers circuit, intervenors.

Philadelphia

Hearings on Philadelphia Case No. 11, the clearance complaint of A. M. Ellis in behalf of his Parkside Theatre, Camden, N. J., were continued on January 9th after a series of postponements. The complaint hearing has been pending since October 17th.

Case No. 15, Lewen Pizor's clearance complaint, entered for the second time in behalf of his Tioga Theatre, which was scheduled to be heard on Tuesday, was postponed until January 12th. Mr. Pizor's original complaint in behalf of his Tioga, Case No. 12, was directed against Paramount, 20th Century-Fox and the Warner Theatres. His new case involves only Paramount, and asks that the 14 days clearance of Warners' Strand be declared unreasonable.

The only other complaint awaiting hearing in Philadelphia is Case No. 10, filed July 8th by A. M. Ellis in behalf of his Liberty Theatre, Camden, N. J. It is expected that since the situation is similar to that of his Parkside Theatre, with Robert J. Callaghan, Jr., the arbitrator for both complaints, all the testimony being taken in Case No. 11 will apply to Case No. 10.

The local arbitration board, very little occupied with complaints in the motion picture industry, is currently engaged in handling arbitration complaints in other industries.

Kansas City

The third Kansas City case, C. R. Gifford, St. Joseph, Mo., before the Kansas City Arbitration tribunal, was concluded December 30th after a two-day hearing. Mr. Gifford, who operates the Louis, Negro theatre in St. Joseph, Mo., asked a clearance not to exceed 30 days, as against 119 to 143 days behind first run houses in St. Joseph. The Louis is the only theatre in the city to which Negroes are admitted. Henry M. Shugart was the arbitrator.

In the fourth case before the Kansas City arbitration tribunal, brought by J. E. Pennington, Topeka, Kan., the Fox Kansas Theatre Company has filed a declaration of intervention in which they charge that a reduction in clearance would affect their interests.

Buffalo

Edward W. Hamilton, Buffalo attorney, will arbitrate the tribunal's eighth case, clearance demand filed against the Big Five by the Cuba theatre, Cuba, N. Y. Hearings will begin on January 12th. The State, Haven, and Palace theatres, Olean, N. Y., are named in the case.

Detroit

A decision in the Parkside theatre specific run complaint at Detroit involving all downtown theatres and key neighborhood houses is expected as soon as former Governor Wilbur M. Brucker, arbitrator, completes a personal inspection of the houses involved. Hearings ended last month.

Documentarians To Teach "Fact Film Making"

Leading lights of the Association of Documentary Producers, will instruct New York's citizenry in the technics of "fact film making," via 12 workshop and lecture courses at the City College of New York. The series, known as the Institute of Film Techniques, is to be guided by Irving Jacoby, who has taught "film facts" at the College, and has produced "Big Town, Small Town," "Latitude 20" and "Hot Ice."

Mr. Jacoby says his courses, beginning in February, "have been designed to train experts to supervise the use of fact films in schools and colleges, civilian defense, Government agencies, social service, and labor organizations, and church and cultural groups, as well as for commercial, industrial, and advertising purposes."

Dr. Harry Wright, president of the college, commented: "A major new field of public service has thus opened up. It will be as important in peace time as it is today. We believe that the Institute of Film Techniques fills an essential need."

Instructors and lecturers in the Institute will be John Grierson, Canadian Film Commissioner; Joris Ivens, director of "The Spanish Earth," Willard Van Dyke, director of "Valley Town," John Ferno, collaborator with Mr. Ivens, and director of several documentaries; Kurt London, writer on sociological aspects of films; Alice V. Keliher, assistant Professor of Education, New York University; Stuart Legg, producer of "Canada Carries On."

On the Institute Advisory Council: Jean Benoit-Levy, French producer; Robert Flaherty, producer of "The Land," "Man of Aran" and others; Kenneth MacGowan, of the Rockefeller committee on North and South American cultural relations; Fairfield Osborn.

National Decency Legion Classifies Ten Features

Of the ten motion pictures classified by the National Legion of Decency in its listing for the current week three were approved for general patronage, five were considered unobjectionable for adults and two were classified as objectionable in part. The pictures and their classifications follow:

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage: "Come On, Danger," "Duke of the Navy" and "Riot Squad." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults: "Confession of Boston Blackie," "Harvard, Here I Come," "Johnny Eager," "Mr. and Mrs. North" and "Today I Hang." Class B, Objectionable in Part: "Shanghai Gesture," "Sullivan's Travels."

Phil Engel to Boston

Phil Engel, eastern field publicity representative for Warner Brothers has been transferred to the Boston office, it was announced last week by Mort Blumenstock. Mr. Engel has been working from the New York office for the past six years, covering Boston, New Haven, Albany and Buffalo branches. He will continue to cover the same territory from the Boston office.

"Unity"

here is a unity plan in the motion picture industry. It has been operating with growing success for some six years. Its name is Republic Pictures.

At the end of this fateful year of 1941, so torn with strifes, internal and external, Republic Pictures finds itself in happy and profitable unity with 12,000 exhibitor customers.

This attests to an understanding of mutuality between Republic, producer and distributor, the exhibitor and that great American public which goes to the box office for its money's worth of entertainment.

Good pictures === good deal === good business === that's Unity.

PRODUCERS, LABOR MEET ON NEW STUDIO PACT

Representatives Meet Casey in New York; Publicists' Guild Studies Closed Shop Contract

Closed shop contract negotiations between producers and eight studio locals of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees this week swept into final stages, with representatives of those locals, of the studios, of the producers, and of the international meeting in the New York office of Pat Casey, the organized film industry's labor contact.

Meanwhile, also in New York the Screen Publicists Guild, comprising the advertising and publicity workers in the majors' home offices, met this week to consider ratification of the closed shop contract achieved, in its main aspects, by prolonged negotiations between Guild representatives and attorneys and personnel managers of the majors.

At the same time, at Local 306, New York IATSE projectionists' union, and strongest unit of such workers in the country, a new leader appeared—Herman Gelber, who last week defeated Joseph Basson, long-time president and a former founder of the union, for its presidency.

Alliance Meetings Nearing Conclusion

Those closed shop contracts between producers and eight Alliance locals (two locals already obtained such contracts) appear nearer, this week, as the result of intensified sessions, attended not only by studio and labor representatives, but also by executives from the majors' home offices in New York.

Among the latter were Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's; Barney Balaban, president of Paramount; Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century Fox; Joseph Hazen, vice-president, Warners; W. C. Michel, executive vice-president, Twentieth Century Fox; Reginald Armour, personal assistant to George J. Schaefer, president of RKO; Major Leslie Thompson, RKO; John J. O'Connor, Universal.

Also representing the producers were Dave Garber, Universal studio manager; Carroll Saxe, Warner studio manager; Charles Boren, Paramount studio manager; Fred Meyers, Fox studio manager; Arthur Schwartz, Columbia; Keith Glennon, Samuel Goldwyn studio; Mr. Casey; Fred Pelton, Mr. Casey's assistant.

Representing the unions were Richard F. Walsh, IATSE president; Louis Krouse, IATSE secretary; Carl Cooper, International representative; Herbert Aller, Burnett Guffey, Gus Peterson and Gilbert Warrenton, Local 659, Cameramen; J. P. O'Donnell and A. J. Mike Moran, Local 728, Electricians; J. F. Swartz, Local 165, Projectionists; Wm. L. Edwards, Local 705, Costumers; B. C. DuVal, Local 44, Props Workers; W. C. Barrett, Local 80, Grips; C. Westmore, Local 706, Makeup Artists; Harold V. Smith, Local 695, Sound Men, and Neal Fairbanks, Local 727, Laborers.

It was reported the unions were asking that contracts be retroactive to last March. Negotiations have been on since October, with the unions demanding increased pay and altered working conditions, the producers making counter proposals, the scene shifting to the Coast, and then back again to New York.

Meanwhile, the seven internationals in the basic labor pact, signed a five year contract. The Alliance not reentering that pact, its locals

NICK, WESTON START TERMS

The new, "model" Federal Penitentiary at Terre Haute, Indiana, this week houses two "model" racketeers—whose trials and convictions for extorting $16,500 from St. Louis theatre owners, served as models for the later, recent, trials and convictions of IATSE leaders Willie Bioff and George Browne. The pair who began their five year terms at Terre Haute Friday, January 2nd, are John P. "Big" Nick and Clyde Weston, former president, and business agent, of the St. Louis projectionists local, 143. They were convicted under the Federal anti-racketeering act, as were Bioff and Browne.

have had to negotiate individually, with assistance of the international officers of the parent union.

This week's scheduled meeting will not settle the jurisdictional squabble between the IA Studio Photographers Local, 659, and the independent American Society of Cinematographers. The conferees were reported feeling this an inter-union affair.

Basson Loses

Joseph Basson, president of New York projectionists' Local 306 since 1935, was defeated Wednesday, December 31st, for reelection. His successor is Herman Gelber, formerly secretary. The vote was 1,024 to 821.

Other officers elected are Steve D'Inzillo, vice-president; Nat Doragoff, recording secretary; Charles Beckman, financial secretary; James Ambrosio, treasurer. New York and Brooklyn business agents, respectively, are Bert Popkin and Jack Teitler.

On the board of trustees are William De Sena, Herman Broitz, and George Magarian.

Local 306 lost a battle last week when the New York State Labor Board found for Julius Wolff, operator of the Livonia Theatre, Brooklyn, against the union. The Board reversed its trial examiner by asserting Mr. Wolff was not required to reinstate three projectionists who struck in April, 1940, in a contract dispute.

The Screen Publicists Guild, New York, was to elect new officers this week. Candidates were Joseph Gould, incumbent, and Carl Rigrod, for president; Larry Lipskin and Morton Gerber, first vice-president; Jonas Rosenfeld, Jr., incumbent, and Arthur Jeffrey, second vice-president; Stephen Freeland and Leonard Daly, secretary; Charles Wright, treasurer.

Stearn Testimonial Attended by 300

Approximately 300 persons of the film and theatre branches of the industry gathered at the Statler Hotel in Cleveland Monday night to honor Bert Stearn recently promoted by United Artists from district manager to western sales manager. Executives for eastern key cities attended.

The dinner, arranged by the Cleveland Variety Club of which Mr. Stearn is the outgoing chief barker, was done with a strictly western background.

Paralysis Drive Material Ready

Harry Brandt and C. C. Moskwitz, co-chairman of the industry's national committee leading the "fight infantile paralysis" drive to be conducted during the week of January 22nd to 28th, have announced that the committee is prepared to meet the demand for campaign supplies. With 10,000 theatres expected to pledge themselves to take part in the drive by making lobby or auditorium collections, the problem of distributing the necessary supplies is a vast undertaking. However, it is organized thoroughly and orders for supplies are now being shipped promptly.

Oscar A. Doob, national public relations director for the motion picture committee has released to the trade copies of a 12-page press book—the first such promotional accessory to be created and used for the drive to fight paralysis. The press-book is designed so that it may be read in 12 minutes and was prepared by Ernest Emerling of the MGM home office.

First mailings are being made of up to 20,000 campaign books. It is expected more than 25,000,000 buttons will be used. Over 300,000 coin collection cans may be needed. Better than 100,000 miniature "wishing wells" coin collectors are ready. Some 200,000 President's Birthday coin cards will be provided for ushers, projectionists and other staff members.

Ten thousand trailers have been printed on donated film and distribution has begun through National Screen exchanges. All materials are furnished to the theatres gratis, but will be paid for later by the National Motion Pictures Committee out of collections.

Eddie Cantor for the third consecutive year will be chairman of the "March of Dimes of the Air," it was announced Monday by Keith Morgan, national chairman of the committee. The "March of Dimes of the Air" program will be started over the major networks January 24th with a one-hour program from Hollywood. Many stars of stage, screen and radio will participate in the broadcast.

Theatre ushers have been urged to make their own private collections from their friends in behalf of the drive. Each usher will be asked to fill four Birthday coin books with dimes for a total of $2.00. To the usher who fills the largest number of books a $100 defense bond will be awarded.

In Los Angeles Charles Skouras presided at a luncheon in the Hotel Ambassador to complete plans for California's part in the campaign. Representatives of independent theatres and the Fox West Coast theatres attended.

More than 300 theatres in New England have joined the "Dimes" drive and the western New York territory has been organized.

Theatres Aid Red Cross

Employees of the Interstate Theatres in Houston, Tex., have voted to donate a full day's salary to the Harris County branch of the American Red Cross. The vote came after an appeal by R. J. O'Donnell, vice president and general manager of the circuit for every employee to financially and physically aid national defense. The plan is being followed by other employees of every theatre in Houston.

F-M GROWS 1400% IN A YEAR, FROM 15,000 TO 180,000 RECEIVER SETS

And F-M Broadcasters Estimate Some 250,000 Sets in Operation by End of January; Army Adapting F-M to War Use

The standard radio industry looks to "FM".

Hampered, and possibly to be throttled, by the war, the broadcasters see Frequency-Modulation, not television, as the impelling force in maintaining public buying sufficiently to sustain a portion of the industry's established plants.

Major Edwin Armstrong's frequency modulation system of radio broadcasting, which requires special receivers, has gained such a hold that the number of receivers has increased more than 1400 per cent in the past 12 months' according to F-M Broadcasters, Inc., of New York City.

Furthermore—FM is a military weapon. Not affected by static, man-made or natural, it provides communications between armored vehicles. The Second Armored Division has been employing the system in approximately 100 tanks; the Germans have been using the system in Panzer divisions, for several years.

FM Broadcasters, Inc., reported this week there are now 180,000 FM receivers operating. One year ago, there were 15,000. Some expect 250,000 sets in operation by January's end.

The latter figure, they assert, represent a listening audience of almost 1,000,000. Such an audience, it is said, is an impellant for existing F-M stations to increase transmission time, and for new F-M stations.

At the beginning of the year, there was no F-M commercial station. At mid-December, 24 were operating daily, and 62 had been authorized.

52 Licenses Pending

Pending are 52 license applications, in Washington.

FM's first commercial transmitter, went on the air March 1st, in Nashville. Its operation had been preceded by that of 18 experimental stations, of which only two had power of more than 1,000 watts.

The 24 new commercial stations are powerful, are heard, and uniformly in areas three to ten times larger than those covered by the first experimental stations.

Manufacturing of receivers parallels the course of transmission. Thus, only six companies produced the special receivers at the year's beginning. This week, the figure has risen to 20. The manufacturers first produced few F-M receiver models. Today, they offer 100. These parallel standard radio receivers, in design. There are table sets, cabinet sets, and sets in period furniture.

The area covered by F-M broadcasting reflects the increase in receivers and stations. In early 1941, virtually all transmission was in the northeast. Exceptions were three experimental transmitters in the mid-west. This week, there is one station on the air in California, and six building. There is F-M in Louisiana. There are four stations in Chicago, two in construction. F-M also covers New England, Detroit, Milwaukee, Columbus, Evansville, Pittsburgh, Kansas City.

NO "FREE MUSIC" FOR OREGON SOLDIERS

The Portland, Oregon local of the American Federation, ruled last week that "no free music" by professional entertainers would be provided to the soldiers at Portland's large air base, despite the apparent willingness of big name entertainers to appear.

John A. Phillips, president of Local 99 of the A. F. of M. declared the reason the local had forbidden its members, or those of any other local traveling through the Portland territory, "to donate services" for any purpose, was that radio, "juke boxes" and non-professional groups have presented increasing inroads into musicians' incomes. Mr. Phillips said, "We feel that our members are entitled to be paid for their services, as in any other trade or profession."

Attempting to anticipate radio's course in wartime, F-M Broadcasters Inc., expects that manufacturers, finding materials for the production of the very cheap standard (amplitude modulation) receivers, will use their smaller allotments to make FM-AM receivers.

The organization also hopes the next 12 months will bring an increase of "2,000,000 units," and it adds:

"A further hint of 1942 growth is seen in the fact that 52 applications for commercial F-M licenses are waiting official action at Washington."

It also predicted regular F-M network operation in several localities.

W2QXR Moves

W2QXR, F-M transmitter of New York high fidelity station WQXR, has moved from Long Island City, to the Chanin Building, Manhattan. The shift improves reception about 20 per cent. The new post, atop the Chanin building, is 738 feet above sea level. This month W2QXR will increase power and change its official calling name to W59NY.

W53H, Hartford, began operation last week. Owner is the Travelers Broadcasting Service, of the Travelers insurance Company, operators also of standard station WTIC, in that city.

The new station was reported to have obtained more than seven hours of commercial programs per week. Its formal dedication will be in March, after erection of a new transmitter tower on nearby Avon Mountain.

The extant Hartford F-M station, W65H, saluted the newcomer last week, by special program, and flowers.

F-M station executives have placed their equipment at the disposal of the armed forces, and various governmental civil defense officials.

The system's greatest value in civil defense may occur in New England, where 51 of the 52 A-M stations are within receiving distance of the F-M stations, which serve 93 per cent of the population, it is estimated.

It is pointed out A-M stations could keep F-M receivers tuned on F-M stations, which would relay alarms and the like, substituting for ordinary, vulnerable, wire communications.

The U. S. Defense Communications Board, authorized by President Roosevelt, last week, to take over all or part of the radio industry for defense, and to coordinate its potentialities for that purpose, has been notified by the F-M stations, of their willingness to serve. Roger Clipp offered to the board use of Philadelphia's F-M station W53PH, as key station for transmission of Army interceptor commands, to AM stations. It was noted the F-M unit is in one building in the city's "downtown," eliminating possibility of interruption to its service by destruction of telephone lines, normally used between transmitter and studio.

Other F-M News

Associated Broadcasters, Inc., Indianapolis has asked for an F-M station license.

The Stromberg-Carlson Company, one of the first manufacturers of F-M receivers, has declared a dividend of 50 cents per common share, payable December 24th. This is the first dividend since 1937. The dividend that year was 12¼ cents per share.

The Boston Herald last week gave a 16-page supplement to description of F-M's growth in New England.

F-M broadcasters note special sections now have appeared in newspapers of key cities in very district containing an FM station.

Dedication of W71NY, three weeks ago, marked temporary operation of the first extensive commercial F-M network. There are seven stations in the hookup, using no wires, and carrying commercial programs for five national advertisers, Swan Soap, Hecker Products, Socony Vacuum, Hat Style Council, and Zenith Radio. Other stations in the network are W2XMN, New York; W65H, Hartford; W43B, Boston; W39B, Mount Washington; W47A, Schenectady; W53PH, Philadelphia.

Seattle Station

Installation of the Pacific Northwest's first new Frequency-Modulation broadcasting station, for coordination of Seattle and King County law enforcement work, is proceeding as previously scheduled.

It was at first believed that Army authorities might object to the installation, but word has been received by city officials from Gen. Carlyle H. Wash of the 2nd Interceptor Command that the Command "has no objection to the continuous use of a F-M radio station" for the use of Seattle police and sheriff's offices.

35% DROP WITH A FILMS—ONLY POLICY

Stage Shows Lifted Average at Stanley in Pittsburgh from $13,260 a Week to $20,700

by MORT FRANK in Pittsburgh

Stage attractions were considered a definite help in 27 of the 45 weeks when vaudeville was presented in the past year at the Stanley, the city's only downtown stage house, according to a consensus of newspaper reviews and the theatre's management. The Stanley averaged $20,700 weekly for pictures plus vaudeville, contrasted with $13,260 average for the five weeks of the year when only pictures were the attraction, dropping 35 per cent. For the 50 weeks beginning Jan. 3rd and ending Dec. 18th this year, the theatre grossed $998,500. The Stanley's average weekly box-office during 1940 was approximately $18,100.

Outstanding stage draw during the year were the Andrews Sisters. They appeared three times, only act to repeat, except Earl Carroll's "Vanities" and Martha Raye, and each time totalled far above average. Their $33,000 was the year's highest week, when they shared billing with Gene Krupa's orchestra. They grossed $30,400 in a week with Johnny Davis' band, and $23,400 with Joe Venuti.

Movie Names Draw

Name bands were the best box-office bets as a type of attraction. Of the 45 vaudeville weeks, 34 presented traveling orchestras with phonograph record and radio reputations. Weakest type of booking was the unit show. None of the nine presented hit the average weekly figure. Usual Stanley policy combines a top name band with one to three vaudeville acts, or a top act with a smaller name orchestra.

Many players and bands with film records appeared on the Stanley stage. Besides the Andrews Sisters, Krupa and Davis, the movie names who were best money-takers were Glenn Miller, the year's second best gate at $31,600, Dennis Day, Jerry Colonna, Eddy Duchin, Cab Calloway, Jimmy Dorsey, Bill Robinson, Martha Raye, Rochester, Paul Whiteman, the Three Stooges, Phil Regan, Horace Heidt, Xavier Cugat, Guy Lombardo, Shep Fields, Gil Lamb, Anita Louise, Phil Harris, Ben Bernie, Victor McLaglen, Simone Simon, Ted Lewis, Bob Crosby, John Boles, Pinky Tomlin, Larry Clinton, Raymond Scott, Singers' Midgets, Abe Lyman, Condos Bros., Wally Vernon, Willie Howard, Sylvia Froos, Frankie Masters, Mills Bros., Berry Bros. and others.

More Warner Bros. pictures were played than any other producer's, 17, which is to be expected, since Warners own the Stanley. Metro booked 15 into the house, RKO 9, United Artists 5, and Paramount 4. Through a pooling arrangement, which tacitly keeps Loew's Penn from presenting stage shows and helps clear the flood of pictures for Warners' Warner and Ritz theatres which ordinarily play holdovers from the Penn when business warrants, the Penn usually gets first choice of product from Warners, Metro, RKO, U. A., and Paramount. The Harris Senator and Shea's Fulton play Twentieth Century-Fox, Universal, Columbia, Republic and miscellaneous pictures, with the Fulton also occasionally using product from one of the five companies selling to Warners and Loew's here.

Prison Utilizes Films To Bolster Morale

Like many other institutions throughout the country the New Jersey State Prison in Trenton, N. J., utilizes the motion picture screen to bolster the morale of the men. Twice each year J. A. Reynolds, director of education and recreation at the prison, selects the films for exhibition in the prison theatre.

The season usually consists of from 30 to 32 playdates, with each program running an average of 120 minutes. A single program includes a newsreel, short subjects and the feature. Films of questionable character, such as gangster pictures, films depicting institutional life and the cheaper type of western picture, are precluded.

Festival recently won a judgment against the Movie Parade theatre in Los Angeles, for showing a Chaplin picture owned by Festival without authority.

Sliter Promoted, Honored at Banquet

More than 150 associates and friends staged a farewell dinner at Gloversville, N. Y., Tuesday night for Harold F. Sliter, Mohawk Valley district manager for the Schine circuit, who has been promoted to district manager of the larger Ohio-Kentucky area. His headquarters will be at Bellefontaine, O., to which town he is moving with his family.

The dinner was arranged by the Kiwanis club, of which the theater man was a member. It had State Senator Harry Dunkel as toastmaster. Speakers included J. Myer and Louis W. Schine, Mayor Chauncey C. Thayer, chief Schine film buyer George V. Lynch, comptroller John A. May, eastern zone manager Gus Lampe and Kiwanis president Ed LaPlace, who presented Mr. Sliter with a diamond-studded watch in behalf of the gathering. Lloyd Madison, president of the Glove Cities projectionists and stage hands union, in behalf of the union, gave him a cigarette case, on the back of which was engraved an honorary life membership in the union.

Mr. Sliter went to the Schines from Buffalo 10 years ago where he was with Paramount-Publix. He also has been connected with Fox-Skouras. A native of Lynn, Mass., he was head of the Schine circuit advertising and publicity department before being made Mohawk Valley manager.

COOPERATIVE ADS CONTINUE, DESPITE DISTRIBUTOR-EXHIBITOR ARGUMENTS

Companies Vary in Appropriation; Regional Release Dates Do Not Interfere with Schedules, Advertising Heads Say

Distributor-exhibitor cooperative newspaper advertising, long a source of contention and bitter bargaining between exhibitor and distributor, continues in wide use despite the consent decree, blocks-of-five selling or regional release dates. But distributors still vary widely in their opinions as to its value and in the relative amount of advertising budgets which they allot to the joint purchase of newspaper space.

Few key pictures released by the Big Five consent decree signatories or by the Little Three have been released since September without benefit of some cooperative advertising. Several of the distributors, led by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Warner Brothers have also conducted extensive independent newspaper campaigns.

Campaigns Vary

The extent and type of cooperative advertising according to the reports from major advertising directors varies extensively from picture to picture. In some instances a country-wide campaign of opening date display advertisements is arranged with exhibitors. Other companies are using a build-up technique with cooperative teaser ads in advance of the opening. Frequently, with pictures where the cooperative budget is limited, the advertisements are placed only in cities where the distributor wishes to improve past boxoffice records or insure a specially good response for the particular picture.

As in the past there are still frequent reports of bargaining disputes between exhibitors and distributors over the percentage which each is to pay over and above the theatre's ordinary advertising budget. All distributors asserted that they never pay more than 50 per cent on cooperative campaigns.

Nevertheless reports persist that for premieres, special runs, and sometimes in bargaining arrangements distributors have paid between 60 and 90 per cent of the cooperative bill. Neither distributors nor exhibitors would admit participating in any specific instance of such a deal, however. Nevertheless they were ready with the assertion that "the other fellow" and "such and such" company had won or made concessions on particular pictures.

Cooperative advertising, when exhibitors and distributors recognize exceptional merits in a given picture, as Jack Cohn observed in 1938, is still "deemed good business to mutually help in putting extra pressure behind the product." Nevertheless, indications of mutual suspicion in respect to cooperative campaigns persist. And each deal is regarded as "very confidential" in most cases.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, classified by the Printers' Ink Publishers Information Bureau annual survey as the largest advertiser in the motion picture industry, continues to devote an important part of its budget to newspaper media.

It buys space both independently and on a cooperative basis. Recent campaigns for "The Chocolate Soldier" are an example.

Newspaper campaigns, consisting of a five insertion series of teaser copy, were inserted by MGM in 138 daily newspapers in first run cities. Cooperative copy was also used to tie in with opening dates. The Metro cooperative advertisements are on a 50-50 basis. The company

KENTUCKY SUSPENDS THEATRES' LICENSES

For the first time since the state's amusement tax law was passed in 1936, the State Tax Commission suspended the permits of two Kentucky theatres. They are the Dixie, of Olive Hill, and the Mills, of Morehead, both owned by L. H. Mills, Ward Oates, assistant revenue commissioner, said.

The tax commission sustained charges that the theatres failed to keep written records, did not tear all admission tickets in half after they were sold and failed to produce their records for Revenue Department representatives as required by law. The suspension started January 2.

Under the amusement tax law, all theatres are required to obtain state permits. There is no charge for the permits, but the theatres must post $1,000 bonds, Mr. Oates said.

pays for much newspaper space independently, however.

Teaser newspaper campaigns are also used regularly on top pictures in some 138 papers with a circulation of 25,692,644. The copy generally runs to 100 agate lines and is usually apart from the cooperative insertions.

Fox in 582 Papers

Twentieth Century-Fox, under the new advertising generalship of A. M. Botsford, is continuing the extensive cooperative newspaper advertising campaign announced by the company last August.

Cooperative advertising is currently being purchased by Twentieth Century-Fox in a list of 582 papers in 165 cities. The extent of advertising varies with each picture, but it is understood that all percentage Twentieth Century-Fox pictures are being afforded cooperative advertising. The distributor pays 50 per cent of any addition to the theatre's weekly budget.

According to Mr. Botsford, the newspaper budget will average between $12,000 and $15,000 per week during the next quarter. He emphasized that the estimate was an average and said that some special campaigns may top the figures while in other weeks newspaper space will be held to a minimum.

Nine exploitation men are now in the field for Twentieth Century-Fox, he reported. Part of their task is to place cooperative advertising with key first run spots. Twentieth Century-Fox outlets in almost every city over 100,000 are using the cooperative plan and finding it a profitable aid, it was said.

All exchange cities are included in the first run cooperative campaign and additionally it is being carried into all other important early run cities in each of the 31 territories. Standard national newspaper advertising campaigns generally cover only 125 key cities. Campaigns are running from 400 to 500 lines over the theatre's customary lineage to the 1,500 and 1,000 line insertions used for "How Green Was My Valley."

Consent decree selling has not affected Paramount's advertising policy, according to Robert Gillham, director of advertising and publicity.

The company copy style has not been altered nor has the extent of placement through cooperative newspaper space changed since the start of blocks-of-five selling.

Regional release dates have not varied sufficiently throughout the country to affect the value of pre-selling through newspaper campaigns, Mr. Gillham indicated. He said that the Paramount newspaper advertising budget continued at the same percentage of the total exploitation expense as hitherto.

Paramount copy, as in the past, centers on particular pictures. A strong institutional note is maintained throughout each campaign, however.

Cooperative newspaper advertising continues on the same basis as hitherto, Mr. Gillham reported. Campaigns are placed in key city papers in cooperation with Paramount affiliates and independent first runs. Each situation is treated as a separate case, it was reported, with costs above the theatre's ordinary budget shared on a 50-50 basis.

Although there has been a recent increase in the number of special campaigns for top RKO pictures such as "All That Money Can Buy," "Suspicion" and forthcoming releases, S. Barret McCormick, director of advertising, said that consent decree selling and regional release dates have not affected RKO advertising policy.

Estimate 75,000,000 Readers

United Artists, building its campaigns on specific pictures released for its partner-members or others, is an extensive user of newspaper space. The advance advertising readership afforded "Sundown," "Corsican Brothers" and "The Jungle Book" is estimated at 75,000,000 by Monroe Greenthal, director of UA advertising. Approximately 40 per cent of the exploitation budget is devoted to newspaper advertising.

He said that there has been no change in the proportion between newspaper and magazine media. Exhibitors, it is said, are increasingly willing to join in special newspaper displays and in some cases have paid part of the costs of two color Sunday and special newspaper insertions.

United Artists will launch an innovation in film advertising soon when it purchases space in syndicated comic weeklies distributed through Sunday newspapers. This is reported to be the first time that a motion picture company has used this media. The UA campaigns will promote "The Jungle Book" and "Corsican Brothers." The American Weekly, Hearst Sunday supplement, is also being used by UA. The weekly recently announced that motion picture copy could be inserted in sectional issues at varying weeks to coincide with release dates in the circulation areas of the publication.

Cooperative UA advertising is confined to key first run and premiere and pre-release situations. Appropriations above the theatre average are shared on a 50-50 basis. Printers' Ink calculated the UA magazine advertising budget at $163,113 for 1940.

Columbia Pictures, according to Lou Lifton, advertising director, is using approximately 150 newspapers for its campaigns. They are based on specific pictures and are non-institutional. Recent Columbia pictures receiving special attention include "You'll Never Get Rich," "You Belong to Me," "Penny Serenade" and "Bed-time Story."

Newspaper cooperative advertising is placed in approximately 150 different papers in key cities. They are on a 50-50 basis. Louis Pollock, director of Universal advertising, reports that there has been no change in company policy or its advertising budget in consequence of consent decree changes in selling by the Big Five.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by AUBREY FLANAGAN

Plans for Product.

Notwithstanding war difficulties British film studios are going ahead with plans for 1942. At Ealing R. P. Baker and Michael Balcon are preparing one of the most ambitious programmes in the company's history.

In a well advanced stage of preparation for early shooting is a story of the battle for oil, tentatively titled "Life Line." It will have German intrigues in the Near East and the building of an oil pipe line as a background. Direction will be in the hands of Sergei Nolbandov, who made "Ships With Wings." Another production scheduled for early filming is a "V" film, tentatively titled "Revolt." Much of the action takes place with occupied Paris as a background. Ealing's naval subject for the year (in 1940, they made "Convoy"; in 1941 "Ships With Wings") will be "Little Ships," a story of the corvettes and minesweepers, to be directed by Charles Frend. Another production will be an A.F.S. picture, "The Bells Go Down," based on the diary of a London A.F.S. man during the blitz. The author of the book, who remains anonymous, has been invalided out of the service after receiving the British Empire Medal. A scenic artist before the war, he has been promised a job as an assistant art director on his own story when the film goes into production. The expression "The Bells Go Down" is the technical fire brigade term meaning that the fire alarm has been given.

Documentary expert Cavalcanti has an active year ahead of him in his capacity as associate producer at Ealing. Now producing features, he has two full-length productions to handle during 1942, the first of which will probably be a story of the Abyssinian revolt. Cavalcanti has two documentary shorts already planned, one about the Fleet Air Arm, and the other a story of newspapers in wartime.

Comedy is not being overlooked. First production (on the floor at Ealing) is a new Will Hay comedy, "The Goose Steps Out," in which the comedian finds himself masquerading as a Nazi professor in a German university. He is also due to make another film for Ealing under his existing contract.

Another comedian featured in the 1942 programme is Tommy Trinder, who will probably appear in a sequel to "Sailors Three."

Jack Ramsay's "prop" department took a bow on Twentieth Century's "The Young Mr. Pitt" this week, for accomplishing a swift, seasonal changeover from deep winter to high summer on an impressive, Georgian manor house exterior at Lime Grove. Long experience of "snowstorms" at the Bush enabled "props" men to create an 18th century Christmas card aspect which should delight cinemagoers.

Grouped in a semicircle before the stately frontage of Lord Auckland's home, Waits rendered "God Rest Ye, Merry Gentlemen" for the benefit of his Lordship, snow swirled round their lanterns, casting pools of light in the darkness, and their ancient fiddles, flutes and "Serpent" horns, did melodic justice to the carol. To the window comes the Yuletide guest, William Pitt, and with his host, he smiles

U. S., AUSTRALIA LINKED BY RADIO

Direct radiotelegraph communication between the United States and Australia was established last week when RCA Communications, Inc., opened for the first time a direct radiotelegraph circuit between San Francisco and Sydney, under authorization of the FCC. The new 7,420-mile circuit will carry message traffic for New Zealand and numerous smaller islands in the general vicinity of Australasia.

Heretofore, all telegraphic communications between the United States and Australia have been handled by way of Canada or British routes.

out on the happy scene, whilst the lanterns dip and dance in the driving flakes, and the choral leader doffs his tricorne hat and bows low in the snow.

Later, the trees regained their foliage, flowers appeared, the snow evaporated and Freddie Young's sunlight flooded down on the lawn, with Robert Donat and Phyllis Calvert tete-a-tete over teacups. Children play over the lawn and Mr. Pitt's carriage waits in the background to take him back to London and Downing Street.

"The Young Mr. Pitt" finishes its 21st week at the Bush and was to be completed by Christmas. Currently, preparations are being made for the storming of the Bastille. The reconstruction of a Royal bath at Weymouth, for which scene a stretch of beach, breakwaters and the English Channel is needed, is scheduled for Raymond Lovell's immersion as George III. "The Young Mr. Pitt" is being produced for Twentieth Century by Edward Black with Maurice Ostrer in charge of production.

New Naval Film

With "Unpublished Story" now in the final cutting room stage, Two Cities Films, to whose credit go such box office hits as "Freedom Radio," and "French Without Tears" have now launched into the final pre-showing stages of the Noel Coward naval subject, "In Which We Serve."

The film has been prepared over a period of some months, and is being made with the complete collaboration of the Admiralty. Hero of the film is one of H. M. destroyers, the life and adventures of which and the life and service of the men aboard her, will be traced from its birth in 1938 to the present wartime day. There are three central characters, the Captain, a Chief P. O., and an ordinary seaman. Dunkirk and Crete are typical locales.

Noel Coward will produce, with Anthony Havelock Allan as his associate, and will direct, in collaboration with David Lean, editor of "49th Parallel."

Polish Propaganda

Active to a degree higher than many of their contemporaries are Concanon Films, to whose list of achievements go some creditable propaganda pictures inspired by the plight and purpose of Free Poland. Concanon, who are still making shorts with a Polish bias—one is in current production—have, however, launched into a wider sphere, have just completed a film for the National Savings Committee, and have another on the roster dealing with the women's military organization, the A.T.S.

The first mentioned film deals with the Polish Merchant Service and includes as one of its posthumous heroes the novelist Joseph Conrad.

The Savings film is something of a novelty, having as its hero one Frank Laskier, a one-legged seaman who leapt to fame overnight for a vivid broadcast over the B.B.C. network. "Seaman Frank Goes to Sea" was made with Laskier's approval and collaboration only on condition that it was in aid of some national effort or message.

On the screens of the West End, currently, is "The Poles Weigh Anchor," the seventh Concanon film made for the Polish Government. Directed by Stefan Osiecki, the production has some actuality shots taken at Narvik.

"Back Room Boy" with Maurice Ostrer in charge of production, Edward Black producing, is scheduled to be completed by the end of the week. Herbert Mason, meanwhile, is speeding up work on the final shots, in which Arthur Askey appears, to release the star for pantomime rehearsals. Arthur has about one week's work, including back projection shots to be taken at Shepherd's Bush, before completing the longest and most strenuous part he has yet had on the screen.

Radio has supplied the screen with several stars, and Warner Bros. have already derived Ronald Reagan and Dennis Morgan from that source for their American productions. But, for probably the first time in England, a news commentator has been taken from the B.B.C. and put into a playing part in a British picture.

It happened this week when Gerry Wilmot, B.B.C. voice on American and Canadian affairs, was transplanted from microphone to lens for an essential role in "Flying Fortress," now being produced by Warner Bros., at the Teddington studios, and production executives rather like Mr. Wilmot's screen possibilities.

Walter Forde expects to complete actual shooting of "Flying Fortress" a few days before Christmas, so that it will have been a full 12 weeks on the floor. Already the script has entailed 71 speaking parts, representing the largest engagement of acting talent yet made for a Teddington production.

Set to go for British National, are Leslie and Elizabeth Hiscott, who are ready with "Rendezvous for Convoy," a subject written by Michael Barringer and dealing with Fifth Columnists, spies and saboteurs. The film may be made at Warners Teddington Studios, since British National's schedule may take up all available space at the Rock Studios at Elstree.

INDUSTRY IN BRITAIN DENTED BUT NOT BROKEN BY WAR OF BOMBS

Superior Pictures Have Made Up for Lack of Quantity and the Public Still Seeks and Pays for Entertainment

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

After twelve months in which the thumping throb of bombing planes and the cataclysmic roar of high explosive have been the substance of the sound track, in which the blaze of reddened horizons and burning cities have been the arcs to light the drama, there is a story to tell of the screen in Britain.

It is a story about which we Britishers can be pardoned for feeling satisfaction, a story in which courage and stoicism, the inspiring and the miraculous, each have a part. In spite of Hitler and his legions, in spite of the Luftwaffe and its bombs, in the teeth of attempted blockade, and regardless of a complete readjustment of social patterns and values, the motion picture industry has gone on making films and the British public has gone on paying to see them. Though the films have been fewer, fewer, in fact, than in any year on record, the turnover has been relatively higher, and out of the queues which for some months past have consistently ornamented the picture houses the exhibitor has extracted revenue which a year ago he would not, in his wildest dreams, have contemplated.

Film Interest High

It is not merely that patriotic motives have inspired popular interest in the British film. There surely was never a war marked by so little flag-wagging and chanting of patriotic ditties. The reason lies, probably, in two facts. Despite the appalling conditions under which the film makers have worked, some highly commendable pictures have been evolved. In the change of living conditions, the blackout, evacuation, and the need for escapist distraction are factors stimulating picture consciousness in a war weary people.

That some of these films, "49th Parallel" and "Target for Tonight," for example, have been war subjects is not necessarily an argument on behalf of war as a box office subject. The equal success of "Pimpernel Smith," "Major Barbara," "Quiet Wedding," "The Ghost Train," "Love on the Dole" and "Old Mother Riley's Ghosts" make that patent. Indeed experience points the other way. The records may be read as suggesting that only when war is treated in a realist manner, when the supposedly comic aspects of war are avoided, can it safely be considered potential box office. They may be read, too, as suggesting that provided entertainment quality be adequate and production level reasonable, the escapist film has an advantage from the start.

Out of these two years of war what remains? Little in fact, and yet, in compari-

OBSERVE BLACKOUT EFFECTS IN CANADA

Canadian film executives were in Vancouver, B. C., at the outbreak of the U. S.-Jap war, it was reported from Toronto, last week, to get first hand information on the effect of air raid warnings and blackouts on theatre business. Among those on Canada's Pacific Coast at the time, it was learned, were president Paul Nathan-son and general manager Haskell Masters of Odeon Theatres, and H. T. Long, general manager of Associated Theatres. The latter was reported to be looking after Odeon interests until the arrival of Mr. Masters on his trip to the West Coast as a circuit official.

Theatre patronage at Vancouver first run houses, according to reports of the observers, was at a minimum on the three nights of the total blackout. On the fourth night, when street lights were permitted again, box office receipts were said to be equal to the combined take of the three blackout nights.

son, a lot. The skeleton of an industry, the barest bones of its personnel, a mere handful of studios, the tattered remnants of a protective Act.

At the moment of writing, but ten features are in active production (plus a countless bevy of documentary shorts). Not many, it is true, when compared with the high pressure of four or five years back. In a country mainly producing airplanes, battleships, guns and tanks, it is a total not to be despised. It is a figure, under wartime conditions, of maximum capacity. A figure, too, higher than it has been at many points during the past year. With only some ten or twelve studio stages available, the rest commandeered by the Government for purposes it considers more urgent, with the younger men almost all called, or about to be called to the Colours and materials rationed, the merely physical processes of production are more than difficult.

It has been the industry's fiercest criticism of the Government not that it has done this or neglected to do that, but that quite bluntly, it has not been able to make up its mind what to do about it. Until the end of the year, over two years after the war began, it gave no clear lead or indication of what role it wished the industry to play. Pious expressions in Parliament, the platitudinous verbal blessings of Ministers of the Crown, lip service to the industry's role in sustaining morale and in assisting propaganda, have been its main contribution. A succession of plans and schemes abandoned or shelved, the threat of a Government Commission, the virtual promise of a Credit Bank, have punctuated the year. . . . Beyond that nothing. . . . Nothing save that men have been drawn away from the studios and the studios drawn away from the industry.

That the industry, or at least the motion picture itself, has a role to play in the war machine seems to be accepted in one way or another by the Ministry of Information and by the Service Departments. Through both these channels the Government has participated in the production of motion pictures to serve as weapons in the waging of war. The one has established itself as the largest producer of short films, producer by sponsorship and commission that is, the industry has ever known. Each of the Service Departments has its own production unit and not only commissions pictures from commercial firms, but also with technicians and experts recruited, or conscripted, from the studios, and others trained within the ranks, makes its own pictures, and often makes them extremely well. Their objectives are instructional, educational and propaganda.

The Ministry of Information alone, since the war began has some 150 films to its credit, the vast majority of them made to order by industry organizations, all, with a solitary exception, of short feature length.

Another highminded body performing Government propaganda abroad, but with a deliberate disregard for and remoteness from the war, the British Council, has some 50 sponsored films to its name.

Thanks to this immense stimulus the documentary and the short film has in the past year appreciated incalculably both its artistic and its entertainment value. Some of the Ministry of Information shorts, despite that they have been designed for propaganda, have been unqualified box office successes. The only M. O. I. feature, "Target for Tonight", is one of the hits of the year. The documentary thus has come to play an entirely new role in the annals of motion picture Fame.

Despite the reduction of the Quota percentages the Films Act remains on the Statute Book. A legislative reality, a blessing, it is claimed, to the producers, a burden to the distributors and an impracticability to the exhibitors. When the year's record comes to be examined in detail numerous defaults, both on the part of renters and exhibitors, will inevitably be found. It is not insignificant that in the vast majority of instances the most successful British pictures of the year have been made on a voluntary production basis, irrespective of quality, and distributed by firms who need not worry about the Act.

Americans Limited

The part of the Americans has inevitably been a meager one. Few of the outstanding successes of the year, save perhaps "Quiet Wedding" and "Kipps", have been made with foreign money. During the year millions of dollars remained frozen here under the Treasury regulations. It is an emphatic fact that the American corporations on this side would have been glad to use much of the frozen revenue for making British pictures, for no better reason than that they need films and that money in use is better than money in the ice box.

The mechanical difficulties of production, the limited studio space, the difficulties of securing personnel, the obstacles in the way of bringing over Hollywood experts, and the comparative absence of stars, have ruined their plans. Determination of the Government to drain the utmost manpower from the studios has been relentless. Despite the attenuated ministrations of a Government-Industry Manpower Panel there have been but few concessions. Technicians previously reserved have been de-reserved and have been, or are being taken into the Services. These difficulties which have prevented both voluntary producers and Quota producers from doing more than they have done have not, however, prevented the production of such films as those mentioned above.

British Industry Little Affected by War of Bombs

Numerically the year, as already indicated, has been meager. Between December 1, 1940 and the same date this year only 49 new British films were trade shown, less than half the previous year's total. For the last year in which figures are available some 192 shorts were produced, approximately double the number necessary under the Films Act's percentages.

Out of this statistical array it is, of course, at the moment impossible to identify an unqualified champion. Until the year's final figures are available that will not be practicable. Probably no single film of the British year has netted more attention, drawn back to the box office a figure higher in relation to its cost than "Target For Tonight", a Crown Film Unit production, a realist documentary, a picture without a professional player, devoid of stars as the industry knows them, but one of the most vivid essays in real life drama the British screen has seen.

Pascal's "Major Barbara" which followed the success of his earlier "Pygmalion", drew, and is still drawing, crowds wherever it is shown.

Leslie Howard's "one man" film "Pimpernel Smith", produced directed and starred in by Howard himself, may well prove to be top grosser of the year. It is estimated that by the time it is finally withdrawn it will have brought in at least £120,000.

Paul Soskin's "Quiet Wedding" with its sophisticated comedy, its polish of production and its superlative characterizations, hit the box office right in the bull's eye.

"Parallel" Business Big

The industry had to wait long for "49th Parallel", but found it worth waiting for, the film doing record business everywhere at the moment of writing, made a name for a new star, Eric Portman, whose work as the Nazi submarine commander was so good that criticism has been offered that the film was too kind to the Germans! It established what many discerning students have long believed that in Michael Powell Britain has a director whose polish and vitality are equal to the best anywhere.

Nobody would claim for Askey's films that they merit immortalisation in the halls of artistic Fame. That they can, two of them at least, "Ghost Train" and "Charlie's Aunt", be made for an average of £40,000 and gross around the £100,000 mark explains why "Big Hearted" Arthur should be third among Britain's Box Office Champions. His immediate leader, Arthur Lucan, commands Fame in films even less expensive, but not less lucrative in comparison as returners of revenue.

Formby's comedies, notably "Spare a Copper" and "Its Turned Out Nice Again" have been among this star's commercial hits. Box office bull's eyes, too, have been scored by 20th Century-Fox's "Kipps", a sensitive human cameo made in the fiercest blitz conditions and premiered on Britain's front line at Folkestone, by John Baxter's human and social drama, "Love On The Dole", by Marcel Hellman's "Jeannie", by R.K.O.-Radio's most ambitious British effort this year, "Dangerous Moonlight", and, in still its early stages, by Paramount's most recent "Hatter's Castle".

Here are the pictures which have earned display in the galleries of wartime Fame.

Look on these films and little will be found of war, no apparent indication that they were produced in the severest conditions, with bombing and blitzing punctuating their birth, disrupting communications, interrupting actual shooting, in some instances damaging the studios, but not once, it is believed injuring or killing technicians or artists.

This it can hardly astonish the close observer that many of the earlier contributors to British Fame have no part in this year's story, that those who have are in some cases newcomers. The movingly natural work of Deborah Kerr in "Love on the Dole", the hoydenish performance of Barbara Mullen in "Jeannie", the portrayal already referred to of Eric Portman in "49th Parallel", bring new faces to the hall of Fame, no less remarkable for their unfamiliarity. Among the names who made these things possible directors Harold French, Michael Powell, Lance Comfort and a more experienced personality, John Baxter, step right to the front row and are not likely to step back unless circumstances drag them away. French's sparkling work on "Jeannie", Comfort's "Hatter's Castle" and "Penn of Pennsylvania", Baxter's "Love on the Dole" and "The Common Touch," earned them laurels. Producer Ian Dalrymple, whose enlightenment and sensibility have meant so much to British propaganda, which he assists as chief of the Crown Film Unit, writer Anatole de Grunwald who has more scripts to his name than any other Britisher, Bernard Knowles, cameraman on many of the year's winners, are no novices or strangers to the scene.

Documentary Report

In the documentary field Donald Taylor of Strand Films, Paul Rotha's company and the Crown Film Unit itself stand out for the easy skill with which they have translated flawless production and creative treatment of fact into box office. No personality in this field ranks higher probably than Harry Watt, producer-director of "Target For Tonight" and maker of the earlier and successful "Britain Can Take It". Out of what material can these men then be able to mould tomorrow's Fame. It is a question not easy to answer, for there is no question propounded during a war such as this but can be answered informally but conclusively by high explosive.

The reduction of the quota percentages would seem inevitably to lead to a reduction in the volume of feature production, for voluntary production has scant chance of healthy survival under present conditions. Against this seemingly logical thesis the continued production activities of companies associated with the General Film Group, the consistent activity of British National, the unceasing financial interest of Oscar Deutsch, the uncanny flair for creating box office Fame shown by such impressarios as Maurice Ostrer, Edward Black, Paul Soskin and the Two Cities organization, gives strong hope that British studios will ride the storm.

No responsible reporter would dare to forecast the shape or the direction of tomorrow's Fame. Even a military expert with divine inspiration would shirk that delicate task. Whether quotas be reduced or increased, whether the Government blesses or ignores the industry, whether the public clamors for more Formby, Lucan and Askey, the crucible of war is such an incalculable factor that its shapes and its creations are impossible to foreshadow. No envisaging of the year to come but must be preceded by that brief but crucial word IF. If we are still free from the invader, If the bombers do not come as they came last year, If we are not all making tanks or careering across Caucasia, If things, in fact, are no less abnormal than they were in the past year, then we may have as good a story to tell as we do today. For it takes a lot to disturb the normalcy and composure of the British people, takes more than Hitler to drag them from the picture house. Indeed the greatest of all the exhibits in Britain's gallery of Fame is the British people itself. The industry owes them everything. Let us hope that in 1942 it will help repay some of that debt.

New Television Camera Reported

A television camera so sensitive that it can operate without benefit of artificial lighting was reported over last weekend to have been developed by RCA engineers. The camera was described as being more sensitive than the human eye, thus permitting pickups under almost any conditions anywhere.

Details of this new invention were withheld and a spokesman for RCA declared that there could be no comment at this time.

The new camera was said to be capable of giving excellent definition, despite the fact that little light is needed. It was described as being capable of picking up an image in a room without extra lighting, during day or night. The only lighting required, it was said, would be to obtain extra highlights and spot lights to eliminate shadows.

According to the report, the camera is ready for use although tests are continuing to eliminate small technical deficiencies which usually are found in the first use of such inventions.

The question of lighting has been one of the principal problems of television. Many actors and actresses refuse to appear before the standard television camera, the iconoscope, because of the extreme heat radiated by the lamps. The orthicon camera can pick up a fairly good image using only a bank of neon lamps which are cooler, but many television engineers used the iconoscope for studio pickups because the latter gives much sharper definition.

Industry in U. S. Headed for War Boom: Harley

We may expect a boom in the film industry in this country shortly. It will compare, or exceed, that in Britain, where shortages of materials, damages to theatres and studios, and the air alarm generally, have combined to hamper films somewhat. Such was the prediction and promise of Francis Harley, Twentieth Century-Fox's director for Great Britain, who arrived in this country last week with Robert T. Kane, the company's production manager in that country; and who on Monday greeted the trade press at the New York home office.

Films are an amusement staple in wartime, Mr. Harley emphasized. Their service to the British nation is tremendous; and the part American films are playing is "immeasurable," he said, adding that films take up the bulk of playing time.

While some military men and others in the British Government have been seeing less and less the viewpoint of film people, as the need for men and materials there grows, Mr. Harley predicted American Government leaders would continue to recognize films for their great contributions, not only for maintenance of civilian morale, but also for military instructions.

Production Continues

Mr. Harley noted that production in England continues, war or no, bombs regardless, and even with shortages of materials and personnel, and with tremendous expense.

His company made three films the past year: "Once a Crook," "Kips," and "The Young Mr. Pitt." The second stars Diana Wynward; the last, Robert Donat. Both the latter were made by Carol Reed.

Fox will probably make the same number the coming year, he intimated; it has no intention of abandoning production.

Of "Young Mr. Pitt," he remarked it was a big film for Great Britain, costing over $1,000,000. It was finished ten days ago, and will soon make an appearance here. How it will go in the United States—and, how any English film will go in this country—Mr. Harley refused to hazard. He remarked English films were unpredictable in the reaction of the American public to them; big pictures may flop and "B" films may hit, and also the converse may happen. Parochialism is intense in many films, he noted.

He commented again on the difficulty of production in England. The shortages are increasing. Most pressing are those of studio space, raw stock, actors and actresses, technicians, paper for posters and photographs. Many actors are in the armed forces. Britain has few leading actors, generally, so the field is small, and it is necessary to requisition the actors back from those forces, after much trouble.

Although he would not predict the number, nor name the stories, of films to be made by Fox in Britain, Mr. Harley did confirm one would be "La Libre Belgique," from the book, "Uncensored." This tells of the underground Belgian newspaper, originated in the last World War, revived in this one.

Business in Britain is good; much better than last year, and approaching that of 1938, a record year, Mr. Harley said.

He reverted to production difficulties, again: the industry faced military men who were less concerned with its maintenance than with getting men for the army, and labor for war industry. Women have been filling key production posts; but now, Mr. Harley pointed out, women are being conscripted.

While theatrical film production may languish, production of army instructional films shoots ahead, Mr. Harley noted, adding that these are under the supervision of an industry man, Paul Kimberley, National Screen Service. Greatest difficulty in army instructionals is their distribution to mobile armed units, Mr. Harley asserted.

He will remain in this country several months.

Innes Predicts a Boom

"The theatre is heading for a terrific boom," is the forecast of Hiller Innes, head of Paramount Eastern office in New York. Visiting Atlantic City over the holidays, his first visit here in 10 years, the Paramount talent scout said that in wartime, the public needs distraction. More than ever do the people require a means of escape.

"Morale is the most important equipment in war," he said. "Both the armed forces and the civilian population need it, and in my opinion, the theatre supplies the required distraction."

Paramount, he revealed, has studied with interest the effects of the war upon the British in relation to their entertainment interests. "And we have found," he added, "that they will sacrifice comforts and necessities for the privilege of attending the theatre, standing in line for hours, waiting to buy tickets."

"When we, over here, grow accustomed to a war-time regime, and that will be soon, we will set about to adjust ourselves and to budget as much time and money for the lighter things of life."

Harold Old Named Manager

Majors Planning Product on Coast

Product was the subject of special executive conversation this week at the coast studios of Paramount, Universal, Warners and United Artists.

Neil F. Agnew, general sales manager of Paramount, Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board, and Robert Gilham, director of advertising and publicity, arrived in Hollywood Monday to discuss the distribution and exploitation plans on new films and to preview finished product.

The remainder of the week was to be spent in conference with Y. Frank Freeman, vice president in charge of production, and other studio executives including B. G. DeSylva, Henry Ginsberg and George Brown.

William A. Scully, general sales manager of Universal, arrived on the coast Wednesday for conferences with Nate J. Blumberg, president, Cliff Work, production chief, and Matthew Fox, vice president and executive assistant to the president.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

GO WEST, YOUNG LADY: Penny Singleton, Glenn Ford.—Right down our alley. Good business and fine comments. A natural for a small town. Played mid-week and suggest that it be set in there. This isn't a big show but if your patronage is like mine, farmers and folks from the small towns, they'll make you think your playing a super-special feature without percentage. Running time, 70 minutes.—Al Eliassen, Koronis theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES MR. JORDAN: Robert Montgomery, Claude Rains.—Due to the annual Christmas slump business was off, but those who came thought it was very good. This is one of those pictures that has to be seen from the beginning or else it won't make sense. This is one of those rare and pleasant surprises. This is truly one of fine entertainment quality. Running time, 94 minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau theatre, Hamtramck, Mich. General patronage.

MEN IN HER LIFE, THE: Loretta Young, Dean Jagger.—A fine production that had absolutely no draw here. This type of show is death to a small town exhibitor. Loretta Young looked too drawn out and seemed miles from Hollywood in regards to glamour but she gave a wonderful performance. This is a feature that the ladies will enjoy, but not the males. Running time, 89 minutes.—Al Eliassen, Koronis theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Small town patronage.

THUNDERING WEST, THE: Charles Starrett, Iris Meredith.—Seemed to satisfy our farm lads. Did nice business. Running time, 57 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Park theatre, Chatham, Ont. General patronage.

UNDER AGE: Nan Grey, Tom Neal.—This picture has a sex angle; when exploited as such seems to do business. It is a very fine program picture. Running time, 60 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Plaza theatre, Tilbury, Ont. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BILLY THE KID: Robert Taylor.—They don't come any better for a spot like mine. Plenty of action and beautiful color. A first class Western. When Metro releases a product whether Western or otherwise they are of the best. Not a kick in a carload. Running time, 99 minutes.—A. L. Dove, Bengough theatre, Bengough, Sask., Can. Small town patronage.

MAISIE WAS A LADY: Ann Southern, Lew Ayres.—Worst of the Maisie series thus far shown. Not any comedy or anything but just plain film. Running time, 78 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

STARS LOOK DOWN, THE: Margaret Lockwood.—I cannot say what this picture did for me because Christmas week is always way off. But as far as this picture's qualities go they are limited. As with most English pictures they are too long. The story is a grim one dealing with the Welsh coal miners. There is little, if any, comedy and the story ends with the failure to rescue five trapped miners. Lionel Barrymore speaks at the beginning and end, but few will notice him. The story if followed is interesting. Running time, 98 minutes. Peter Kavel, Campau, Hamtramck, Mich. General patronage.

Paramount

ADVENTURES IN DIAMONDS: George Brent, Isa Miranda.—This one is from a few seasons back but it surprised us. It has a good story, action, romance and comedy. My patrons enjoyed it very much. It's a lot better than some of these program pictures. Jewel-thief Isa Miranda and special agent George Brent bring this story into some suspenseful moments. Running time, 75 minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau theatre, Hamtramck, Mich. General patronage.

CHEROKEE STRIP: Richard Dix, Florence Rice.—Although somewhat old did nice week-end business on second half of program. Running time, 84 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Park theatre, Chatham, Ont. General patronage.

GLAMOUR BOY: Jackie Cooper, Susanne Foster.—This picture is very good and has much comedy. Is good enough for any day in the week. Running time, 80 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

LADY EVE, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Henry Fonda.—Preston Sturges directing. Good comedy, several scenes will roll you in the aisles gasping for breath. Drew well. Running time, 95 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH: Bob Hope, Paulette Goddard.—We liked this, but the weather kept too many of our patrons away, so business was way off. Those who saw it really enjoyed it, and with decent weather we could have filled the house for every showing. Snow and sleet made roads dangerous. Running time, 90 minutes.—Al Eliassen, Koronis theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Small town patronage.

ROAD TO ZANZIBAR, THE: Bing Crosby, Bob Hope.—Originally booked this mid-week. After seeing trailers changed to week-end with a western. The best African thrill action adventure since Tarzan. Plot is based on the unfulfilled treaty of Versailles about a scull taken by Germany and not returned. A party of adventurers led by a woman go into the interior after being stranded on coast. Lions attack and kill several of the party—you see this. Natives get almost all the rest. It will keep you on the edge of your seat, and the kids nearly caused a riot. Running time, 92 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

YOU'RE THE ONE: Bonnie Baker, Orrin Tucker.—A mediocre musical. Running time, 81 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

Producers Releasing Corp.

JUNGLE MAN: Buster Crabbe.—I don't know, it must be the animals that bring them in. There isn't anything else in this one. It's about 90 per cent stock shots, five per cent fake sound and five per cent story. This is the kind of stuff that you wish they would lose on a wrecked plane or something. It doesn't make sense and there isn't anything to follow. Outside of a few old stock shots of wild game, there is nothing at all. I'd rather see a western. Running time, 61 minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau theatre, Hamtramck, Mich. General patronage.

RKO Radio

JUNGLE CAVALCADE: Frank Buck.—When we played this picture in Chatham we did O. K., but in Tilbury our business dropped 40 per cent. People sick of snakes. Ladies didn't like it. Running time, 77 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Plaza theatre, Tilbury, Ont. General patronage.

TARNISHED ANGEL: Sally Eilers, Lee Bowman.—A fair program picture that we doubled with a second run picture. Did poor business. Running time, 67 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Park theatre, Chatham, Ont. General patronage.

TOM BROWN'S SCHOOL DAYS: Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Freddie Bartholomew, Jimmy Lydon.—Played for Book Week. Story of English school of Rugby. Interesting presentation of English school life, some comedy, similar in effect as "Goodbye, Mr. Chips." Running time, 81 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

TOM, DICK AND HARRY: Ginger Rogers, George Murphy.—This all adds up to four dreams; three for Miss Rogers and a nightmare for me. Running time, 86 minutes.—Delmar C. Fox, Fox theatre, Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BELLE STARR: Gene Tierney, Randolph Scott.—I yelled my head off to hold this picture and I think it was worth the effort. But there is something very unattractive about black even when it's in color, and when they burned down poor little Belle's shanty I think they made a mistake that they didn't toss in the shooting schedule and gather at the river for the duration. Running time, 87 minutes.—Delmar C. Fox, Fox theatre, Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

BELLE STARR: Gene Tierney, Randolph Scott.—I was disappointed in this picture and so were the patrons. Gene Tierney too young and innocent looking for the part. Did good business on Christmas Day, but comment not pleasing. Running time, 85 minutes.—John W. Warner, Plaza theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

GREAT AMERICAN BROADCAST: Jack Oakie, Alice Faye, John Payne.—Played this second run. The picture was good, but the before-Christmas slump hurt. Running time, 80 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Park theatre, Chatham, Ont. General patronage.

HUDSON'S BAY: Paul Muni, Laird Cregar.—Nice weekend business on second run with a western. Running time, 95 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Park theatre, Chatham, Ont. General patronage.

I WAKE UP SCREAMING: Victor Mature, Betty Grable.—I was afraid of this one at the price I paid for it, but I do not regret it now; it sure was a honey. Running time, 81 minutes.—John W. Warner, Plaza theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

I WAKE UP SCREAMING: Victor Mature, Betty Grable.—Good picture and good business. Running time, 82 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

MOON OVER HER SHOULDER: John Sutton, Lynn Bari.—Just a program picture which failed to draw. Running time, 68 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SUN VALLEY SERENADE: Sonja Henie, John Payne.—Sonja Henie not popular here, but the picture did well because of Glenn Miller and his orchestra, and the Nicholas Brothers. Very good picture. Running time, 81 minutes.—John W. Warner, Plaza theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

United Artists

NEW WINE: Ilona Massey, Binnie Barnes.—A very fine picture that brought many favorable comments, but lacks boxoffice. No good unless they like classics. Running time, 87 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Park theatre, Chatham, Ont. General patronage.

NIAGARA FALLS: Marjorie Woodworth, Tom Brown.—Real good light entertainment that seemed to satisfy. Should play well anywhere. Running time, 43 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Park theatre, Chatham, Ont. General patronage.

POT O' GOLD: James Stewart, Paulette Goddard.—One of my patrons, a jitterbug, but otherwise quite normal, remarked upon leaving that this was "just wishey." By referring to the box office I came to the conclusion that "wishey" may be freely translated to mean "O. K." and must not be confused with "washey." The latter is a term borrowed from the ancient Chinese to indicate "no soap." This is "wishey" as any date I've had with U. A. Running time, 95 minutes.—Delmar C. Fox, Fox theatre, Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

Universal

ARGENTINE NIGHTS: The Ritz Brothers, Andrews Sisters—Enjoyable musical comedy. Not a lot of plot, but good every-day music and comedy. Should give average gross on weekend with western, as we did. Running time, 80 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

BAD MAN FROM RED BUTTE: Johnny Mack Brown, Bob Baker—Johnny Mack Brown is rapidly approaching third from top in popularity. These westerns are full of action, good story and splendid musical scoring. My patrons are educated to good westerns—Autry, Rogers, Cassidy and Brown. Running time, 58 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

BANK DICK: W. C. Fields, Cora Witherspoon—This picture is saved from oblivion by a Mack Sennett chase at the end. Running time, 74 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

BLACK FRIDAY: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi—Mediocre thriller that is not very thrilling or exciting. Running time, 70 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

ENEMY AGENT: Richard Cromwell, Helen Vinson—Timely and fairly interesting. Running time, 60 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

FLAME OF NEW ORLEANS, THE: Marlene Dietrich, Bruce Cabot—Direction by Renee Clair shows good detail work interesting to artists type audience. Lacks action compared to "Seven Sinners," or "Destry Rides Again." Fairly enjoyable Old New Orleans story of a woman who gives up love to marry for love. Running time, 79 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

HOUSE OF SEVEN GABLES: George Sanders, Margaret Lindsay—Did not see this, but it drew well in the middle of the week with "Laugh It Off." Questioned some who saw it and the replies were that the picture was good. Running time, 88 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

LADY FROM CHEYENNE: Loretta Young, Robert Preston—Doubled with "Life With Henry." Ran Thanksgiving special matinee and turned away the crowds. Did three days outstanding business. Both pictures good and well liked. Sure hated to turn those people away when usually they are hard to get in. Running time, 88 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

MODEL WIFE: Joan Blondell, Dick Powell—Fair comedy, suitable for midweek. Running time, 78 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

MUTINY ON THE BLACKHAWK: Richard Arlen, Andy Devine—Action filled story above average. Doubled with "You're Not So Tough." Running time, 61 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

PONY POST: Johnny Mack Brown, Fuzzy Knight—I don't understand why Universal pays Johnny Mack Brown a salary and features Fuzzy Knight in such silly comedy. (Let's let the audience sing instead of Knight.) Universal had one of the best directors in Ray Taylor, but they sure went haywire on "Pony Post." Running time, 60 minutes.—John W. Warner, Plaza theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

SEVEN SINNERS: Marlene Dietrich, John Wayne—Highforward vamping. Plenty of rough and tumble fighting. Good action and story. Running time, 88 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

SOUTH TO KARANGA: Charles Bickford, James Craig—Full of action, exciting African locale. Murder mystery and charge of African natives against the first train to Karanga and attack of the natives on Karanga. Should go well on weekend with western. Running time, 60 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

YOU'RE NOT SO TOUGH: Billy Halop, Huntz Hall—Drew above average for midweek; however, good enough for weekend. Good story and interesting, especially for the teen age. Running time, 72 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

Warner Bros.-First National

BLUES IN THE NIGHT: Lloyd Nolan, Priscilla Lane—Good picture and fair business. This is a musical show with a gangster background, and rather rowdy stuff. Running time, 88 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

INTERNATIONAL SQUADRON: Ronald Reagan, Olympe Bradna—Mr. Producer, will you please make me up about six of these for the next 12 months and it will indeed be a Happy New Year for me. And I don't care if you did have to buy some shots from Howard Hughes; you have revived my faith in Santa Claus. Running time, 87 minutes.—Delmar C. Fox, Fox theatre, Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

MANPOWER: Edward G. Robinson, Marlene Dietrich—One mistake for not having a western weekend, although this was a fair picture. Running time, 105 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Plaza theatre, Tilbury, Ont. General patronage.

MEET JOHN DOE: Gary Cooper, Barbara Stanwyck—A great story of the American citizen with a large cast which was enjoyed by the majority of my patrons, but had a few walkouts. Not small town entertainment. Running time, 132 minutes.—A. L. Dove, Bengough theatre, Bengough, Sask., Can. Small town patronage.

MY LOVE CAME BACK: Olivia de Havilland, Jeffrey Lynn—Sophisticated swing music. Delightful story which leaves you feeling as pleasantly warm as a cocktail. You'll forget the war and your troubles. Running time, 85 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

NO TIME FOR COMEDY: James Stewart, Rosalind Russell—Undoubtedly the poorest picture ever run with comparative star caliber. A few giggles, but no laughs in the entire show. Uninteresting, dull, trite plot. The stars, title and trailers fooled some the first day. Second day was the lowest in three years. Running time, 99 minutes.—W. G. Clark, Alamo theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.

Short Features

Columbia

COMMUNITY SING, No. 9: Ran this Christmas Eve and a very good time was had by all. Running time, 10 minutes.—Delmar C. Fox, Fox theatre, Alberta, Canada.

I'LL NEVER HEIL AGAIN: There Stooges—Saw this one in another house and booked it. Like "You Natzy Spy," this one deals with the present international situation and is very comical. My patrons go for these three nuts and they always please. Well, almost always. If they like the Stooges they'll like this one. Running time, 18 minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau theatre, Hamtramck, Mich.

FLICKER MEMORIES: Pete Smith—An old-time movie with comments by Pete Smith. Very good here. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount theatre, Dewey, Okla.

LITTLE CEASARIO: Cartoon—This is a nice little cartoon. About the same kind as the rest of Metro's cartoons. A nice little story, some comedy and good color. You won't be sorry if you run this. Running time, eight minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau theatre, Hamtramck, Mich.

TELL-TALE HEART: Entertaining two-reel drama from a morbid story by Edgar Allen Poe. Proving again that crime does not pay. Running time, 20 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount theatre, Dewey, Okla.

Paramount

SNEAK, SNOOP AND SNITCH: Cartoon—Another cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—Harland Rankin, Plaza theatre, Tilbury, Ont.

Republic

MEET THE STARS: Equally as popular as Screen Snapshots—Harland Rankin, Plaza theatre, Tilbury, Ont.

RKO Radio

MAD ABOUT MOONSHINE: Edgar Kennedy—This one is not up to the standard Kennedy comedies. It's slow in getting started and it doesn't have very many laughs. Hillbillies feuding and moonshine in the basement—that's about all. Running time, 18 minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau theatre, Hamtramck, Mich.

PLUTO'S DREAM HOUSE: Disney Cartoon—On Disney cartoons my reports are all the same. Very good. There are very few weak ones, if any. This one is all about Pluto's dog house. Mickey finds a magic lamp and it starts to build the dog house. How it's done turns out to be the story. Good color. Running time, eight minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau theatre, Hamtramck, Mich.

SUNK BY THE CENSUS: Edgar Kennedy—Seen before, but still entertains. Running time, 18 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Plaza theatre, Tilbury, Ont.

VOTE TROUBLE: Grouch Club Series—Seemed to like it O. K. Running time, 10 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Plaza theatre, Tilbury, Ont.

WACKY WORM, THE: Merry Melody cartoon—Boy, oh boy, here's one for the books. In its comedy they want, then one is it. It has a little worm in the cartoon version of Jerry Colonna and it's a scream from start to finish. Running time, seven minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau theatre, Hamtramck, Mich.

Serials*Columbia

IRON CLAW, THE: Chapter 11—This serial has gotten so bad that the kids won't even stay to see it. However, this chapter does pick up a little bit. In fact, it's the first one since chapter one that does make any sense. I for one will be happy when this is over. I know my patrons will be.

Republic

KING OF THE TEXAS HANGERS: This new serial from Republic is pleasing all and drawing extra business.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount theatre, Dewey, Okla.

Milgram Named Film Buyer

David Milgram, head of Affiliated Theatres in Philadelphia, has been named film buyer by Benjamin Sork, operator of the Rio theatres in Reading and Schuylkill Haven, Pa. The Rio houses, however, will be operated independently of the circuit.

Uniformed Men Admitted Free

The 1,200-seat Strand, downtown subsequent run theatre in Cincinnati, which, on reopening recently under management of the 531 Walnut Corporation, subsidiary of Associated Theatres, Detroit, established a policy of remaining open until 3 A.M. for the benefit of defense workers, now is admitting free all soldiers and sailors in uniform. This is the first theatre in the Cincinnati area to have established such a policy.

Weekly Attendance in Mexico High

by LUIS BECERRA CELIS
in Mexico City

One of the prime reasons for the tremendous popularity of American pictures in Mexico, apart from their quality, is gleaned from the report by the National Statistics Department that 250,000 persons in Mexico speak, read and write English fluently and that about 700,000 others know enough of English to get the fine points of the Hollywood productions. These persons are almost all among the regulars who attend the 1,009 active theatres in this country and which have a combined weekly paid attendance that is calculated at about 1,222,000.

The 1940 national census gave Mexico a population of 20,000,000.

Impartiality in forbidding exhibitions of pictures, whether they be Mexican or foreign, by the federal film supervising and censoring department is shown with its renewed refusal to permit screenings of "La Mancha de Sangre" ("The Blood Stain"), produced in Mexico three years ago by Brito Best Maugard. The ban is because the department considers the picture to be entirely immoral, even if parts of it are deleted.

Sr. Maugard has frequently sought to get a permit for the exhibition of his film which was made long before the department was organized. The department is upholding the ban of the previous censorship board.

Changes in B. & K. Acquisitions

Jack Norris was retained as manager of the Portage theatre; Leo Brown remained at the Admiral theatre, and Herbert Chatkin, formerly assistant manager of the Northshore Theatre, succeeded Bob Templer as manager of the Drake Theatre, when Balaban & Katz took over the trio of houses in Chicago, from the GCS Circuit on January 1st. The houses have been placed under district manager Abe Platt's supervision.

"Vanishing Virginian" Premiere

"The Vanishing Virginian" will have its world premiere January 23rd at the Paramount theatre in Lynchburg, Va., Metro Goldwyn Mayer announced this week. Edwin Knopf produced the picture and Frank Borzage directed.

Orpheum Dividend

In its first dividend distribution since the default of its predecessor on the latter's first mortgage bond in 1933, the Orpheum Company, Inc., in Seattle, Wash., paid $1 a share dividend to its stockholders on December 20th. The company is owned by the Orpheum Building and is headed by Mansel P. Griffiths as president.

English Film for PRC

"Angel of Terror," an Edgar Wallace story, is to be produced in England, and will be distributed in the U. S. by Producers Releasing.

Brooklyn Theatre Sold

The 900-seat Rivoli theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., has been sold by George Giegerich to the Hartie Realty Corporation, a client of Moses H. Hoenig, attorney.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

*An international association of showmen meeting weekly
in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress*

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor

LET US RESOLVE

Since this season of the year is the accepted time to strike a personal "trial balance", to cogitate upon what one can do in performing a sounder job during the coming twelve months, the membership is offered for consideration the meaty handful of suggestions by Joseph Bernhard to Warner theatre managers everywhere. The message from the circuit head reads:

"For men who look forward to the New Year as an opportunity to do better in the future than in the past . . . for Managers who wish to set an objective for themselves in 1942, I recommend the following resolutions:

"To operate your theatre as though it were your own.

"To conduct yourself as a Manager (and a man) that when people think of a pleasant place to go—they'll think of your theatre.

"To always speak well of the industry by which you live.

"To regard people in your theatre as in your home—receiving all persons from patrons to the humblest employee with courtesy, sympathy and friendliness.

"To spend every theatre dollar as if it came out of your own pocket.

"To remember always that, while profit makes a good showman, it takes the good-will of the public to make a profit."

Well said, indeed, and especially the first resolution offered by Mr. Bernhard, in itself a comprehensive job of summing up. The successful manager gets that way because he regards his theatre no less jealously than any other dear possession. In so doing, he affirms the Bernhard listing as a solid foundation upon which any conscientious theatreman can strengthen his operation and his personal fortunes.

THE SHOW DOES GO ON

Closer to immediate war hazards than other sectors of the nation, Pacific Coast theatre men are proving themselves alert in devising ways and means of making their theatres "the place to go" under wartime conditions and against the emergency. As told in PAR, Fox West Coast house organ, the circuit's managers have done much to instill confidence in the public mind that the theatre is a good place to be during a blackout.

Among the items noted is a "blackout kitchen" at the Golden Gate, Riverside, where Manager Dale Huffman is prepared to serve coffee to patrons in the lounge, where games, phonograph music and emergency lights have been prepared. At the Granada, Inglewood, Manager George O'Brien turned a football rally into a successful "blackout party". In other districts, the circuit men inspired the papers to run page-one publicity that the theatres would be open as usual, blackout or no.

Underlining all of these endeavors was the tried and true slogan: "The show must go on". The activities give further assurance that, whatever the emergency, the theatreman will be found set to move with precision and speed to see that the show "does" go on.

THE THEATRE'S SALESMEN

One of the recent Lobby Laffs showed a manager reading some rave newspaper reviews on a coming picture and saying: "If this picture is as good as they say it is, I'd better try to get around to see it."

That might not be entirely a gag, as illustrated in a letter from one of our scouts in the Midwest who tells about a cashier queried about the picture by a personal friend. The ticket-seller had not seen the picture, but heard it was not so hot, saying as much in recommending an opposition picture, which advice the patron took. As it turned out, the patron later saw the attraction the cashier criticized and found it much better entertainment.

Leaving aside the cashier's "bobble" in pushing money away from her boxoffice, we point to the advisability of arranging for all of the personnel to see programs in advance. Theatre workers are also salesmen. As other salesmen, the more they know about their merchandise, the better the job of selling.

THE membership will now proceed to the immediate business of applause for Round Tabler Harold F. Sliter, stepped up from Mohawk Valley district manager for Schines, to district head in the circuit's larger Ohio-Kentucky area. The promotion was enthusiastically marked at a testimonial dinner in Gloversville, arranged by Kiwanis and attended by 150. J. Myer and Louis W. Schine were guest speakers.

ROUND TABLE IN PICTURES

Measuring a bit over eleven feet in height was cutout display used in the lobby of the Paramount, North Adams, Mass., by Francis Faille to sell his "Superman" serial.

Street bally that attracted for H. T. Rastetter's date on "They Died with Their Boots On" at the Warner Theatre, in Erie, Pa., was old-fashioned carriage driven about town by two members of the staff dressed in cavalry uniforms. Carriage was appropriately bannered.

Reported by Walter Tremor, manager of the Florida, St. Petersburg, was atmospheric front on "Swamp Water" constructed by George Kiriland, doorman, and members of the house staff.

Teaser lobby display created by Bob Kennedy ahead of "Whistling in the Dark" at the Warner Symphony, Chicago, featured peep box, with patrons peering through slit to see Skelton copy.

Prison cell with figure inside was center lobby display at the Marti, Havana, ahead of "Chamber of Horrors". Both sides of cell doors were posted with picture copy.

"MORALE" COPY CONTINUES TO PLUG THEATRE VALUES

Added instances of newspaper advertising pointed to emphasize the place of the motion picture theatre in maintaining public morale in war time are illustrated in the two-column layouts reproduced on this page, above, from Pat Patchen, for the Chief, Pueblo, Colo.; below, from Dan Terrell, for Loew's Washington theatres.

Patchen used the institutional copy on New Year's Day, to top his copy for "Died With Their Boots On", and reports an amazingly favorable reaction. He got the idea from a recent story in the Herald, issue of Dec. 27, quoting from the President's letter to Lowell Mellett.

Terrell's "pledge" was also planted on New Year's Day to introduce attractions at the three Loew's houses. Here, too, the public response was gratifying, the copy taking bows for timeliness and cooperation.

"DUMBO" MILK COLLARS REACH 20,000 HOMES

To spread the word widely on "Dumbo" at the RKO Albee, Providence, the George E. French-Bill Morton duo tied the leading milk company to collar all bottles the day ahead of opening, distribution reaching into some 20,000 homes. Diaper service also used inserts a week in advance. Since the date coincided with the holiday toy promotion, the largest department cooperated fully by using the motif of the picture for the Christmas toy department, announcing this in window displays and ads.

On the theatre's daily "Hi, Neighbor" radio program, handled by Morton, "Dumbo" pins were given to all interviewed for a week ahead. In making the presentation, Bill would say: "And now let me give you Walt Disney's elephant, Dumbo, to take home with you."

LOCALS DANCE "HOE-DOWN" TO WIN "BABES" PRIZES

Catching on quickly for "Babes On Broadway" at Loew's Poli, Waterbury, Conn., was Ed Fitzpatrick's "Hoe-Down" dance contest, based on the presentation in the picture and built up in advance with a lot of publicity. For week ahead and during the run, preliminary contests were held at popular ballroom, which advertised the date heavily in exchange. Finalists appeared on the theatre stage, competing for the grand prize of a Garland-Rooney trophy.

Ballroom announced the doings nightly over the p.a. system, displayed 40 by 60's, planted star cutouts on the orchestra platform. At the theatre, special trailer plugged the finals and Fitz arranged for a page layout of the stars doing the dance. Dance studios also came in with lessons:

"The American Motion Picture Is One of our Most effective media in informing and entertaining our citizens. (it) has a very useful contribution to make during the war emergency."

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

We're doing our best, Mr. President.

We, the staff of the Chief Theatre, pledge our services to the single purpose of keeping Pueblo entertained during the trying times ahead.

"THEY DIED WITH THEIR BOOTS ON" is doing a swell job of it right now. And it's making us proud to be Americans... proud of the great heritage of red-blooded courage that is part of every one of us.

And Kay Kyser's new musical comedy "PLAY-MATES" will be a gloom chaser for sure. Watch Pueblo smile when it comes to town.

And we'll give them romance... that's "LYDIA" and exciting adventure in "SUNDOWN"... and laughs when Henry Fonda and Barbara Stanwyck get here in "YOU BELONG TO ME."

And we've got hits like these stored back... entertainment solid as a Defense Bond... "THE MAN WHO CAME TO DINNER," "TEXAS," "BED-TIME STORY," and "BALL OF FIRE."

Pueblo can count on us for ENTERTAINMENT!

"COME, LAUGH WITH US," READS SELETTE POSTER

Attracting a proper share of passer-by attention, according to Ed Selette, is the lobby poster set up by the Warnerman at the Albany, Albany, N. Y. Layout is headed by a quote from Abraham Lincoln:

"With the fearful strain that is upon me, night and day, if I did not laugh, I should die." The "laugh" theatre copy follows:

"In these trying times, the Albany Theatre presents week after week programs for your entertainment. Sleep refreshes a tired body. Entertainment refreshes a tired mind. Whether you laugh, sigh, scowl or cry at a movie, it does you good to get your mind away from everyday affair. A good laugh is worth money. . . ."

DOUBLE-TRUCK IN COLOR BUILDS XMAS CONTEST

Promoting an unusual newspaper buildup for "Thin Man" at the Great States Orpheum, Springfield, Ill., Manager Mort Berman landed a two-color double-truck centered around a Santa Claus coloring contest. Two-page banner head was given over to theatre and date. Second-color run was obtained with a tint block over-all, with the exception of a two-column mortise of black-and-white Santa Claus drawing which readers were invited to color for cash and guest ticket prizes. It was required that entries be accompanied by list of all advertisers in the co-op spread.

DECORATES XMAS TREE WITH APPLES ON "EVE"

The unusual decoration of a Christmas tree bearing ripe apples called a lot of attention to "It Started With Eve" at the Rapids, Rock Rapids, Iowa, Manager Roy H. Metcalfe using the fruit to trim the tree instead of the conventional tinsel. Tien copy noted: "Our tree is bearing apples this Xmas for our gala . . ." etc.

Well in advance, Metcalfe had one of the grocers place boxes of prize apples in the lobby with poster suggesting that the boys buy their girls an apple. Then, a few days ahead, the doorman distributed tagged apples to all women attending.

GRABLE PICTURE-SNATCHERS INSPIRE PROGRAM IDEA

For his advance on "R.A.F.", at Rome's Rialto, Baltimore, Manager Jack Keith planted a colored blowup of Betty Grable in the lobby. Within a few hours, the flash was "lifted" by an admiring fan. So, figuring that the star's photo would be equally in demand by others, Keith was inspired to eliminate his regular weekly program for the date, substituting a 9 by 12 black-and-white shot of the star, mortised with a copy panel for theatre copy.

THEATREMEN "SPEAK THEIR PIECE"

ON these pages is now set down what the man in the field thinks about the Quigley Awards, what he has to say about the continuance of the Competitions for 1942. Previous issues have been occupied with the acceptances of leading industry executives to the 1942 Judging Committee, their endorsements of this unique nine-year-old plan to emphasize the value of boxoffice showmanship, and to recognize theatremen who build these values.

As important, and revealing, are the expressions of the theatremen, since many of them directly credit the Awards for promotions, salary raises, bonuses and added home-office prestige. That the Awards continue to influence long-time participants is to be noted in the statements from such previous Grand Awards winners as Morris Rosenthal, Lester Pollock, Lige Brien, J. R. Wheeler—all of whom have been active in the Competitions for 1941.

MORRIS ROSENTHAL

Manager, Loew's Majestic
Bridgeport, Conn.

After some eight years of working and entering advertising campaigns for the Quigley Awards, today I feel just as excited when I win an Award as I did when my first Award was received.

I believe that when a man stops going after things in life he starts getting stale and the Quigley Awards is one way to keep a man on his toes by competing with other live-wire managers.

In meeting people in the industry I find that they have read about some of my campaigns and were sorta introduced in advance as it were. It certainly is a fine feeling to know that others read about your exploits as I read about others. I for one shall continue working on for further awards.

LESTER POLLOCK

Manager, Loew's Theatre
Rochester, N. Y.

The boys in the field appreciate the service of the Manager's Round Table. More than that, they appreciate the recognition granted their exploits through the Quigley Awards.

As a medium for inspiring the Motion Picture Industry to greater ambitions the Manager's Round Table and Quigley Awards have no equals.

Needless to say, I, who have benefited from them in the past, will always have a good word for them in the future.

BILL BURKE

Manager, F. P. Canadian Capitol
Sarnia, Ont., Canada

Personally, I have found the Quigley Award Competitions a great inducement to develop bigger and better campaigns. If I miss out on one fortnite, I make doubly sure that I'm represented in the next period.

As I have won several Awards this year, and as I have been recently promoted, I'm sure my Quigley Award activities have not gone unnoticed by my superiors.

J. R. WHEELER

Manager, Granada
South Bend, Ind.

Results obtained by participating in the Quigley Awards are two-fold. The Manager who places his efforts into the hands of the Committee to be passed on to others through the pages of the Herald, is naturally doing the entire industry a favor through the exchange of ideas. Secondly this week-in, week-out effort of his cannot help but react favorably at his theatre box office.

As last year's Bronze Grand Award Winner I know what it means to come out on top. It's just about the greatest thrill the industry can provide!

LIGE BRIEN

Manager, Warner's Belmar
Pittsburgh, Pa.

In inaugurating the ninth year of the Quigley Awards, I submit the following information of the benefits I have received!

The Quigley Awards to me have proven that they are real evidences of rewards for efforts, and have also shown their effects at the box-office. They have gained for me recognition within my organization, and throughout the industry.

These Quigley awards have also indicated a reassurance of my security for the future, and salary increases.

I am certainly proud to be associated with the Managers' Round Table and extend my thanks, and greatest wishes for its continued success.

A. J. KALBERER

Switow's Indiana and Liberty
Washington, Ind.

The Quigley Awards are a source of genuine pleasure to us as always. The idea of a friendly and cordial exchange of showmanship gives us a great deal more than we put into it. If for no other reasons we feel that this is worth more in actual dollars and cents at the box office than words can say.

This clearing house of ideas has been a boon to us and from the ideas of brother managers we have many times been able to help a good picture and perhaps save many a poor one.

I am sure it is a source of real pride to our superiors to have us in this competition and we never fail to get a friendly pat on the back from them for receiving these awards. We have had several substantial raises, plus a nice increased bonus check each year. I personally thank old man "Round Table" for them.

HARRY UNTERFORT

City Manager, Schine's
Syracuse, N. Y.

I have always found the Quigley Awards a genuine source of inspiration and they have definitely helped me in my promotion from Assistant Manager to City Manager of the RKO-Schine Theatres in Syracuse.

The first thing I do when the Herald arrives is to open it and see what the boys on the "Round Table" are doing and I usually get at least one idea to help me sell a coming attraction. As far as I know, it is the finest stimulant in helping a fellow do his job in the entire industry.

CREDIT AWARDS FOR ADVANCEMENT

JIMMIE REDMOND

*Publicist, Bonham
Fairbury, Neb.*

The Quigley Awards have certainly done a great deal in stimulating boxoffice showmanship here at the Bonham.

The winning of a Quarter-Master Plaque, Quarter-Master Medal and Citation this year has helped me a great deal in both my position and my salary. Keep up the good work that the Herald is doing, and the theatre business will boom.

BARNEY DE VIETTI

Manager, Huish's Price and Carbon Price, Utah

I can sincerely say that I have gained more good in my advertising and exploitation work from the Round Table Club than from any other source. I have found that it does "something" to a fellow to win one of the Quigley Awards and it kind of spurs you on to see if perhaps you can do still better.

With the winning of a Quarter-Master Citation, came congratulations from my Home Office along with a dandy bonus. All of this certainly helps, but the big thing to me is the fact that winning an Award just wants to make a fellow try to do better and better in his advertising campaigns.

LOUIS CHARNINSKY

Interstate Capitol and Rialto Dallas, Tex.

I would say definitely that there is a pronounced help in the advancement of showmen through the channels of your Quarter Master Citations, Quigley Awards, etc., I know from my own personal experience.

This endeavor on the Motion Picture Herald's part is truly a fine tribute to Showmanship and for which it stands. I have always been interested and have exerted my best efforts for my company and for the awards from Motion Picture Herald.

Truly it is a great help in every angle of this fine business, and I feel proud and honored for the Awards that I have received in the past.

JULIUS LAMM

*Manager, Warner's Uptown
Cleveland, Ohio*

Exploiting a picture is no different than a salesman trying to sell his wares. If it is properly executed, it means additional dough in the boxoffice. So far I have not been fortunate enough to pull down a Plaque or Medal, but I am not discouraged and will keep on plugging in 1942 for our Manager's Round Table.

I believe a repeated winner of Quigley Awards can eventually gain an advancement in position or salary, but I have yet to experience that recognition. In the meantime, I feel it a privilege to participate in your Forum of International Showmen, especially when our nation is in need of mental relief that only the screen can fulfill.

FRED GREENWAY

*Manager, Loew's-Poli Palace
Hartford, Conn.*

Will be glad to continue to send in stuff, as it's always nice to see your ideas do some one some good.

MARLOWE CONNER

*Manager, Warner's Capitol
Madison, Wis.*

I have always felt that the Quigley Awards provide a stimulant both to the man and the box-office. For the same reason that an artist exhibits his paintings, the theatre manager exhibits his work for experienced and qualified judges to inspect, pass comment and praise where it is due.

All ideas and efforts are for one purpose, to create dollars and cents in the box office but the submitting of these ideas and efforts for a Quigley Award places them on a different plane where they rely on their merits in direct competition to other ideas from men in the same field.

Any man who is proud of his work will want to exhibit it in the Quigley Awards Competition.

The winning of a Quarter-Master Plaque, a Quarter-Master Medal and numerous Citations have been a constant source of inspiration to do bigger and better. I am definitely certain that the winning of these many awards has improved my standing with the company.

PAUL O. KLINGER

*Manager, Rialto
Lewiston, Pa.*

There is no question that the winning of four Quarter Master Citations has given definite impetus to my exploitation activities and they have played no small part in the recognition I have gained. I'm a-goin' to keep on trying!

SID SCOTT

*Manager, Capitol
Sudbury, Ont., Canada*

Quigley Awards are an inspiration. We are never too old to learn and old stunts are new stunts if you've never used them. Yes, I think my company appreciates all Awards and all the tries.

H. J. RASTETTER

Manager, Warner's Erie Erie, Pa.

The Quigley Awards have definitely proven their worth in stimulating advertising activity among the men in the field. The competition has been keen and I as a competitor and Citation winner am extremely grateful for this excellent means of interchanging advertising media. Promotion has come to me in the past year and I believe the Awards have been a contributing factor. Let's "Keep Them Flying."

PAT NOTARO

Manager, Warner's Columbia Sharon, Pa.

I am certain that my prestige in the community is enhanced whenever anyone comes in my office and sees the Citations and the medal I have. They ask what they are and upon explaining they are very much impressed.

My superiors are pleased and I think the Awards help one realize that his efforts not only stimulate box-office but are also worthy of recognition. I hope you will continue this worthy friendly competition, because I know it has helped me and my theatre.

Children Parties Feature Yuletide Tiein Campaigns

The many promotions for Christmas institutional, goodwill and otherwise extensively reported from various sections of the country are represented by the annual Christmas party put on by "Kal" Kalberer at Switow's Indiana, in Washington, Ind., in cooperation with his local paper, the daily going for a series of page-one stories to extend an invitation to all children of under highschool age to attend. A complete show was given of feature and short subjects, the theatremen taking many bows from all over for this annual event.

In Waterbury, Conn., Ed Fitzpatrick tied up with the Elks to put on an annual Christmas canned goods matinee on the morning of December 22, at Loew's-Poli, incidentally, the only local theatre to do this, Ed reports. A complete show was presented with a local orchestra on hand for further enjoyment. As usual, the press came through with fulsome publicity, featured by two-column stories and ads.

Cohn's Lobby Presents Staff

For main decoration at Warner's Roosevelt, in Philadelphia, Artie Cohn featured a Christmas treat with pictures of his entire staff carrying their names and titles (see cut). The unusual presentation attracted a lot of attention and, of course, the staff was highly pleased with this extra attention. At the base of the display, coming attractions were presented in holiday gift-box form.

Christmas shopping in Dolgeville, N. Y., was definitely stimulated by the campaign inaugurated by Bill Johnson at Smalley's, the theatremen persuading the merchants to come in with him on an "Appreciation Gift Night." Johnson promoted over one hundred dollars in gifts, laid out all the advertising and conducted a mailing campaign through the entire area, placed a large Christmas tree on the stage and distributed over 50 gifts in a prize drawing.

The lobby of Warner's Jeffery, in Chicago, proved the center of his holiday advertising for Manager Bob Busch in calling attention to his children's party. The display, made up as a toy shop was colorfully decorated to call attention to the doings. After the party, the toy house was furnished with fireplace, stockings, etc., plus copy on the Christmas show.

Laby Imprints Giant Shopping Bags

Yuletide greetings to the folks in the Russellville, Ark., area on behalf of the local Malco theatres were emphasized by a full-page layout for the current and coming attractions at the three circuit houses and executed by Hiram Meeks, city manager. Top banner line carried Christmas salutations, with the center of the page given over to a giant holly wreath enclosing photos of M. A. Lightman, president; M. S. McCord, secretary-treasurer, plus one of Meeks. Further salutations were handled alongside in border form.

In Holyoke, Mass., George Laby went the imprinted bag one better to advertise the gala midnight show at the Westmas Victory, the Round Tabler imprinting the message on large size shopping bags, distributed with the compliments of the theatre. Laby reports this one hundred percent highly effective, as the bags were taken right into the homes to act as a permanent plug for the successful party. To plug his kiddie Christmas party at the State, in Anderson, Ind., Mel Bliden used a die-cut herald showing Santa Claus carrying a large gift pack on which the theatre copy was imprinted.

The lobby of the Esquire, Toledo, carried the theatre's holiday greetings, the decorative scheme showing stars twinkling in a midnight sky, a lighted Morostar wreath centered on the magazine rack and tiny pines banked on fluorescent tubing with a snow scene painted on the mirror. The mirror likewise caught the reflection of a huge rope laurel bell on the opposite wall, outlined in red lights. "Season's Greetings" were spelled out electrically in magenta against a silver flitter background.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Schools Aid Nelson On "Maltese Falcon"

Contacting English teachers, Bob Neilson at the State, in Johnstown, Pa. sold them on the idea of urging the students to see "Maltese Falcon" and then make a book report for their fiction literature classes. In addition, biology teacher plugged the date in his lecture on wild bird life. Starting well ahead, Bob planted teaser cards on stair risers reading: "Wow. What a Picture. The Maltese Falcon". Mirrors on mezzanine and rest rooms were painted the same, while cutout falcons were hung around lobby.

For his front Neilson used special lifesize cutout falcon with cartoon copy in balloon: "Man, you ain't seen nothing 'til you see my pitcher 'The Maltese Falcon' comin' here soon. It has Moider, Thrills, Mystery, Action and best of all Me." "Wow" bumper strips and heralds were distributed, the latter by kids, copy reading: "If I wasn't distributing these heralds, I'd be seeing" etc. At slack business hours, cashiers called numbers at random giving picture spiel.

RKO Theatremen Promote "York" With Army Aids

Now that "Sergeant York" has finished its engagements at the RKO metropolitan theatres, campaign highlights are here set down as reported by Harry Mandel, circuit ad head. In all instances, coverage was comprehensive, especially in promotions tied to service units such as the tieup effected by Ansel Weinstein of the RKO 58th Street, who promoted parade of the American Legion band to the theatre opening night. Band assembled at entrance and played marches until large crowds assembled. For his lobby, Heinz constructed an authentic bomb proof shelter, interior of which was draped with "Sergeant York" accessories. Free copies of the book were presented to public library. Ticket taker was dressed in soldier's uniform week in advance and also stood at side of stage with spot focused on him during trailer.

Legionnaires Give Full Cooperation

In New Rochelle, J. Di Lorenzo at RKO Proctor's distributed special "York" booklets to American Legion Posts; Veterans of Foreign Wars, Order of the Purple Hearts and house to house. Local paper played up Alvin York's personal appearance there in 1929, with a three-column cut and two-column reader, while teaser ads were used on six different pages of paper week ahead.

Effective lobby display created by Max Mink at the Castle Hill consisted of shadow box featuring two letters from American Legion Posts endorsing the picture, French, American and German helmets, American medals and a welcoming letter to the A.E.F. written by the late King George. Copies of the book on the life of York were given as prizes to children during the kiddie show week ahead, special heralds were distributed and the theatremen in this instance gave lectures to local Legion Posts on the importance of seeing the film.

Aiming at his juvenile trade, B. O. Shelton at Proctor's, in Mt. Vernon posted notices on the bulletin boards of all high schools and also distributed imprinted blotters to the kids. Newsboys wore imprinted aprons a week in advance and distributed overprinted papers carrying title and playdates.

Groth Gives Books to Libraries

Emil Groth at the 86th Street Theatre circularized principals of all schools in his vicinity urging student attendance in addition to placing copies of the book in the school libraries. Entire theatre staff wore medals and badges well ahead and of interest was a display of guns, helmets, posters, etc. Sound truck covered with 24-sheet covered the area ahead and during run and entire front of house was decorated with flags and bunting.

Opening night at the Alhambra was signaled by parade of American Legion Post to theatre, Manager H. Heintz arranging for the personal appearance of a buddy of Sergeant York who was greeted on stage as were the Chaplain of the Legion and Spanish American War Veterans.

LOUIE GOES FAST. Bowing in the New Year, Louie Charninsky takes off on his motor-bike out front at the Capitol, in Dallas, to impress upon the customers the title of the date he is fronting for, "We Go Fast".

Mayor Declares Safety Week for Metcalfe "Coffin" Date

Recently appointed to skipper the Rapids and State theatres, in Rock Rapids, Iowa, Roy H. Metcalfe stirred up the community with a bang-up campaign for the M-G-M short, "Coffin On Wheels", getting the Mayor to declare a safety week in honor of the date, the proclamation and date run in the papers. Stories on street and highway safety were also landed, the county sheriff also being promoted to contribute a caution letter to motorists on safe driving. Used car dealers also went for co-op ads.

Metcalfe featured his lobby with a display of local accident photos, borrowed from the sheriff's office and blanketed the town with posters, "Lose A Second. Save A Life, See", etc. The highway patrol assisted the campaign with free brake tests and at a P. T. A. meeting, the Round Tabler spoke on safe driving, aiming his talk at the high school crowd.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Stearn Circularizes Doctors For "Kildare's Wedding"

Concentrating on the medical profession for "Dr. Kildare's Wedding Night" at Schine's Strand, in Lexington, Ky., Harry D. Stearn had cashier call doctors listed in directory and give spiel on the picture's opening. Cards on which stills were mounted were placed in the two local hospitals in the nurses' quarters in addition to elevators in the Medical building. For street bally, Harry used girl dressed in bridal attire, who toured city in bannered car.

Ahead of "When Ladies Meet", young couple walked on main street with an opened umbrella, top of which was imprinted in white with title and cast, with a one sheet cutout of the four stars in the picture. Effective lobby display of cutouts was also used and moved out front during run.

"March of Dimes" Pressbook Details Theatre Campaign

To insure that every theatre participating will be amply prepared in advance for this year's national "March of Dimes" collection, from January 22 to 28, the Motion Picture Committee has brought out a comprehensive pressbook, organized by Oscar A. Doob, public relations director, and prepared by Ernest Emerling. Now being distributed, the book sets forth a wealth of meaty suggestions for use inside the theatre and out on "how to get the money".

Volunteer girl collectors are advised for lobby collections, especially during rush hours, to supplement efforts of the regular staff, this aid to be obtained from Junior Leagues, church societies, clubs, colleges, etc. It is suggested that girls be pretty, not too young, not in uniform, posted near boxoffice and at doors during "spills".

Ushering staff, projectionists, cashiers, doormen, porters are also to be enlisted to solicit dimes from friends and other contacts to fill the Diamond Jubilee Birthday coin-cards, made up to hold two dollars in dimes, cover carrying birthday greetings to the President. Three national awards, each of one hundred dollars defense bonds, are offered by the Committee to the usher, to the projectionist, to the doorman or cashier or porter turning in the largest number of filled cards. Coin-cards, coin cans, lapel buttons for contributors, sashes for collectors are supplied by the National Committee, with order blank provided in pressbook for convenience of theatremen.

For main outside attentions, a street parade is suggested to be organized by a committee in charge of, or in contact with large civic groups, and able to encourage group participation. Detailed is a complete break-down of plan and procedure based on last year's experiences in New York and other situations. How to promote band music, locate marching units, form parade, obtain color-guard and plant reviewing stand is all explained. Also suggested is a giant white flag carried flat to be used to solicit contributions along line of march.

Last year, Jerry De Rosa, of Loew's Paradise, New York, turned in the largest theatre collection, the pressbook carrying highlights of the drive, including photo and working plans of a colorful lobby "Wishing Well" into which De Rosa invited patrons to pitch dimes and "make a wish". The Loewman had coin boxes in the check-room, invited patrons to contribute percentage of their Screeno winnings, made talks over the public address system asking donations, posted pretty volunteer collectors in lobby and at boxoffice.

Outside the theatre, Jerry erected a display at the borough's busiest corner, with ushers in attendance at all times to solicit dimes. Ushers were also placed inside and outside of leading fight arena, announcer asking for dimes. Boys also were allowed to take up collections at churches, Elks Club, at hotel functions. Collection boxes were also placed in neighborhood stores, bars, etc.

Novel Setpiece Constructed By Bickerstaff for "Rio"

For publicity on "That Night in Rio" at the L & J Palace, in Athens, Ga., Frank Bickerstaff ordered six sheets on "Tin Pan Alley," "Down Argentine Way" and "That Night in Rio" and had a cutout made on all three pictures, using catch lines such as "You enjoyed Tin Pan Alley," "You thrilled to Down Argentine Way" and "Come and Romance to Midnight Serenades Where Revelry Rules. Down Argentine Way." In addition, local music shop cooperated by playing recordings from all three shows and gave nice plugs over loud speaker on his current attraction.

"Sports Quiz" Found Successful by Harris

Acting as master of ceremonies, Ed Harris at the Fox Glendale, in Glendale, Cal., is featuring a Saturday night "Sports Quiz." Contestants are chosen from the audience, receiving cash prizes for answering correctly most questions on sports. Questions and answers are furnished by the patrons, sports editor of the Glendale Star and Director of the City's Recreation Department. Judges are well-known locally in sporting events.

As a plug for the following week show, most of the questions deal with the two sports subject booked. Each week leaders of the sports world in that area are presented as guests and contestants. Harris has also featured a Battle of Sexes, women athletes vs. the men, with cash prizes and sporting goods presented to winners.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Hudson Invites Kin to "One Foot in Heaven"

Discovering that the sisters of Rev. Spence, around whom "One Foot in Heaven" was written lived near Guelph, Ontario, Round Tabler Vern Hudson contacted and invited them to a special screening. In addition the Mayor, Minister and newspaper editors were also sent invitations and that, together with the fact that a screening was held for all Protestant clergy, brought excellent newspaper coverage. In addition, ministers gave the picture mention in their sermons.

EXPLOITATION BRIEFS FROM A-FIELD

Two men in "Chocolate Soldier" uniforms did a "wooden soldier" routine for a week in advance of the opening of the musical at Loew's Poli, Waterbury, as part of Ed Fitzpatrick's campaign for the film.

First 10 men with beards to answer a classified ad were guests of Herman Addison of the Paramount, Glen Falls, at a showing of "The Chocolate Soldier."

Through efforts of J. R. MacEachron ahead of "One Foot in Heaven" at the Malco Paramount, in Jackson, Tenn., special letters were sent to ministers, which brought mention of the picture from the various pulpits.

"This car for sale—Need cash to see 'Lady Be Good'" was the sign used on an old jalopy sent through Bedford, Ind., streets by C. R. Hughes, Von Ritz, as part of his campaign for the musical. He also landed a "Girl and Her Dog" contest in the local newspaper.

Roses were presented to the first 500 women appearing at the Roxy, Delphi, Ind., to see "Blossoms in the Dust" as part of Chris Chamales' campaign for the film. He also used 1000 window streamers on windows and auto windshields, had bulletins in four local schools and used sidewalk stencils.

A three-day contest on the subject: "When Ladies Meet, What Do They Discuss?" was landed by George Reef, Ritz, Tipton, Ind., as a feature of his "When Ladies Meet" campaign.

Gold footballs presented by Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland to the local all-conference high school football team got a lot of publicity on "Babes on Broadway" for James Eshelman, Paramount, St. Paul.

Promoted from local flying school was a parachute which Norm Duncan opened and used in the lobby of the Strand, Vancouver, ahead of his date on "Parachute Battalion." Through cooperation of school teachers, imprinted blotters were distributed to students, and Norm further promoted an effective window display in the Hudson's Bay Company. Window was also secured on House of Westmore products, ahead of the Round Tabler's date on "Moon Over Miami," same store devoting space to cutouts of Betty Grable and the Grable cutout books.

Effective lobby display on "When Ladies Meet" was erected ahead of that date at the Uptown, in San Francisco, by F. W. Curtrice. Bar was set up, behind which was planted a cutout of Bob Taylor, who was mixing drinks for cutouts of Crawford and Garson seated at bar.

A voice competition, with the winner receiving an album of "Smilin' Through" recordings, was one of the highlights of the campaign for the musical put over by Stan Cady, Capitol, Kalamazoo, Mich. Jeanette MacDonald, one of the film's stars, sent a congratulatory wire to the winner.

For "Nothing But the Truth," Manager Carl Hermann of the Capitol Theatre in Pottsville, Pa., made tie-ups with drug stores and five-and-ten cent stores in which they set up displays featuring Bob Hope's books and suitable copy reading: "Bob Hope Says Use Pepsodent and See Nothing But the Truth."

A. R. Tate of the Victoria Theatre in Jersey Shore, Pa., made sure his patrons took notice of the coming of "Navy Blues." To plug the film he had the doorman and ushers wear sailor hats with the name, "Navy Blues," on the rim. The cashier also wore a band around her head with the words, "Navy Blues," inscribed on it. For "The Smiling Ghost" Tate arranged for a boy to dress as a ghost and parade the streets for two afternoons.

One thousand cards reading: "Just Returned from Cuba. Had a lovely time—a gorgeous trip. You'll appreciate it when you see 'Week End in Havana'" were sent out to local people by Manager Jack Weber of the Colonial Theatre in Lebanon, Pa., in connection with his campaign on "Week End in Havana." For "It Started With Eve," Weber used a novel idea of distributing 500 numbered tickets to high school boys and similarly numbered tickets to as many girls. If a boy found the girl with the same number both were admitted free to see the picture.

A tabloid newspaper, especially printed for the premiere of "40,000 Horsemen" was distributed by Herman Comer ahead of the opening at Warner's Capitol, in Philadelphia. In addition opening night was dubbed "British Navy Night" and attracted a contingent of British sailors stationed there, who accompanied by officers were welcomed from the stage by the British consul. Ceremonies were broadcast directly from the theatre lobby over WTEL and broke dailies. In addition 15 editors of foreign language papers were invited to attend a special screening, while a huge float toured the city streets, commandeered by Junior Leaguers associated with the British Aid Committee.

Presentation of a lion cub to the local zoo was one of the highlights of the Memphis "Tarzan's Secret Treasure" campaign, as put over by Boyd Fry and Arthur Groom. A small circus wagon was constructed, in which the cat was displayed until the formal presentation, which was done in cooperation with the Lion's Club. An atmospheric lobby was created with stuffed mechanical animals on display, and the Y. M. C. A. sponsored a Tarzan Swim Contest.

A stunt that was a sure-fire eye-catcher was the old-time bar set up in the lobby of the Granada, Santa Barbara, Cal., by J. R. Rodgers as a highlight of his "Honky Tonk" campaign.

While a band played tunes from the film in front of the house, six beautiful girls did dance routines on the marquee of the Grand, Bristol, Pa., as a feature of the "Lady Be Good" campaign put over by Ed Lynn.

A man in oilskins carried a seven-foot anchor through the streets of Salt Lake City as a part of the "Barnacle Bill" campaign put over by Charles Pincus, Utah.

The candy girl of the Wisconsin, Milwaukee, was dressed in a "Chocolate Soldier" costume as one of the features of the campaign for that film put over by Joe Rosenfield.

For "Power Dive" at the Fox Theatre, in Winnipeg, Bernie Beach decorated his lobby with cutout planes swinging from the ceiling with title and cast on each. Permission was secured from the two Air Training Centers to use 18 of their bulletin boards which are spread throughout the area. Cards were placed on these reading: "Airmen. You must see Power Dive. A saga of the air, now playing at the," etc. Since the War Savings Committee had a giant bomber on display on Main Street, Bernie arranged for a one-sheet frame to be placed next to it with appropriate tie-in copy.

A city-wide search for a "Navy Blues" girl was conducted by Silvert Setron, manager of Warners' Logan Theatre, Philadelphia, in conjunction with the opening of the picture. Beauty experts, serving as judges, selected the winner from photos submitted, and a tie-in was made with merchants for a series of prizes.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE BOSS . . .

Apologizing for not having a Display Ad Layout ready for Today's Paper!

DEAR BOSS

Last night after screening the picture "ALL THAT MONEY CAN BUY", you asked me to sit down and prepare a display ad on it for today's paper. It is now 5 A.M. and I have written more than a dozen ads, only to tear them up again. I just haven't been able to figure out how to go about telling the public what a really grand picture this is.

It is truly one of the most delightful pictures I have ever seen, and in my opinion it will rank high among the greatest motion pictures of all time. For it has everything that goes to make up a great picture—a story that's sensational, acting that's perfect, romance that's heart warming, drama that carries you away, and, above all, plenty of comedy.

Yes, "ALL THAT MONEY CAN BUY" is truly a great motion picture, but I haven't been able to figure out how to get this over to the public in a display ad layout. Now the newspaper informs me that I have missed the casting deadline and that the ad will have to be set in type to appear in today's paper, so I'm licked, and I apologize for not having the display ad layout ready in time.

But I do want to let the people know that this picture taken from the Saturday Evening Post story "The Devil and Daniel Webster" a legend of the great New England statesman is a most delightful movie. And that it is sure to be immensely enjoyed by every man, woman and child who sees it.

Sincerely
PAT TAPPAN

P.S. I'm going to work all day if necessary, on tomorrow's display ad layout so be sure to watch for it in Saturday's paper.

OBITUARIES

Otis Skinner Dies; Famous Actor, 83

Otis Skinner, famous American actor who ended his career in 1932 after more than 55 years on the legitimate stage, died Sunday night, January 4th, at his home in New York of uremic poisoning. He was 83 years old.

Despite his long and successful career as an actor, Mr. Skinner made only one motion picture, a screen version of "Kismet" in 1930. As a play "Kismet" was one of Mr. Skinner's greatest triumphs when it opened in New York in December, 1911. In both the play and the motion picture he portrayed the Oriental beggar, "Haji."

Mr. Skinner was the father of the monologist and actress Cornelia Otis Skinner, now starring in the Broadway presentation, "Theatre." She is his only immediate survivor. The actor's wife, now dead, was the former Maud Durbin of Denver, Colo.

During his career Mr. Skinner's repertoire included 16 Shakespearean roles and 325 other portrayals. In his last appearance—at a Player's Club revival in 1935—he spoke the foreword to "Seven Keys to Baldpate," in which George M. Cohan had the leading part. Mr. Skinner had produced and directed at least 33 plays.

A funeral service was held at noon Tuesday at the Church of the Transfiguration (The Little Church Around the Corner), Fifth Avenue and 29th Street, New York City. Burial was held in Woodstock, Vt., where Mr. Skinner had a summer home.

Mary Lewis, Follies Star, Dies at 41

Miss Lewis was the widow of Robert L. Hague, oil executive. Burial was held in Pine Crest Memorial Park, Little Rock, Ark.

Joseph Thibault

Joseph Thibault, 60, at one time stage manager of the old Russell and Casino theatres in Ottawa, died at his home in that city Sunday, January 4th.

Appeal Censor Ban On "Outlaw", "Baby"

A new appeal has been filed with the New York State Censor Board in Albany on "The Birth of a Baby," which was rejected three years ago by the State Motion Picture Division.

The Howard Hughes film, "The Outlaw," is also the subject of an appeal to the Board of Regents, made by Albert Lodwick, vice-president of Hughes Production Co. The film will be screened by the Regents' film committee shortly, and submitted to the full board on January 16th.

Ask Court for Victoria Receiver

Stockholders of the Victoria Amusement Enterprises, Inc., of Shamokin, Pa., have asked the federal court in Scranton for the appointment of a receiver for the concern and for its liquidation and distribution of its assets.

The action is chiefly based on allegations that L. J. Chamberlain, president of Amusements, Inc., Allentown, has obtained control of the Victoria concern and has jointly operated both companies to the benefit of Amusements, Inc., while the Victoria's business suffered.

Berger Acquires Three Additional Theatres

Bennie Berger, Minneapolis exhibitor, has embarked on an expansion program believing that the war will stimulate theatre business. He has added three houses to the chain, the Orpheum, Fergus Falls, Minn.; Metro, in Minneapolis, and the World, in Aberdeen, S. D.

The circuit now comprises 13 theatres, all of which, except one, are in operation.

Plagiarism Suit Dismissed

IN THE COURTS

Court Refuses to Halt Theatre Sale

Judge J. Abner Saylor in the Baltimore circuit court last week refused to halt the sale of Keith's theatre and directed C. Alexander Fairbanks, Jr., trustee, to proceed with the arrangements for the sale.

The Maryland Theatrical Company, which operates Keiths, opposed the foreclosure action instituted by the Lexington Theatre Company, headed by Morris A. Mechanic, operator of the New theatre. The Maryland Theatre Company contended that mortgages actually were not in default and produced testimony intended to show that Keith's was showing a net profit.

It was testified the Lexington Theatre Company paid the Savings Bank of Baltimore $400,000 for the outstanding $487,500 mortgage and nearly $51,000 in back interest. Mr. Fairbanks said he would proceed immediately to advertise the sale of Keiths as required by law. Judge Saylor also named Mr. Fairbanks a receiver along with J. Harry Gruver.

New Firm

Fact Films, headed by Edward Kern, of the Belmont Theatre, New York, has been formed to distribute documentary pictures. Mr. Kern disclosed that Fact Films has acquired theatrical distribution rights to three films, "And So They Live," "The Children Must Learn" and "Valley Town," the latter directed by Willard van Dyke and for which a musical score was written by Marc Blitzstein.

The three films were produced by grants from the Sloan Foundation, which has been distributing 16 mm. prints of the subjects non-theatrically. Mr. Kern's new company will distribute these and other documentaries to theatres.

"And So They Live" was produced by Sloan in cooperation with the University of Kentucky. "Children Must Learn" was made by the Foundation in cooperation with the University of Tennessee.

Fox Suit Dismissed

A $50,000 suit claiming damage to reputation brought against Twentieth Century-Fox by Eleanor Harris, who prepared a script, "Profits of Empire," upon which the film "Brigham Young" was based, was dismissed last Friday, January 2nd, by Judge Henry W. Goddard in federal court in New York. Miss Harris, who sold the script to the defendant for $1,000 and subsequently worked as a writer for the company, charged that her reputation was impaired because she did not receive proper screen credit.

Miller Theatre Sold

The Miller Theatre, Woodstock, Ill., which has been operated on a lease by the Fred Anderson circuit for the past eight years, has been sold to a company headed by John Papas, Chicago restaurant man. The theatre, seating 980, is said to have been sold for $80,000. The new owners will take possession on February 1, 1942, and plan extensive improvements on the interior and front lobby. Constantine Papas will become manager under the new regime.

Son of Fury

Escape Into Yesterday

Escape from today's troubles into the world of England's King George III is to be had in these adventurings of Tyrone Power depicted with the realism, grandeur and grimness of Darryl Zanuck's talent applied to a subject of his liking.

"Son of Fury" is from the novel, "Benjamin Blake," by Edison Marshall, treated for screen purposes by Philip Dunne and directed with power and precision by John Cromwell, with William Perlberg associate producer. The film bears the Zanuck signature and conforms in every department of composition, execution and polish with the standard which the name symbolizes.

Mr. Power portrays a young man who has been deprived of his noble birthright by an uncle who holds him in bondage, treating him brutally during childhood and attempting to extend his mastery into manhood by means of imprisonment. The young man escapes from England aboard a sailing vessel, finds a wife and a fortune in pearls on a Pacific island, returns to England to reclaim his birthright, thwart his uncle, bestow his worldly goods upon his friends and, having put his world to rights, returns to the island and the wife who has awaited him there.

The action, all of which occurs in finely appointed settings, includes a number of fistic encounters, some floggings, escapes, pursuits, rescues, all the staples of romantic adventure.

George Sanders, as the cruel and powerful persecutor of the hero, turns in a memorable performance.

Previewed at the studio to a group of fifteen press people who pronounced the picture a success in the field of adventure.—WILLIAM R. WEAVER.

noon serials plot, however, by this picture's concern with spies and what an American workman does when he suddenly faces a choice for patriots—his life, or aid to his country. It is a dramatic question presented in terms which show that anyone might be required to answer.

Joe Smith, a skilled aviation craftsman is the average American who suddenly finds himself making the choice which brought death to Nathan Hale and many other heroes to United States history. Robert Young is convincing as the workman, playing the role with the cockiness, self-confidence, and reliability which might typify millions of mechanics, miners and neighbors throughout the United States.

He works in an aircraft factory where he is trusted to install a secret bombsight.

He is kidnapped as he drives home to his wife, Marsha Hunt, and schoolboy son, Darryl Hickman. Both are "typical" and appealing American characters. The spy ring tries to bribe Smith to tell them of his secret job. They beat him. To bear the torture he thinks of his past. Flashbacks tell the story of his courtship, family life, job, and how, on that same morning, his son had recited from a history lesson the story of Nathan Hale. Thinking it means death, Joe refuses to talk.

The spies, however, decide to move to another hideaway. Joe fixes in mind the route of their journey. He tricks the spies and escapes. Rescued, he leads police back to the hideout and gives the clue that breaks up the ring.

It is sheer melodrama. Nonetheless there are entertainment qualities. And although values and actions are sketched in simplest black and white they are moving.

Richard Thorpe, the director, tells his story swiftly and directly. It was not a top budget production but resources are well used. The other players are well cast. Allen Rivkin's screen play uses the traditional melodrama tricks well. Charles Lawton's camera, with distinct style, tells the story.

A Gentleman at Heart

Romantic Comedy

Cesar Romero and Carol Landis, who appeared so competently and entertainingly in Twentieth Century-Fox's "Dance Hall" last season, return again as a romantic combination. Where their previous vehicle dealt with a taxi-dance establishment this concerns an art gallery taken over by a horse-race bookie in lieu of an unpaid debt. Mr. Romero is seen as the gambler and Miss Landis as the manager of the gallery.

Produced by Walter Morosco and adapted from the story, "Masterpiece," by Paul Hervey Fox, the theme concerns the gambler and his organized ring of art swindlers, who, unbeknown to the girl, copy famous works of art and sell them as the originals. Reformation on the part of the gambler sets in only at the close of the picture when they are about to be exposed by Government agents but are saved when a second duplicate of a painting replaces the first and is mistaken by the authorities as the original.

Milton Berle, rapidly gaining recognition as a screen comic as well as a stage and radio comedian, is seen in support of the stars as the wise-cracking, ad-libbing stooge who, through subterfuge, attempts to bet against his boss on the races only to increase his financial indebtedness. It is in a role of this type that Mr. Berle can display to best advantage his comic versatility since it is apparent that he has been given an almost free hand in interpreting his part.

Others, including J. Carrol Naish as the forger of the paintings, Jerome Cowan as the Government agent, and Elisha Cook, Jr., as the exponent of surrealist painting who'd sell his art for the price of a meal, extract the utmost from their portrayals.

Ray McCarey, director, keeps the narrative unwinding steadily and at a brisk pace. The dialogue throughout is lively and for the most part humorous in the wise-cracking tradition.

Call Out the Marines

(RKO Radio)

McLaglen, Lowe and the Marines

The salient characteristic of "Call Out the Marines" is the appearance together of Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe, who cavort very much as they did in "What Price Glory," of World War No. 1 vintage. But here the resemblance between the two pictures ends.

The plot is subordinate in importance and serves only as a vehicle for the two principals, as marines, to quarrel over the female of the species, quarrel with each other and, in short, quarrel. Binnie Barnes, ostensibly a hostess in the Shoreleave Cafe, is one of the objects of their affections. Espionage plays a minor part in the proceedings, with Paul Kelly, owner of the Cafe, under suspicion, but it is eventually discovered that he is in reality endeavoring to capture enemy agents who are stealing important Navy plans, and Binnie Barnes turns out to be the guilty gal.

All this is set to music by Mort Greene and Harry Revel, whose songs include "Call Out the Marines," "Beware," "Hands Across the Border," "Light of My Life" and "Zana Zarama," with the King's Men, Six Hits and a Miss, and Dorothy Lovett vocalizing.

Two sequences, in particular, will appeal to action lovers, a rather comprehensive brawl in the Shoreleave Cafe, and a mad ride consisting of McLaglen in one "jeep," and Lowe in another, trying to outdo each other, as usual.

A good deal of the picture's popularity will depend on whether audiences will find the antics of McLaglen and Lowe as amusing and touching, as they did the first time.

One or two suggestive moments confine the picture to adult audiences.

Hay Foot

(UA-Roach)

Streamlined Comedy

Producer Hal Roach herewith picks up the camp careers of the characters seen in his successful "Tanks a Million" and carries them forward, from the point where that film left them to a later point at which still another film may pack them up and carry them forward again if demand warrants.

So completely is this picture a continuation of the first one that there appears no reason to question that it will be received with a continuation of the welcome accorded its predecessor.

William Tracy is seen again as the doughboy prodigy, Joe Sawyer as his belligerently bumbling rival and James Gleason as the camp commandant.

The screen play by Eugene Conrad and Edward E. Seabrook supplies them with another series of incidents in which the bookish hero gets the best of his more experienced associates on virtually all occasions. Fred Guiol, charged with production and direction, stuck closely to the successful manner and method of "Tanks a Million" throughout.

U. A. DISTRIBUTING "PIMPERNEL SMITH"

United Artists will distribute the British production "Pimpernel Smith" in this country. A review of the picture from London appeared in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, issue of July 5, 1941. The reviewer said:

"Here is something of a one-man film, with Leslie Howard, 'Scarlett Pimpernel' of Alex Korda's heyday, at one and the same time producer, director and star. The result, none the less, is excellent, for the film is grand entertainment, skilfully devised and polished, and the star's slick and nicely tailored performance a very saleable asset.

"Howard's name means plenty at box offices on both sides of the Atlantic and the film with a topical slant, is for all its fiction, a racy and exhilarating slice of adventure irrespective of its personal appeal, and needs no apology for its nationality. It should register as box office anywhere save in Nazi Germany."

"Howard's role is that of a professor who helps anti-Nazis escape from the Gestapo, a Pimpernel in modern dress with an academic manner, an absent minded pedant with a facility for disguising himself as a scarecrow, or a Nazi propagandist, or remaining erstwhile a jaded and ingenious archaeologist."

Road to Happiness

(Monogram)

Comedy-Drama with Music

John Boles in fine voice and playing a part tailored to his measure scores as both actor and singer in this substantial treatment of a father-and-son story produced by Scott R. Dunlap and directed at the whole public.

Robert D. Andrews' screenplay from Matt Taylor's story, "First Performance," is a direct and common sense telling of a tale about a singer down on his luck who turns to radio acting as a means of supporting his small son, ultimately finding in radio a means of realizing his professional ambition. None of the appeals to sentimentalism by means of mawkish emotionalism which commonly becloud this type of story, are permitted to defeat this one.

Billy Lee as the boy and Roscoe Karns as a press agent share with the star the principal emphasis. These and the others in the balanced cast are directed with solid effectiveness by Phil Rosen.

Mr. Boles sings three songs in the picture, all of them excellently and all with direct pertinence to the narrative.

The picture is rich in appeal to the family trade and to the musically inclined.

Sing Your Worries Away

(RKO Radio)

Comedy with Music

A collection of players more commonly known for their comedy roles than any other type has been gathered together here to enact a not too robust story. It takes quite a time for the proceedings to get to a point where they amuse but once that stride is reached the picture accelerates rapidly with some very amusing comedy scenes to balance the ledger.

Bert Lahr holds the picture together. He is seldom out of range and he can be quite funny once he has warmed to his material. For support he has June Havoc, Buddy Ebsen, Patsy Kelly, Dorothy Lovett and Sam Levene.

The screen play has Lahr and his cousin, Miss Lovett, due to receive a $3,000,000 inheritance. Sam Levene, as a night club owner, gets word of the windfall before they do and devises a scheme whereby he will get rid of Lahr and marry Miss Lovett. Lahr is the worrying type and the scheme is to worry Lahr into suicide. To obtain that result, Levene plies Lahr with liquor. When Lahr awakens from his stupor, he is accused of murdering a man. The "dead" man is actually in a hypnotic state but Lahr jumps off the pier nevertheless. Several comedy scenes later, Lahr arrives with the police to frustrate Levene's plans.

There are several songs by Mort Greene and Harry Revel, with most of the principals participating, and music by Alvino Rey and his orchestra.

Cliff Reid produced and A. Edward Sutherland directed the film. Monte Brice did the screen play.

Mexican Spitfire at Sea

(RKO Radio)

Series Formula

For those who have yet to see Leon Errol as "Lord Epping," the bibulous British baronet, and Lupe Velez as the rebellious "Carmelita" wedded to an advertising agency, their new adventures should provide some good laughs and general entertainment.

Errol is again "Uncle Matt" who poses as the Lord to further the happiness of his nephew and bride. This time it's a business contract which can be secured only by producing nobility for social-climbing clients. The situation is further complicated by the appearance of a business rival, and his encouragement by "Carmelita" who had embarked on the cruise under the impression that it was to be a pleasure trip. The shipboard locale keeps real and spurious Lords and Ladies within bounds, affords opportunities for continuous meetings and misapprehensions and finally allows a threat of catastrophe to clear up the matter when all principals become too deeply involved.

Director Leslie Goodwins keeps the action fast and the laughs frequent, while a cast including "Buddy" Rogers, ZaSu Pitts and Elisabeth Risdon performed ably. But someone—perhaps Cliff Reid, the producer—should realize that broad comedy doesn't stand up too well under regular repetition.

Right to the Heart

(Twentieth Century-Fox)
Regeneration Via a Training Camp

Without any ostentation, and leaving no doubt as to its outcome, "Right to the Heart," told against a background of a training camp for fighters, nevertheless does possess a heart-warming and agreeable quality that should make it popular screen fare. As a title, "Right to the Heart" describes the picture most appropriately.

It tells the story of a young man from the upper classes who is physically humiliated by a prize fighter before his socialite sweetheart, goes to a training camp to redeem his self-respect and insure his success in a return engagement with his antagonist, and wins on all counts.

Joseph Allen, Jr., is the young man with the blue blood and gloves, Stanley Clements, famous as the tough youngster in "Tall, Dark and Handsome," is again tough and precocious, but finally proves instrumental in bringing the hero and the right girl together, and the two young ladies involved are Cobina Wright, Jr., as the socialite glamour girl and Brenda Joyce as the camp owner's daughter, who helps the hero when the training becomes unbearably severe and ultimately wins his love.

The fighting sequences are in sufficient evidence to lure action lovers, but are not so gruesome that they will frighten the female contingent of the audience. With the manly art of self-defense for the men, romance and regeneration for the women, and Stanley Clements and his dog for the children, indications point to a family picture.

Sol M. Wurtzel was the executive producer and Eugene Forde directed.

The Mad Doctor of Market Street

(Universal)
Thrills for the Timid

This is another variant of the tale of the crazed and crafty scientist let loose in the world to apply to people laboratory experiments begun with animals. It compares favorably with its predecessors, sticking more closely to plausibility than most of them.

Lionel Atwill plays the doctor in this instance, starting his career in a city and continuing it aboard ship and thereafter on an island in the Pacific where he is one of five survivors of a shipwreck. Death accompanies him steadily, sometimes by accident, sometimes by design, and catches up with him on the island after his associates have been rescued. The fixation used in this telling of the story is that he can cure disease by killing people and bringing them back to life.

The production is by Paul Malvern, the direction by Joseph H. Lewis and the script by Al Martin.

Young America

(Twentieth Century-Fox)
Tribute to 4-H Clubs of America

That large and far-reaching public which makes up the membership of the Four-H Clubs of America, their friends, admirers and supporters, is the ready-made audience for this feature in which the nature, purposes, ideals and standards of the organization are presented in terms of a story which provides Jane Withers with an appropriate vehicle. Showmen who enlist cooperation of the organization's local representatives would appear guaranteed of profitable patronage.

The script, an original by Samuel G. Engel, traces the conversion of a city girl to the principles of Four-H as expounded to her by the young people she meets during an enforced stay in the country and, in the flow of events, demonstrated to her by experiences in which she is brought to realization of their merits and practicability. A necessary degree of conniving, having to do principally with the forging of papers authenticating the breed of an entry in a live stock show, gives the picture its plot tension and paves the way for a happy ending.

Directed by Louis King for Executive Producer Sol Wurtzel, the film is a natural for the towns, although something of a question in point of interest for metropolitan audiences.

WHEN AIR RAIDS STRIKE (RKO)

March of Time (23,106)

The latest March of Time release proposes to take the threat of air raids to American coastal cities out of the shadow of panic and rumor into the light of fact. The danger is accepted as real but not unconquerable. Impressive shots of our Army and Navy defenses, shore patrols, fighter squadrons, lend assurance that measures are being taken in our defense. But the appeal of this film is to the people, the civilians who have both the opportunity and the duty to defend themselves.

The man on the street may have learned little from the "fire-blitz" of London as he read his newspaper, but the experiences of the English cities have been preserved in film, and their organized citizens are working models of what Americans can do, thanks to them, in shorter time. This film is necessarily a survey, with brief pictorial accounts of the major home defense activities, volunteer fire-fighting, local police, medical corps, as well as of the broader integrated systems of plane detection and anti-aircraft units. But it includes also an instructive sequence showing a family of three dealing with an incendiary bomb calmly and efficiently. The superiority of the motion picture as a medium of public education is obvious here, and scenes of the film library in the British Ministry of Public Information show that it is being so recognized.

"When Air Raids Strike" is not a technical film—much greater detail is necessary even for the average citizen. It is not propaganda, except that it promotes the cause of public responsibility and discipline. It is informative, exciting and reassuring.—E. A. C.

WOMEN IN DEFENSE

Government Documentary

In this ten-minute short Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, as writer, and actress Katherine Hepburn, as narrator, have combined their talents for the Office of Emergency Management, to report pictorially how American women are cooperating in national defense efforts.

The film depicts activities of today's "pioneer" women on three fronts—in science, industry and voluntary civilian defense services. The industrial sequence shows women and girls sewing strong cotton fabric for control surfaces of fighter planes; skilled operators turning out parachutes; girls on shell inspection lines; women assembling minute ball and roller bearings which go into precision tools used in war industries. The laboratory sequences depict women scientists working in the Department of Agriculture's Beltsville Research Center in Maryland, the largest research institution in the world. The third sequence shows women volunteering their blood for Red Cross blood banks; women attending classes in nutrition, conducted by the American Woman's Voluntary Services, and Red Cross volunteers working on surgical dressings and preparing surgical and medical supply stores.

"Women in Defense" is one of the series of brief documentary "defense" reports produced by OEM and distributed free to theatres throughout the land by the motion picture industry committee.—J. E. S.

RADIO PROSPECTS

THE planned economy of war with its inhibiting influences on merchandise and merchandising promises, by processes of varying degrees of indirection, to exert revolutionary influences on the media of advertising, both radio and printed page.

It is now reported that one of the largest advertising agencies within the last three weeks has had cancellation of about sixteen million dollars worth of advertising, the biggest client motor cars, the biggest medium radio.

This has been an inevitable consequence of the abrupt shut-down of the motor car industry, the nation's greatest.

The loss of revenue to radio which conditions seem to indicate would appear to make it probable that the greater air shows, upon which radio has depended for its mass audiences, will not be available. A new approach to program construction must soon become discernable. It is a reasonable anticipation that radio will be turning again to dip deeper into the motion picture talent pool of Hollywood.

And if the motion picture industry lets radio help itself to the screen star values, the loss by invasion, to the whole country, will be greater than can be paid for in dollars—even if the whole industry got the dollars—which it would not.

REAL ADVERTISING

THE most poignant challenge that these page-weary eyes have seen in a motion picture journal for many a day is that "March of Dimes" advertisement with its big close-up picture of a baby's pudgy hand laid in the seamed and competent palm of a man.

The story and appeal register instantly. You cannot pass it. It tells and sells. It asks exhibitors to run the trailer—supplied gratis—and make lobby collections the week of January 22nd, with the tag line, "Please write today to March of Dimes, Hotel Astor, New York, and say, 'Here's my hand. Count me in'."

All the power in the world is in the baby's hand. It holds the whole of all the tomorrows. Only once in a while can an advertisement say that much.

WAR PICTURES

HEADLONG Hollywood is deep into war lore and stories, deeper by far than the customers are or are likely to be. The evidences are plenty, all the way from the ample box office experience of Britain to the current humor of Broadway's audiences.

Evidence of the Broadway state of mind is afforded in the case of "The Wookey," probably far the best of all the war plays. A top rank success and with a healthy run behind it, it went into a diminuendo and closed abruptly when the debacle of Pearl Harbor made war an American actuality to be experienced, no longer a prospect to be imagined and explored in fancy.

It is inevitable that war should be much in the consciousness of the motion picture's California production capital, but that does not effect the practical necessity for Hollywood serving the point of view and concerns of its box office public rather than its own special attitude. Every day's paper, every hour's radio and endless patriotic functions and drives are serving the war's causes. The picture's customers will not take more than they want, of anything.

The motion picture theatre in wartorn Britain survives, and even prospers, mainly on American entertainment pictures, because it is the wise decision of government in behalf of national morale.

On the screen, as nowhere else, can the people be kept aware of a world and a life that is worth fighting for.

PRODUCTION FOR USE

THE thrifty fellow who saves pieces of string has come into long belated recognition in the new national economy. So has the fellow who insisted on making balls of tinfoil from cigarette packages and candy bars.

The order is out now in the business world to save paper, carbon paper, paper clips and rubber bands. There's a story about a typewriter repair man who down all his tedious years saved metal ribbon spools and cans just because he could not bear to throw them away, and has discovered that in this rationing day he has about two thousand dollars' worth.

America's junk pile has been big enough to win some of the wars—and today Japan is fighting with a lot of what we threw on the scrap heap.

From the left and the almost-left we have been hearing for years about the coming of the day when industry would be required to engage in "production for use" only. There are many evidences that the place to start that movement is among the consumers.

WHAT CRITICS SELL

HAT belligerent Mr. Arthur L. Mayer, producer, distributor, and especially Broadway exhibitor at the famous Rialto, is up and at 'em again in his bedevilment of the motion picture reviewers of the lay press. There's a piece from him in this week's issue of the Herald in which he contends, with titles, that a picture's gross may be measured in inverse ratio to its plaudits from the critics.

Mr. Mayer seems to think, or pretends, the wag, that the movie critics are writing for the box office customers. He knows very well that they are really writing for the newspapers' readers. And that makes all the difference in the world. Some of the worst critics are the best writers, and their business is writing. Much of the writing about pictures is addressed at

War-film Coordination

FIRST STEPS toward coordinating war-time film production, both Government and professional, were taken this week by Coordinator Lowell Mellett, named by President Roosevelt to unify government film production and advise the industry. Mr. Mellett was in Hollywood this week conferring with production heads on the subject.

Commendation for Hollywood's voluntary services in behalf of the national interest keynoted Mr. Mellett's address to studio and organization heads on Tuesday. Arriving in the morning he was accompanied by Francis Harmon and Dr. Leo C. Rosten. After a general meeting in the afternoon attended by Association of Motion Picture Producers executives, Guild executives, Victory Committee members and others, the President's appointee went into session with studio heads for a more explicit discussion of objectives. Although both meetings were closed sessions, the impression was gained that Mr. Mellett contemplated no fundamental change in the relationship between production and government and would function mainly as the Government's representative to the industry. It was reported that Dr. Rosten might become the Coordinator's representative in Hollywood.

readers who do a deal more reading than looking.

Exhibitors sell pictures. Critics sell themselves and their papers.

It is inevitable that critics like best the pictures that are most challenging to write about. Clearly it was this quality, and no other, which made "Citizen Kane" the best picture of the year in the opinion of the New York critics. "Citizen Kane" is a newspaper man's picture, and in turn a picture man's picture, and Mr. Randolph Hearst, by what his hired hands did and what he did not do, was more of a factor in the making of this special fame than gifted Mr. Orson Welles, his cast or his story. Mr. Hearst helped mightily to make the production something to write about, in areas where he is especially remembered, mostly New York and Hollywood. That and novelty made the critics forget the picture's profound inadequacy in dramatic appeal.

Neon In Eclipse

RUMOURS OF WAR, somewhat more literally than war itself, have blitzed Hollywood life.

For the first winter season in many years, the Cocoanut Grove of the Ambassador Hotel is open for business only two nights weekly.

Last Sunday night, William R. Wilkerson's plush-lined Ciro's, columnized as the rendezvous of filmdom's famous, closed "temporarily." Creditors were conferring with board of trade executives Tuesday concerning debts.

Chiefly accountable for the decline of nocturnal festivity in the production community is the drying up of the flow of winter tourist trade, which is regarded as a result of fears, born in the hinterland, of things to come on the coast. Sixty-one Hollywood night clubs reportedly have shut down.

Adoption of a 8-to-5 o'clock schedule by the studios, expected to stimulate nightclub trade coincidentally, appears to have operated with the reverse effect.

Agitation for reinstatement of the abandoned Academy banquet stemmed in large part from quarters interested, financially or otherwise, in keeping the Hollywood night-life idea flourishing in behalf of beneficiary caravansaries.

During recent weeks the nightclubs have subsisted mainly upon parties given by persons who were empowered to enter the cost of them upon their studio expense accounts, but certain eventuations serving to sharpen somewhat the scrutinizing of these documents have reduced this flow of trade to a trickle.

Ciro's maître de hotel was telling inquirers at midweek that the cafe would reopen "in a week or two."

The Army Moves In

THE U. S. ARMY will probably be the next tenant of Paramount's eastern studio in Astoria, Long Island. Negotiations for the Signal Corps to take over the one-time center of Paramount production in the East are nearly concluded, it was heard in Washington at mid-week.

Training films will be produced on a large scale at the Astoria studio by motion picture crews shifted from Signal Corps headquarters at Fort Monmouth, N. J. The plant boasts the largest and most elaborately equipped sound stages in the East.

The studio, built by Paramount a couple of decades ago as the center of what continued for years to be an ambitious production program in New York, has been used of late as a rental plant, by advertising, commercial and educational producers and for an occasional short subject. Audio Productions-Eastern Service Studios is the lessor.

5-4-5 and Out

LOEW'S has a new booking policy, known as the 5-4-5 plan, hailed in New York at mid-week by independent exhibitors who observed that the change would react beneficially to the smaller subsequent-runs.

The new plan provides that programs will be changed in Loew theatres three times in 14 days, instead of two changes a week. In effect, one show will play five days, the second four days and the third five days, thus eliminating two-day runs. This policy will begin on an experimental basis on January 20th. Observers believe that the shows, under the plan, while holding over an additional day or two at Loew theatres, will provide less competition than a new show; that the fourth show eliminated from the schedule will arrive at subsequents as new, fresh, program material and that big films will go to the smaller houses in less time.

Kennedy Sells

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY, of motion picture fame and former ambassador to Great Britain, has sold his Bronxville home at No. 294 Pondfield Road, according to the daily press. It is one of the largest plots in that region, covering six and a half acres and including, in addition to the Colonial manor house, a gardener's cottage. It was assessed at $167,000. The papers reported an "all cash" transaction, but it is said that the deal involved the acquisition of a business building in the Pelham vicinity. The transaction just announced was closed some weeks ago, in the period of year's end income tax adjustments. Mr. Kennedy has other residence properties in the East and in Florida. He is now sojourning at the Waldorf-Astoria, in New York.

Against Ice Cream

MOTION pictures, cigarettes, ice cream and cake and "the gentle ministrations of hostesses," provided by civilian organizations for men in military service, are beyond the ken of Lieutenant Commander James J. (Gene) Tunney, ex-pugilist and student of Shakespeare, now in the U. S. Navy teaching "morale" to sailors.

On Monday, Lieutenant Tunney took time off at the Navy Recruiting Station in New York's Federal Building, interviewing applicants for enlistment, to talk to reporters. "It's amazing," he said, "the amount of work recruits can stand without the so-called offices of morale building." He advocated "boxing gloves, skipping rope and athletic activities" as better morale builders for servicemen "than all the civilian concern about their comfort and entertainment."

Speaking of "movies and ice cream," this is the same Mr. Tunney who for years has had a conspicuous job in the liquor business.

Mr. Tunney got into the promotion of liquor through his marriage to Polly Lauder, Greenwich, Connecticut, heiress. The Lauder family is largely interested in American Distillers Company. He became an active advisor on distillery policy and salesmanship. Mr. Tunney continues as chairman of the board.

The Quigley Awards

THE QUIGLEY Grand Awards for 1941 will be voted on January 27th at the Hotel Astor, New York. A Judging Committee of industry distribution, advertising and exhibition executives will select the winning showmen to receive the annual Silver and Bronze Grand Awards. The Judges will be luncheon guests of Martin Quigley.

This will be the eighth year of Grand Awards judging in competitions sponsored by MOTION PICTURE HERALD through its Managers Round Table. Entries to be considered will be advertising and exploitation material submitted by theatremen to the Managers Round Table department in 1941, and who have won the best ratings of "Quarter-Master" Plaques, Medals and Citations in the four quarters of the year.

Wallis on His Own

HAL WALLIS has resigned as associate executive in charge of production for Warners. But he has been signed by the company "under a long-term contract" as a "unit" producer, under Hal Wallis Productions. Mr. Wallis has for a long time been desirous of being relieved from the executive post for a free hand in unit production.

According to Jack L. Warner, the new arrangement will result in more "big time attractions." He added that Mr. Wallis had been "with Warners nearly 20 years and has been part and parcel of the success of our production organization."

Times Roto Bows Out

THE ROTOGRAVURE section of the New York Times, oldest roto section in the United States, and the scene of many a motion picture placement, will be discontinued and the section combined with the Times Sunday magazine on February 15th, in what is described as a new illustrated magazine section. The use of photographs to illustrate magazine articles will be increased and the section will include special pictorial layouts. Womens' fashions will become a feature of the new magazine and other women's departments will be expanded. The use of color will be increased.

The New York Times launched its roto picture section in July 1914, the first in the country, to meet increasing interest in photographic news coverage. The Chicago Tribune followed soon afterwards.

Louis KO's Newsreels

JOE LOUIS and Buddy Baer met at Madison Square Garden, last Friday night. But they didn't stay long.

When Baer went out, so did some handsome profits anticipated by RKO and Broadway fight promoters from newsreel pictures of a heavyweight clash staged for Navy Relief, a project through which the fight got extra special press and public ticket-buying attention.

RKO had advertised the showing of a "big special" Louis-Baer fight film in advance, at its New York theatres, and elsewhere. When Louis knocked out Baer, in two minutes and 56 seconds, flat, RKO got only a "little special," no more than an ordinary length of newsreel clip of actual combat, embellished by Louis in his dressing room, Wendell Willkie addressing the arena fight fans.

But Navy Relief did benefit. Fighter Joe gave his entire purse, no strings, of $47,100.94; Promoter Mike Jacobs gave his share, $37,229.96, and the defeated Baer gave his, some $4,081. Next day Joe enlisted; three days later he was inducted, as a plain buck private.

Agfa-Ansco Purged

GERMAN INFLUENCE, long suspected, and later investigated, this week seems to have been largely routed from the General Aniline and Film Corporation, and its subsidiary, Agfa-Ansco, motion picture raw film distributor.

The United States Treasury Department Tuesday suspended five principal GAFC executives: Dr. Rudolph Hutz, director; Hans Aickelin and William von Rath, vice-presidents and lately resigned directors; F. W. von Meister, general manager of the Ozalid division, and Leopold Eckler, acting general manager of Agfa-Ansco—all of German birth, all naturalized Americans.

INDEPENDENTS ASK WILLKIE TO LEAD FIGHT AGAINST MAJOR DISTRIBUTORS

Minnesota Exhibitors Open Drive to Have Congress Include Film Rentals in Price Control Bill; Court Test of Law Continues

Independent Minnesota exhibitors, counseled and gathered by Northwest Allied Tuesday in Minneapolis, voiced a request to Congress to include film rentals in the Federal price control bill.

They wired a request to Wendell Willkie to represent them, and sent an agent undisclosed, to Washington, to importune the state's Congressional representatives to pry film rental control into the price control measure, now under debate.

Mr. Willkie, who only four months ago defended the majors, in the Washington inquiry into film "propaganda", now finds himself asked to assail his former clients, in defense of independent exhibition, a branch of the industry he has not yet met.

Late last week, California's Senator Sheridan Downey obtained Senate approval of an amendment exempting films—like newspapers and radio—from price control. That amendment noted the difficulty of fixing prices for films.

The Minneapolis exhibitors want the Federal measure to fix prices at the 1940-41 level. They set up a "Minnesota Exhibitors' committee" to ask cooperation from independent exhibitors in other states.

Outsiders Attend Meeting

The Tuesday meeting was called for exhibitors of St. Paul and Minneapolis but many outside theatre owners attended and agreed with the moves.

The telegram to Mr. Willkie charged distributors were retaliating for Northwest Allied's sponsorship of the Minnesota anti-decree law, by charging excessive and unfair rentals.

The exhibitors told Mr. Willkie that the distributors' refusal to sell films in Minnesota some months after passage of the law caused "irreparable loss and injury to the exhibitors and inconvenience to the public."

Resumption of selling, after the distributors obtained relief from the decree in New York Federal Court, was accompanied, the telegram added, by "concerted action" in which "the terms demanded were exorbitant, unconscionable, and punitive . . . threatening the continued existence of the independent exhibitor, many of whom are faced with bankruptcy and ruin."

"These monopolistic practices," the wire continued, "are imposed upon the independent exhibitor without regard for ethics, equity, or common decency."

Who comprises the "Minnesota Exhibitors Committee," which signed the telegram, was not disclosed.

Apropos of the product shortage in the state, and especially in St. Paul and Minneapolis, which has occurred despite resumption of selling, exhibitors Tuesday said the only major selling to independents in those two cities was being done by MGM, because it has cleared much of its product

INDEPENDENTS MAY TESTIFY

Independent Minnesota exhibitors, who supported the state's anti-consent decree law, may go into Ramsey County Court, St. Paul, to describe allegedly unfair business practices of the majors, inferring thereby justification for the law. Such was the report in Minneapolis last week, as Twentieth Century-Fox, Paramount, and RKO, stood trial for criminally violating the state law compelling sale of an entire season's product en masse, by selling in blocks of five and ten to local theatres. The state has presented evidence of the illegal sales, freely admitted by the majors, who continue now in defense to assail the law and defend the industry's peculiar practices. Whether the state would allow its exhibitor supporters to testify against those practices in rebuttal, was questioned this week.

for subsequent run, by its franchise with the Minnesota Amusement Company.

The independent theatre operators added that MGM's available films, however, would be used up in two weeks. They insisted they would then be forced to close. They asserted they would close, rather than submit to "rough deals" by other majors.

Majors Still on the Stand in Blocks Case

Executives of three majors—Paramount, RKO and Twentieth Century-Fox continued on the stand in Ramsey County Court, St. Paul, this week, to hammer home the majors' contentions that business practices in the motion picture industry were a natural development, that the industry should be unimpeded by legislation, and that the Minnesota anti-decree law was evil and unconstitutional.

The occasion is the suit by the state of Minnesota against the three majors for criminal violation of the state law compelling majors to sell an entire season's product, allowing cancellation of 20 per cent. They are charged with selling in blocks of five and ten to theatres in St. Paul, and White Bear. They have admitted the charges, and are using the trial as a test of the law. They also have in court pending a civil test case.

Meanwhile, securing relief from the decree in New York Federal Court, they are selling in the state according to its law.

In three weeks past, executives of the three film companies have paraded to the stand, to describe the industry's fierce competition, its peculiar practices; to describe selling systems, theatre operation, production methods.

As it appeared the trial would last through this and next week, Joseph M. Podoloff, Fox Minneapolis branch manager, took the stand Monday, assailing the state law for inimicalness to exhibitors and distributors. He asserted it eliminated "spot booking"; that therefore it deprived the exhibitor of a "stop gap" he frequently used.

He also denied pictures could be really "flops." It depends, he intimated, how the exhibitor handles them. He described how prices are set on pictures, asserting they are not entirely set by producers who, he said, always think their pictures are good.

Previously, M. A. Levy, the company's district manager, testified that of 500 theatres open in Minnesota, only 300 to 325 were considered "possibilities" because the others compete. He noted that competing theatres in the same town may not be serviced with the same product. The state law thus works somewhat of a hardship, he pointed out, because it prevents a distributor from splitting his product among the competitors, and it also prevents an exhibitor from making "spot deals" for product unused by his rival under the 20 per cent cancellation privilege.

Defense Calls Lazarus

Although United Artists is not a defendant, the defense called Paul Lazarus, of that company's home office, as a distribution specialist, to corroborate statements made by previous defense witnesses.

A prominent defense witness last week was Ned Depinet, vice-president in charge of distribution for RKO, who insisted that approximately 70 per cent of the company's contracts were "short" deals, under which the exhibitor bought less than the full season's product. And he added:

"Despite this large percentage of short deals, licensing of an entire season's output in every instance would not compensate for 20 per cent cancellation as required by the Minnesota law."

He noted, too, that the law did not allow the distributor to resell rejected pictures to the same exhibitor, at different terms.

He added that similar laws in other states would "work a very serious hardship" on his company. He thus echoed the opinion of Thomas Connors, executive assistant to Sidney Kent, Twentieth Century-Fox president, who told Minneapolis exhibitors last week that national 20 per cent cancellation would be ruinous to distributors.

Noting that the companies are increasing revenue from army camp bookings, Mr. Depinet charged that the state law thwarted such bookings, which are usually "spot."

Tuesday, questioning by the defendants of exhibitors began to determine the effect of the state law upon the local industry.

Just prior to this Ben Blotchky, Paramount Minneapolis branch manager, testified on special work done by a distributor. Illustrating, he showed records for prints of "North West Mounted Police," which depicted its bookings from Minneapolis—many out of the state. The latter was proof of films falling under interstate commerce, it was noted. Mr. Blotchky also showed the repairs necessary on prints, and number of runs possible for one print (36 to 48).

OPM WARNS INDUSTRY OF GROWING SHORTAGE OF THEATRE MATERIALS

Governmental Pegging of Film Rentals Blocked; War Censors Affirm Policy of 'Free Films'; Daylight Time Law Set

Scarcity of most of the raw materials entering into the manufacture of products required in the operation of motion picture theatres will create serious difficulties for exhibitors, but every effort will be made by the Government to keep all houses in operation, representatives of eastern theatre interests were told by the U. S. last Thursday in Washington.

Meeting with A. Julian Brylawski, in charge of film priorities for the U. S. Office of Production Management, a representative group of theatre operators canvassed the situation in the first of a series of Government conferences designed to develop angles of the exhibitor war-time position.

At the moment the carbon situation is serious but, it was said, can be dealt with. The future, however, holds little comfort for the theatre owner in the light of disclosures that there will likely be no Freon gas for cooling systems next spring, no carbontetrachloride for booth cleaning and little or no wool for new carpets, while supplies of other materials—iron, steel, copper, rubber, etc.—will be but a fraction of normal consumption.

The war in Europe has cut off the supply of cork, and none is available now for gaskets and other uses, it was said; the war in the Pacific has cut off the supply of rubber, and only part of the exhibitors' requirements will be possible of fulfillment. In this country, the war effort is absorbing the supplies of metals and chemicals, and there will be little for theatre use.

Foreseeing the increasingly serious supply situation, the U. S. Supply Priorities and Allocations Board halted the construction of new theatres last October. That order will not be lifted until the situation improves materially, the exhibitors were told by Mr. Brylawski.

To 'Parcel' Equipment

While the stoppage of new construction will eliminate a demand for new installations, there will be little new equipment available for the industry and what little there is will be parceled out with a view to servicing a maximum of houses.

Possibly not more than 750 complete projection units will be available this year, it was said. This material will not be assembled in the form of units but the individual parts will be held as replacements for existing installations.

Exhibitors may get as much as 25 per cent of their normal requirements of tubes for sound apparatus and certain metal requirements; other requirements may receive larger quotas and every effort will be made to furnish as much rubber, copper and steel as possible, although it was admitted that the maximum would be far from 100 per cent of normal consumption.

Exhibitors were warned that the situation would necessitate that they get every hour of service possible from existing equipment, and that they would have to abandon all thoughts of modernization. But, it was promised, every effort will be bent toward providing repair and maintenance parts so that present installations may be kept in operation.

SERVICEMEN PREFER DUALS WITH ACTION

Men in the armed forces prefer double features, male stars and action pictures, it is revealed by figures compiled by Balaban & Katz Circuit, Chicago. In a breakdown of 2,400 passes to B. & K. theatres issued to uniformed men, through the Amusement and Recreational division of the Chicago Civilian Defense Committee, in 22 days, it was found that 546 were used at the Roosevelt Theatre, which pursues a double-feature policy.

Some 323 of the passes were used during the 14-day run of "Unholy Partners" and "Target For Tonight" and 223 during the run of "Henry Aldrich for President" and "Texas." Their second preference was the Chicago Theatre for "The Maltese Falcon," "I Wake Up Screaming" and "The Shadow of the Thin Man," combined with stage shows, with 531 admissions.

Among those invited to attend the Washington conference were Joseph Bernhard, vice-president of Warner Brothers; George Schaefer, president of RKO; Sidney Samuelson, Allied of Pennsylvania; Carter Barron, eastern district manager for Loew's Theatres; William Crockett, president of the MPTO of Virginia; Si Fabian, New Jersey independent exhibitor; Abram F. Myers, Allied general counsel; Arthur Lockwood, MPTO of Connecticut; Charles A. Arrington, MPTO of North and South Carolina, and Nathan Yamins, Fall River, Mass; Knute Carskadon, Keyser, W. Va., and Kenneth Duke, Leonardtown, Md., independents, among others.

The production end of the film industry will not suffer overmuch, for the present, according to defense officials interviewed in Washington this week. They foresaw no production curtailment because of shortages of material. But they did, however, caution producers to be economical. It was predicted shortages of materials would tend to reduce sizes of studio sets. It was also noted, though, that producers had accumulated vast stores of properties from which to draw.

The defense executives additionally said that where materials were scarce, the film industry nevertheless would be enabled to secure them. It is so essential, in their viewpoint, that it will not be permitted to collapse.

Governmental Pegging Of Rentals Blocked

Possible Government pegging of film rentals during the war emergency was forestalled in Washington last week. In Canada, however, the Dominion Government announced pegging of film rentals. (See page 48.)

Price control legislation now being perfected in Congress will not apply to film rentals as a result of action taken by Senator Sheridan Downey of California at the request of the companies in his state.

Three amendments proposed by the Senator to as many sections of the bill will classify motion pictures with newspapers, magazines and broadcasting, as exempt from Government price control. The amendments were adopted by the Senate without formal vote.

The amendments will relieve the industry of any possibility of control over either film rentals or admission prices, and supporters of the bill explained that there had never been any intention of including them in the measure which is designed, primarily, to prevent inflation in the cost of living.

In appealing to the Senator for aid, representatives of the industry pointed out that great difficulty would be encountered in fixing prices on motion pictures and in operating under price ceilings on either rentals or admissions.

Meanwhile, it was expected in Washington this week that House conferees will be named shortly to determine whether the House of Representatives will accept the Senate amendment sponsored by Senator Downey. Senators who will argue in favor of the amendment, it was reported from the Capitol on Monday, are Brown of Michigan, Glass of Virginia, Barkley of Kentucky, Taft of Ohio, and Danaher of Connecticut, who already were named conferees for the Senate.

The House, which failed to exempt motion pictures when it passed the price control bill, was expected to agree to the Downey amendment, it was understood.

U. S. Affirms Policy Of 'Free Films'

Censorship plans of the Administration do not contemplate the imposition of any hobbles on motion pictures.

This was made clear this week in Washington by both Byron Price, chief of the new censorship organization, and Lowell Mellett, last month appointed by President Roosevelt to be Coordinator of Government film activities.

Whereas the policy of World War I censorship, under George Creel, was to withhold all but a minimum of news, both Mr. and Mr. Mellett are said to believe that the public should be given as much information as possible without giving information also to the enemy.

Their present approach to the question is that of suppressing dangerous news at the source. By so doing, it is pointed out, there is little need to worry about what the newspapers will print, the radio broadcast or the films depict.

Both Mr. Price and Mr. Mellett, who are working with the Army and Navy, are said to feel there was no need to supervise the making of motion picture features for domestic distribution. Mr. Price, however, has authority to inspect features offered for export, to make sure that nothing detrimental to the interests of the United States goes abroad; which is not an intimation that any producer would deliberately betray anything of value to an enemy but to make certain that nothing which would be informative to him has crept in inadvertently.

In his letter appointing Mr. Mellett coordinator, President Roosevelt said he wanted motion pictures left free. That is to be done, it is said.

Long-standing arrangements between the newsreel companies and the War and Navy Departments, Mr. Price believes, will take care of that phase of the situation. Under a system adopted long ago, the military agencies decide whether the making of certain scenes of Army or Navy activity is desirable, and the companies not only abide by the decision but submit the pictures for review before release.

Similarly, feature producers desiring to incorporate military scenes in pictures do so under Army or Navy supervision.

The plan has worked out, with Army and Navy officials seeking to make available to the public, through motion pictures, all informative and interesting material which would not be of value to an enemy, the industry in its turn giving the two services valuable publicity which it could not otherwise secure.

No need for interference with this arrangement is seen, and no effort will be made to superimpose any further surveillance over the industry.

U. S. Daylight Time Law Assured

The daylight saving time controversy which raged in Washington last week was settled on Tuesday by the Senate and House Conference Committee, which finally accepted the Lea Bill, passed by the House last Friday by a vote of 67 to 20, authorizing the President to proclaim daylight saving time nationally, but limiting the change to one hour. The Wheeler Bill, approved by the Senate, was discarded by the committee. It authorized the President to change time by not exceeding two hours in all or any part of the country. The Lea Bill will be in force for the duration of the war and six months thereafter.

'Juke-Movie' and Other Machines Hit

A sharp restriction in the supply of critical materials available for the manufacture of candy, gum, beverages and cigarette vending machines, in use in thousands of theatres, was ordered Wednesday by Donald M. Nelson, director of priorities. Only this week the U. S. Census Bureau disclosed that theatres gross over $13,000,000 a year from the sale of confections and other merchandise.

Immediate cuts of 25 per cent in iron and steel and 50 per cent in zinc were imposed on vending machine makers. After February 1st the rates will be raised to 50 and 75 per cent and aluminum, nickel, stainless steel, chromium copper, lead, and tin will be completely restricted. "Juke Box" music and motion picture machine manufacture was curbed last week.

More Theatres Rush Blackout, Raid Plans

A practice "black-out" was staged at Tampa, Florida, last Friday night. All theatres shut down the front of the houses completely at the warning sirens and did no business until the all clear was sounded 30 minutes later. The shows went on uninterrupted inside, however, with but one exception, the "Drive-In" theatre, which, being in the open, had to discontinue its show entirely.

In St. Louis, an Amusement Defense Bureau was formed on Monday, with Harry C. Arthur, Jr., vice-president and general manager of Fanchon & Marco, chairman. Meetings are being scheduled to demonstrate to theatre employees the necessary procedure in the event of air raids.

A committee to check on all amusement enterprises includes:

Fred Wehrenberg, Louis K. Ansell, Thomas Graham, Harry Barco and Thomas Canavan. J. Leslie Kaufman and Herbert Washburn will handle public relations; Sam Reingold, distributors; Percy Gash, arenas and amusement parks; Paul Beisman, outdoor theatres; Harold Koplar, floor shows; Tony Scarpelli, night clubs and bowling alleys, and William DeWitt and George Sisler, baseball.

Mayor Bernard Samuel of Philadelphia has proclaimed theatre rules for blackouts and air raid precautions, which provide that shows and programs may continue. Light locks must be furnished, however, so that the use of entrance and exit facilities will prevent light from being detected outside.

On Sunday night, the Miami area will have its first blackout test, it was learned this week. The 15 theatres of the Wometco Circuit, 15 Paramount houses and the independents, in keeping with local defense officials' requests, have already prepared to carry on inside theatres as usual, but with foyers, lobbies and all outside lights darkened. Managers and ushers have been trained in air raid warden duties and will address the patrons as the alarm sounds.

Albany's first trial blackout on Monday night, starting at 7:45 P. M., and ending ten minutes later, cut theatre attendance in the Albany-Troy area, according to reports, at least 50 per cent. It was estimated that nearly 90 per cent of the homes were tuned in on stations WOKO and WABY which gave the "alert" and "all clear" signals. The early hour of the test made it possible for theatregoers to attend the second shows.

Blackout Law Considered

Theatre marquees in Pittsburgh may be legislated into darkness, after midnight, if a proposed ordinance is passed by the city council, reports indicate. Illuminated store displays and lighted outdoor signs, including marquees, are also included in the measure which requires that operators of signs must designate a custodian or agent for the signs, who shall extinguish them immediately upon call of a blackout period, in addition to the midnight turn-out. The ordinance is one of the civilian defense provisions being considered by the council.

Under auspices of the local civilian defense council in New Haven, theatre managers and assistants are now enrolled in a 14-hour air raid emergency course of training which they attend twice weekly. Representatives of film theatres, business places and hotels attended a meeting this week at which routine precautions were planned for safety in public places.

Representatives of theatre interests in Providence, Pawtucket, Woonsocket, Central Falls, Cranston, Centredale, Thornton and Newport, attended a meeting at Fays Theatre in Providence on Monday night, at which a demonstration was held of the various types of bombs.

A demonstration of how to quell fires caused by incendiary bombs was held at Buffalo's fire department headquarters last Thursday for managers of the city's Shea theatres. Capt. Daniel R. Mahaney of the Fire Department presided, with Vincent R. McFaul, general manager of Shea Theatres.

City fire and defense officials of Rochester have urged local theatre managers to train their staffs in wartime emergencies, it was learned this week. Emergency duties were discussed by Battalion Chief Frank Gallagher at a meeting with representatives of 13 local Schine houses.

Fox Employees To Train

As part of the plan proposed by Sidney R. Kent, president of 20th Century-Fox, to have all employees and officials properly equipped to cope with whatever war emergencies may arise requiring special services, first aid course, air-raid drills and general safety instruction have become part of the Fox business day, it was learned in New York last Friday. At the home office, where the safety program got under way, the company arranged for employment of extra firemen, first-aid instructors and engineers to train employees and executives in emergency activities. Special equipment for the purpose has been installed. This safety program, it was said, will be extended through all of Fox's offices and exchanges in the country.

Hugh Strong, director of personnel, is in charge of the program. Under his supervision, instructors direct the activities. Firemen are now on duty at the home office 24 hours a day.

Buying Bonds and Stamps

Warner Bros. put into motion a payroll allotment plan for the purchase of defense bonds by 3,000 studio employees, who may volunteer a weekly salary deduction, it was announced in Hollywood on Monday.

Columbia Broadcasting System, through its television station WCBW, sold $75,000 worth of defense bonds and stamps last Friday night in less than one hour by appealing directly to its visual audience, during a television program.

Local 306 of the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees, announced this week it had purchased $5,000 worth of defense bonds and will shortly buy another $45,000 as soon as necessary financial arrangements can be made. Herman Gelber, the local's president, made the announcement in New York. He also estimated that the union's 2,155 members already have spent individually approximately $300,000 for defense bonds. Philadelphia's IATSE local voted last week to buy a $1,000 defense bond each month for the duration of the war.

RCA Manufacturing employees, 8,500 of them at the company's Camden plant, have pledged to buy defense bonds at the rate of more than $1,600,000 annually through payroll allotments, according to the RCA bond committee which is conducting a plant-wide drive. The sum pledged thus far represents 88 per cent of the monthly quota of $150,000 established by the committee, it was said. Approximately 70 per cent of the employees have signed up.

Stamp Giveaways

The Posel circuit in Philadelphia, independent theatres operated in that area by Leo Posel, announced this week it had joined the defense stamps campaign by placing such stamps on sale at all its theatres' box offices. Mr. Posel proposed that his houses join in the stamps' saving plan, pointing out that theatres are located in almost every area, while many patrons live far from banks, post offices and department stores.

Standard Theatres in Kenosha, Wis., the Kenosha, Gateway, Vogue and Chief, reported operating defense nights each Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, in connection with the U. S. defense stamps and bonds which are being used as giveaways.

The Uptown Theatre in Providence, operated by Dominick and Henry J. Annotti, announced a weekly defense stamp night, beginning last Friday, with each adult patron getting a 10-cent stamp.

More War and Defense Films

Hollywood this week continued to add to the long roster of previously announced script, title and other production factors affected by America's war against the Axis.

The 20th Century-Fox film known as "A Tommy in the U. S. A.," is now called "Thunder Birds."

"Powder Town," an RKO drama written by novelist Vicki Baum, will present as plot background, actual operations in a huge munitions plant turning out explosives for the Army and Navy. RKO also announced that "Call

Studios Race for Titles and Rights On War Stories

Out the Marines," uniting Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe, will be released nationally on February 13th.

Walt Disney's studio reports that a Donald Duck cartoon is being planned for immediate production with an income tax theme, designed to aid the Government's tax collections in March. Mr. Disney left Washington for the Coast over the weekend, following conferences with officials of the Treasury and Navy departments. The subject is expected to be ready for distribution to theatres within six weeks. Meanwhile, a new Disney cartoon featuring the stout-hearted Donald, in "Donald Gets Drafted," released by RKO, was previewed last Thursday for Army personnel at Camp Roberts, in California.

The Disney studio delivered this week the first of a series of four films to the Canadian Government contracted on a cost basis, stressing defense bond purchases. Seventy-five Technicolor prints of the film are in circulation for showing to personnel and large groups, with celebrated Disney characters like the Three Little Pigs, the Big Bad Wolf and the Seven Dwarfs, bringing home the message.

Columbia Pictures announced in New York on Tuesday that it had acquired Michael Powell's timely production, "The Invaders," starring Laurence Olivier, Leslie Howard, Raymond Massey and Glynis Johns. Powell's most recent production was "The Thief of Bagdad."

William Rowland, producer, reported in New York on Friday that he would begin production immediately of "The Commandos," based on a story of operations of British coastal raiders. Mr. Rowland said he was awaiting from England actual films of the Commandos in action. Production will begin at the Movietone studio in New York. Irving Shapiro and Stedman Coles wrote the story.

A press preview of "Tanks," produced by the Office for Emergency Management, was held Wednesday afternoon at the Preview Theatre in New York. This one-reeler is the latest in the series of motion picture reports produced by OEM's film unit. Orson Welles contributes the spoken commentary.

Universal Pictures was awarded the Silver Airplane Trophy by Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, World War I ace, and president of Eastern Air Lines, last week in N. Y. The award was given for Universal's production, "Cavalcade of Aviation," a special two-reeler which traces the history of aviation from the first flight of the Wright Brothers at Kitty Hawk to the present day of wartime flying.

Gradwell L. Sears, vice-president of United Artists in charge of distribution, announced in New York on Tuesday that UA had completed a deal for release of 12 two-reel short subjects, the series of which is entitled, "World in Action," produced by National Film Board. These subjects are the first shorts to be distributed by United Artists in a number of years. Three of the films already have been completed, "Churchill's Island," "The Battle for Oil" and "The Strategy of Metals." The entire series, it was said, represents what is expected to be one of the most timely groups of films recently produced.

MGM is releasing a two-reel subject called "Main Street on the March," which shows how the men behind the soldiers and sailors—the miners, millers and factory workers—are co-operating for an all-out effort on the production front. William S. Knudsen, director-general of OPM; General George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff of the U. S. Army, and Admiral H. R.

Industry's War Council Expanded, New Committees for Both Coasts Elected

Expansion of the Motion Picture Industry's War Activities Committee to include a "Drives" division and a division on publicity and advertising was announced this week, in New York, by George J. Schaefer (RKO), chairman. Adolph Zukor (Paramount) is chairman of the "Drives" division, which comprises three subcommittees: (1) Special Events Unit, composed of Charles W. Koerner, chairman, Max A. Cohen, S. H. Fabian, Charles C. Moskowitz and Sidney Samuelson, to have final decision on all matters pertaining to theatres; (2) Talent Participation, representatives chosen by Hollywood Guilds, and (3) Industry Employee Participation, with Abe Montague heading the New York group and a co-chairman in Hollywood heading a committee to handle drives in studios.

Monroe Greenthal heads the division on advertising and publicity, with Howard Strickling vice-chairman of a Hollywood section composed of studio publicity directors. New York members include Mr. Armando, Mort Blumenstock, Rodney Bush, Edward Churchill, Kenneth Clark, Joseph Gould, Charles Reed Jones, Barret McCormick, David Lipton, Louis Pollock, Si Seadler, Vincent Trotta and Al Willkie.

Arthur Mayer, managing director of the Rialto, New York, and Si H. Fabian of Fabian Theatres, New Jersey, are to serve as volunteer assistants to Francis Harmon, executive vice-chairman and coordinator of the main industry committee.

Eastman Kodak, at the committee's request, has arranged with Donald E. Hyndman of Eastman's New York staff to work for the next 90 days as assistant to Mr. Harmon on priority problems of the industry, "which are becoming increasingly serious".

The committee's headquarters now are at 1501 Broadway.

The Coordinating Committee, which correlates the activities of the seven divisions, has been increased to 22 through the election of Edward Arnold, E. L. Kuykendall, Abe Lastfogel, Abram F. Myers, Robert H. Poole and Herman Robbins.

Mr. Harmon is in Hollywood attending meetings of the committee's Hollywood division, of which Y. Frank Freeman is chairman, and conferring with individuals and groups now related officially to the industry's all-inclusive wartime setup.

Stark, Chief of Naval Operations, appear in the picture.

"Target for Tonight," British documentary film, was previewed last Thursday night at Warner's Metropolitan, in Washington, to a distinguished audience of Government, military and diplomatic officials of all anti-Axis nations. It was sponsored by the Eagle Squadron Fund and the Royal Air Force Benevolent Fund of the United States.

The Museum of Modern Art said in New York this week that public interest had been so great in the two programs of English civilian defense films which it is showing daily in its auditorium, that additional screenings would be held on Wednesday nights and Sunday afternoons. The films are grouped under the general heading of "Safety for the Citizen."

The first anniversary motion picture of the United Service Organization was previewed at the National Press Club in Washington last week. Titled "The Private Papers of Private Dobbs," the picture tells the story of a typical American recruit from the time he leaves home until he has completed his basic training. It was filmed on location at both Fort Hancock and Fort Monmouth in New Jersey. Herbert Evers, young Hollywood and Broadway actor, plays the part of Private Dobbs.

Milstein Surveys Training Films

The War Department appointed J. J. Milstein last week to make a special survey of the distribution of training films at Army camps. Mr. Milstein began his assignment last Thursday. After a visit to Fort Dix, he was scheduled to go to Washington, where he will remain in the War Department for the duration of his assignment. Mr. Milstein will work in conjunction with Darryl Zanuck, who is in charge of producing training film in Hollywood.

Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity for MGM, was named chairman of publicity for the new civilian committee for the New York Auxiliary of the Navy Relief Society, it was announced in New York on Monday. Chairman of the Navy's welfare agency is Junius Spencer Morgan, banker.

Plans were discussed at a luncheon meeting of the committee at New York's Hotel Astor on Tuesday, concerning the gala show scheduled for the Society at Madison Square Garden on March 10th. Marvin Schenck is chairman of the production committee for the show. Vinton Freedley, Broadway producer, will be chairman of the show's producers' committee and Abe Lastfogel will head the talent committee.

Sidney Kornheiser, general manager of Paramount's music subsidiaries, Famous Music Corp. and Paramount Music Corp., was named music publisher coordinator for USO-Camp Shows, Inc., by Abe Lastfogel. Mr. Kornheiser's duties will consist of maintaining the supply of all kinds of music to the army camps and setting up of musical programs.

Film Executives Aid Drives

John J. O'Leary, general manager of the Comerford Theatres, was named chairman of the theatre division of the annual War Fund and Roll Call drive of the Red Cross in Scranton, Pa. Another Comerford official, George A. Nevin, manager of the Capitol Theatres, Danville, Pa., was made chairman of the board of directors of the town's Red Cross unit.

Announcement was made in Dallas last Thursday of the appointment of Karl Hoblitzelle, Interstate circuit official, as chairman of the volunteer personnel service board of the city's civilian defense council.

Alexander Korda, producer-owner of United Artists and his wife, actress Merle Oberon, were scheduled to arrive in New York from Hollywood over the weekend and from there Miss Oberon was to depart on Monday for the huge rally of the American Red Cross held in New Orleans. Miss Oberon was then to return to New York to report to Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt for a post in the civilian defense set-up.

VAN SCHMUS, MASTER SHOWMAN OF NEW YORK'S MUSIC HALL, DIES

W. G. VAN SCHMUS, managing director of the Radio City Music Hall in New York, died Wednesday at St. Luke's hospital. He had been under treatment at the hospital since December 30th.

Mr. Van Schmus was unique in the field of American showmanship, coming from unrelated activities in commercial life in his middle years to take over the biggest and most conspicuous problem of theatre operation in the world, in redemption of a debacle of skilled and elaborate mismanagement. In this venturesome and stupendously handicapped enterprise he achieved signal success.

The Music Hall has been under his overall executive charge since January of 1934. Mr. Van Schmus was then fifty-nine years old, white-haired, heavy, slow of motion and deliberate in expression, nimble in mind.

Early in his assumption of the management of the Music Hall, Mr. Van Schmus in conversation with the editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD observed: "... both Hollywood and New York may well wake up and serve the better taste of the American public. . . . I do not mean the Park Avenue public, either. The Sweeneys have better taste than they are credited with, and it's the Sweeneys who make our bread and butter.

"And we never try to kid the public—or ourselves."

There was nothing that pointed toward Broadway in the most of Mr. Van Schmus' years. He was born in Bensonville, Illinois, October 10, 1875. He grew up in Chicago and finished his education at North Central College in Napierville, a school of which his grandfather had been a founder and where his father had been graduated before him. The family is of substantial Dutch ancestry, coming into America before the Revolution.

Mr. Van Schmus' first work was with the Hill Publishing company of Chicago, which published the famous "Oz" books and other literature for juveniles. Subsequently he went to Schlesinger & Mayer, the concern ancestral to Chicago's Carson, Pirie Scott & Company department store, and thence to the May company in Cleveland. Twenty years ago he became interested in and general manager of the George L. Dyer advertising agency in New York. Also in New York he participated in the organization of the industrial engineering concern of Van Schmus, McDermid & Crawford.

Among Mr. Van Schmus' contacts in this period was Louis Lee, brother of Ivy Lee, and then through them he met John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and in time Rockefeller Center became a client.

In the period when the Music Hall was undergoing its early throes of maladjustment and readjustment—this reserved and white-haired—and some thought mysterious—Van Schmus appeared, observing, silently.

When the Music Hall went crashing into failure in a mad and fantastic series of experiments it became all Mr. Rockefeller's problem. Mr. Van Schmus was called to the post of managing directorship and started to pick up the pieces and put them together in a new pattern.

Broadway was skeptical and so was he. He seemed a much older man than he was. He was more agile of mind than any suspected. This solid, sober and often dour Dutchman from big business, without seeming to make a gesture all at once seemed to go everywhere, see everybody, know everybody and never missed a cocktail party. At the adequate interval he took a Manhattan, and liked it—never ate the cherry. Cocktail parties seemed to be the place to meet people and hear them talk, and so it came that the Music Hall's studio—the room that was once the great Roxy's salon—became the perennial scene of cocktail parties, relevant and irrelevant. "Mr. Van" always appeared and passed a glad hand with a certain sincerity that won. He never deceived, and also he arranged never to be deceived.

Mr. Van Schmus was notable for his energy and persistence of application to the job in hand. Up to the day of his last illness he had been spending as much as fourteen to sixteen hours a day at his work. He liked it.

Mr. Van Schmus is survived by his wife, the former Margaret Alice Mack of Toledo, Ohio, and three daughters, Mrs. Samuel A. Smith, Jr., of Summit, N. J., Mrs. Samuel R. Peale and Miss Catherine Willa Van Schmus, both of New York. He also leaves two brothers, Elmer E. Van Schmus, vice president of the First National Bank of Chicago, and Albert E. Van Schmus of Napierville, Ill.; three sisters, Miss Flora Van Schmus of Chicago, Mrs. A. F. Duttweiler of Buffalo and Miss Edna Van Schmus of Princeton, N. J., and five grandchildren.

He was a member of the Board of Directors of Rockefeller Center, Inc., and a director of RKO-Radio Pictures, as well as president and managing director of the Radio City Music Hall Corporation and the Center Theatre Corporation. He was a member of the Union League Club, and for many years was a trustee of the Kent Place School for Girls in Summit.

W. G. VAN SCHMUS made a remarkable impress upon the business of exhibiting motion pictures. Following a rich and extensive experience in fields of merchandising and advertising, he assumed, without previous novitiate in the complexities of the motion picture business, the responsibilities involved in the position of directing head of the world's greatest theatre.

From the outset it became quickly apparent to the trade that a new viewpoint had been brought to bear. Mr. Van Schmus had about him no attitude of cocksureness in his approach to the problems of showmanship. But neither was he quick to accept traditional methods of the theatre as being necessarily the best of all possible methods. Quietly and in a manner of assuredness he explored and studied. And, most especially, he listened. Not much time elapsed before there were many who came to give advice but remained to accept advice.

The history of the industry discloses the name of no person who more quickly and thoroughly established for himself and his enterprise a reputation of respect and admiration. His influence pervaded not only metropolitan exhibition but also reached into the councils of Hollywood, where he contributed invaluable suggestion and guidance.

The Radio City Music Hall, under the aegis of Mr. Van Schmus, assumed institutional importance to the nation, to the city and, in a very especial way, to the industry. It was developed into an example of quiet, orderly and sensible operation which set for itself a remarkable ideal of public service. The spirit of the managing director dominated the personnel organization in a manner that was unobtrusive but exacting and meanwhile succeeded in generating a high order of loyalty and enthusiasm.

In the death of Mr. Van Schmus the business of motion pictures loses an outstanding personality who has been an exemplar of kindness, integrity and wisdom.

INDUSTRY HEARS FIRST RESULTS OF 'UNITY' PROGRAM IN N.Y. WEDNESDAY

Industry Conference Committee To Review Progress Jan. 21st; Allied Units Prepare Protest on Consent Decree Operation

The film industry will center attention on New York next week, when the Motion Picture Industry Conference Committee convenes January 21st, in its first general meeting since the Chicago round-table, at which all sectors of the industry pledged a solid front and cooperation in executing five-point program: coordination of policy and action on taxation; coordination of policy and action on protection of the industry's good name; institutional advertising and other good-will activities; securing of priority ratings; adjustment of disputed industry practices.

The conference will be at the Hotel Warwick, which one day later will house the annual meeting of the National Allied States Association board of directors, five of whom are on the Industry Conference Committee.

The official call to the meeting was issued last week by Jack Kirsch, president of the Illinois Allied, Chicago, and temporary MPICC chairman. The conference will begin at 10:30 A.M. and may continue on through the next day. Allied, seeing the possibility of a two-day meeting, announced its directors in that event would meet Friday.

To Elect Officers

Observers said the conference, as its first order of business, would elect permanent officers, choose permanent headquarters, and secure financing. It was expected the distributors would be assessed per company; and that exhibitor organizations might ask members individually for contributions to support the committee and subsidiaries.

The subcommittee to adjust practices disputed by branches of the industry is not expected to act without the advice of company lawyers in view of the consent decree, and the possibility of Government prosecution of the remaining anti-trust complaints against Columbia, United Artists, and Universal—in the opinion of Abram F. Myers, counsel for Allied, a visitor to New York from Washington last week, and expected back next week in time for the board of directors meeting. He also foresaw appointment at the meeting, of a legal committee, whose research and advice will be consulted by the subcommittee mentioned.

Mr. Myers predicted continuation of the harmony effected at the Chicago meeting. He asserted all sides saw its necessity, both in the present emergency and the undoubted emergency to follow the war; a necessity, too, he reminded, for the industry to remain united against hostile interests, who have not ended their attack upon the industry, he insisted.

The first subcommittee to meet was that on protection of the industry's good name, under George Schaefer, RKO president. It met Saturday last and was to meet again this week. Spyros Skouras' subcommittee on taxation was to meet Thursday.

That Allied will elect officers at its board meeting next Thursday was made known by Colonel Henry Albert Cole, its president, Monday, in New York. Colonel Cole added he was not a candidate for reelection, and predicted a "good man can be found" for the post. Observers felt, however, he would be drafted.

Action to crystallize and present to the board the opinions of all units on the consent decree, was taken last week by the Connecticut unit, which wrote to the others, asking them to communicate such opinions to the board before next week's meeting. The Connecticut letter said a poll of members had shown 98 per cent disapproval of the decree.

"The main objections by the independent exhibitors," it said, "indicated that the consent decree retained all the evils of the old block booking system, without offering any relief; that shorts and newsreels were forced upon the independent exhibitor, together with the forcing of prior blocks of pictures as a condition precedent to the purchasing of subsequent blocks; that under the consent decree no provision had been made for any cancellation privilege, whereas under the old system, many contracts contained a cancellation privilege of anywhere from ten to twenty per cent."

Exhibitor organizations continue to approve the pledges of support made by their delegates at Chicago to actions to be taken by the MPICC. All units of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have approved. Last week, the Independent Theatre Owners Association, New York, approved. So did the Independent Theatre Owners of Northern California, and Nevada, a unit of the Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners.

Mr. Kirsch released three letters Tuesday, from Edward Kuykendall, MPTOA head, conveying approval; from Leo Wolcott, Allied Independent Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska, signifying the same; and from Major General E. S. Adams, War Department adjutant general, thanking Mr. Kirsch for the recently sent letter from the MPICC offering cooperation in the war effort.

Others Opposed

More opposition to the decree came this week from the New York Allied—as if in immediate response to the Connecticut Allied plea for comment from all units; and from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association of St. Louis.

Leonard Rosenthal, Troy attorney, and executive secretary of the New York Allied, asserted a poll of its members was adverse to the decree. He added they thought the decree not only impractical, but resultant in increased rentals.

The St. Louis organization, which also embraces members in southern Illinois, in a resolution urged Federal Judge Henry Warren Goddard, and the Department of Justice, to vacate or revise the decree, in favor of selling product en masse with a 20 per cent cancellation privilege.

The organization said the decree, in its present form, "is working a great hardship on motion picture theatres; it has been no benefit to them; it has increased cost of operation by reason of increased film rentals; it has deprived them of a cancellation privilege, previously enjoyed by them, on undesirable pictures; it has discouraged physical improvements of theatres because of lack of assurance of a continuous flow of desirable attractions; has interfered with booking by reason of delay occasioned in negotiations for attractions, and that it has increased rather than decreased many of the improper practices by film distributors, which it was designed to correct."

MGM Holds Two More "Forums"

MGM, inaugurator of "exhibitor forums"—first of which was held in Columbus, Ohio, November 25th—held two more this week, one at the Gayoso Hotel, Memphis, Tuesday, the other at the Coronado Hotel, St. Louis, Thursday. Hundreds of exhibitors attended both meetings, the intent of which was to show theatre owners better methods of building business.

Henderson M. Richey, MGM's director of exhibitor relations, supervised.

Among the speakers were Joseph X. Gooris, Western manager of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, and Besa Short, short subjects head for the Interstate Circuit. William R. Ferguson, Metro exploitation manager addressed both meetings, as did Edward Salzberg, West Virginia exhibitor.

The Memphis session was sponsored by Metro, R. X. Williams, Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee MPTO, and M. A. Lightman, head of Malco Theatres. Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, was expected. Burtus Bishop, Jr., attended the Memphis session, with J. Frank Willingham, Memphis branch manager, in charge of arrangements.

The New Jersey Allied held a round table conference at Sardi's, New York, Tuesday. Last week's New Brunswick, New Jersey, meeting resulted in naming of E. Thornton Kelly field representative, discussion of buying and of the forthcoming New York unity meeting, and reading of the yearly report by Harry Loewenstein, president.

Among speakers at the annual convention of the Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, Sunday and Monday, will be Claude Lee, director of exhibitor relations for Paramount, and Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, New York.

RKO Stockholders' Meeting Postponed

An annual meeting of RKO stockholders has been postponed for the second consecutive time and probably will not be held until June, the company announced Monday, following a meeting of the board of directors. The postponement of the meeting means that the election of new directors will not take place this month as scheduled.

"Films Will Keep National Spirit Soaring": Hays

Motion pictures will "keep the national spirit soaring" while the country turns to all-out production of planes, ships and guns for victory, Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, promised Thursday as he returned home to his native Indiana to call for an all-out victory effort on the home front.

Mr. Hays spoke at an Indiana War Rally held in Indianapolis to promote the sale of defense bonds. The war, he said, will be won by workman and soldier together, with every industry and every citizen sacrificing money, comforts and privileges to achieve victory.

The motion picture industry, he said, will continue to render "proved and important service" to national morale and will battle to defend the United States as surely as those in trenches or armament factories. "The road to victory," he said, "isn't going to be so pleasant for any of us. We may have bitter bread to eat and there are many sacrifices we will make.

To Retain Principles

"No jot of the fundamental right to free speech," or other basic principles of democracy, will be relinquished, however, Mr. Hays declared, adding that the nation, toughened by sacrifice and concentrated effort, would "march to the end of the road, united and together" to preserve American fundamentals.

The rally was held in Cadel Tabernacle, with a capacity of 13,000 persons, under the auspices of the Indiana Defense Council and the U. S. Treasury Department. Mr. Hays spoke as the head of the Indiana Liberty Bond drive in World War I. Carole Lombard appeared on the program as a representative of the Hollywood Defense Bond sales committee.

"This universal entertainment has become the every-day affair of the millions and has demonstrated itself as a tremendously necessary thing," Mr. Hays said. "Valuable as a temporary release of the high tension under which ordinary life exists today, the motion picture is vital under the added strain of war. Not only is it recording history, not only is it aiding directly through information and visual instruction, but it admittedly is an essential factor in relaxing nerves too tightly stretched and in strengthening morale.

"While other industries are making every effort to turn out the machines we need and 'keep them flying,' I can assure you the motion picture industry is going all-out to keep the national spirit soaring, and as one contribution to the American people will endeavor to keep them smiling.

"Those who can laugh in the face of danger usually prove to be very tough fighters, indeed.

"Let us put off nothing until tomorrow; let us do our part of the job today; let us put our pennies and our dimes and our dollars into uniform. Win the war now—everything else is chores!"

Kalcheim Resigns Paramount

Harry Kalcheim, head of Paramount's artist booking bureau, has resigned from the company, it was announced by Leonard Goldenson, head of Paramount's theatre department. Harry Levine will succeed Mr. Kalcheim.

Starting the Red Cross Campaign For the Industry in Hollywood

Chase Continues Film Holdings

Chase National Bank has not changed its holdings during the past year in Twentieth Century-Fox, National Theatres, or General Theatres Equipment Corporation, according to Winthrop Aldrich, chairman of the Chase board, who addressed the annual meeting of stockholders, in New York, Tuesday.

He commented that, although Fox had not paid dividends on common stock, it continued regular dividends on the preferred, which is the bank's principal interest in that company. He noted also that dividends by National Theatres on capital stock were the same as during the previous year; and that the bank owned 58 per cent of the company's capital stock.

Mr. Aldrich also remarked the greater return the past year than the year before, by the bank on its General Theatres' stock because of that company's increased dividend rate.

New Building Employees Union Challenges IATSE

Challenging the power of the IATSE, which it claims is not interested in "front of the house" theatre employees, the Motion Picture Managers, Assistants, Cashiers, and Doormens' Union, New York, has been chartered by the Building Service Employees international of the American Federation of Labor, and is asking New York State Labor Relations Board for certification as the proper bargaining agency for such workers in the Joelson and Triboro circuits, that area.

The union has become a BSE local, No. 266, has offices in the Fisk Building, that city, and officers undisclosed.

MGM, Warners Premiere Films

"Big" premieres accompanying big pictures are resuming with the lessened shock of war. On the agenda lately are Warners' "Captains of the Clouds" slated for a three-continent opening; and MGM's "The Bugle Sounds," which opened in Louisville, Wednesday evening following a military parade and other pre-screening appurtenances.

Coincidentally, both films have war in large measure.

The Warner film's premiere will be early next month simultaneously in New York, Ottawa, London, Cairo, and Melbourne; that is, in the British Isles, the United States, Canada, North Africa, and Australia. Prints are now being flown to those points. The premiere will feature international radio interviews with Canadian airmen after the screenings. The film features their air force.

"Kings Row," Warners, will be premiered at the Aston on Broadway, February 2nd.

The "Bugle" opening in Louisville Wednesday evening at the Loew's theatre, Louisville, was preceded by a military parade of soldiers, tanks, "Jeeps," stars and city notables, led by the band from nearby Fort Knox. Wallace Beery, the film's star, drove one tank. The procession included Major General Devers of Fort Knox, his staff, and delegations from the American Legion, Red Cross, and the Boy Scouts.

Mr. Beery was honored at luncheon Tuesday by Fort Knox officers, and commissioned a top-sergeant by Major General Devers. He was also guest of Mayor Wyatt of Louisville.

U.S. GETS 70% OF TICKET TAXES FROM HOUSES IN 21-40¢ BRACKET

Tax Report Shows 70 Per Cent of Collections of $68,302,961 for Year Were Levied on Admissions of Less Than 40 Cents

Exhibitors whose admissions do not exceed 40 cents constitute the backbone of the theatre industry's admission collections.

This fact was demonstrated graphically this week in an analysis of admission tax collections for the fiscal year ended last June 30, contained in the annual report of the Internal Revenue Bureau, made public Tuesday in Washington.

Total collections for the year were $70,963,094. Of this, $2,343,310 was secured from admissions to roof gardens and cabarets, $208,764 from ticket brokers' sales, $99,257 from leases of boxes and seats, and $8,801 from tickets sold by proprietors for more than the established price.

But $68,302,961 came from box office collections, and of that amount only $20,789,935, or approximately 30 per cent, was from admissions in excess of 40 cents and $47,513,026, or 70 per cent, from admissions between 21 and 40 cents. Just what part is contributed to ticket and tax income by theatres charging less than 21 cents could not be determined because they were not taxable in the period covered.

Proportion Over 2 to 1

Anywhere up to 11 times as much (in Vermont) was received on the 21-40 cent admissions as on admissions in excess of 40 cents, it was shown. The lowest proportion was still nearly two to one (as in California, Illinois and New York, and the only exception to the rule was not in the continental United States but in Alaska, where about four and one-half times as much was derived from the higher-admission group.

The bureau's tabulation, the first of its kind ever to be printed, was made possible by the fact that the exemption was reduced from 40 to 20 cents on July 1, 1940, the first day of the fiscal year. Thus it was possible for the bureau to give a complete year's experience, which it will not be able to do next year with respect to the present tax, which went into effect October 1, last.

Nearly 30 per cent of the total box office collections came from the single state of New York, which reported $6,935,897 on admissions over 40 cents and $12,269,885 on admissions between 21 and 40 cents. California was second with more than $6,500,000—$2,779,004 from the high bracket and $3,778,023 from the lower; Illinois was third with $1,719,812 and $3,142,203; Pennsylvania fourth with $964,130 and $2,849,875, and Massachusetts fifth with $1,033,910 and $2,283,448.

Those five states accounted for more than half the total box-office collections.

At the other end of the scale, North Dakota returned least on admissions over 40 cents, $9,063, but provided $99,203 on 21-40 cent admissions, while New Mexico, with $15,270 on high admissions, returned only 47,630 on the lower, thereby setting the record, both on collections from 21-40 cent admissions and for both brackets together.

Of considerable significance was the bureau's disclosure that it had found it necessary to go into some of the larger cities to combat extensive evasion of taxes.

A number of special investigations, the report said, have been conducted in "certain metropolitan areas" which have "produced excellent results, both with respect to the increased collections and in securing greater compliance with the laws and regulations relative to the collection and return of the tax and the proper marking of tickets."

A number of convictions, it disclosed, have been obtained for failure to collect or report the proper amount of tax or otherwise comply with the laws and regulations.

Admission tax collections in Ohio for 1941, based on three per cent of the gross receipts, amounted to $1,820,905.17, compared with $1,694,120.39 in 1940, and $1,645,147.57 in 1939, according to figures released by Don H. Ebright, State Treasurer, at Columbus.

The State collected $194,624.45 for censorship fees in 1941, while in 1940, the collections were $190,710.95, and $195,083.52 in 1939.

To Collect in Theatres for 'March of Dimes'

Motion picture exhibitors throughout the country will cooperate fully to make the 1942 March of Dimes drive, during the week of January 22nd to 26th, a huge success. Hundreds of them have wired the New York headquarters of the motion picture division for permission to collect the coins from the patrons inside the auditoriums as well as in the lobbies of their theatres.

Following this a meeting of exhibitors was held at the New York headquarters, and all circuits and groups represented unanimously agreed to make auditorium collections.

John Shubert, representing Lee Shubert, chairman of the legitimate stage division, said all legitimate theatres in the United States, would make collections in their auditoriums during the intermission.

9,000 Pledges

Over last weekend hundreds of more pledges poured into national headquarters from theatres all over the country. The total passed the 9,000 mark, and, according to C. C. Moskowitz, co-chairman, there was every indication that the goal of 10,000 theatres would be passed.

This would make the 1942 drive the most extensive collection campaign ever held in the nation's motion picture theatres.

With several thousand of the theatres, including those of the leading circuits, making collections in their auditoriums instead of just in the lobbies, optimistic predictions of over $1,000,000 for the fund are being made.

"A Night of Dimes" is to be celebrated in Warner theatres on January 23d as an additional contribution to aid the drive. The lead will be taken by the New York Strand theatre, which on opening night of "All Thru the Night" will set up a block length carpet to the lobby. On this carpet of dimes, city's notables will walk, rattling the cup for the fund. Space on the carpet will be set aside on which passersby can toss dimes throughout the day and night.

More than 600 new pledges poured into the national headquarters of the March of Dimes Tuesday, bringing the total close to 5,000 theatres who are pledged to make lobby or auditorium collections during the week of January 22d.

On Wednesday, January 21st, the film industry will sponsor a Broadway parade to start the theatres' drive to collect dimes. The parade, which has been approved by the New York Police Department, will start at 31st Street and proceed up Seventh Avenue to 41st Street, to Broadway and up Broadway to 46th Street, where Eddie Cantor will be master of ceremonies.

Boston will also have a "dimes" parade to signalize the opening of the drive. Joseph P. Longo, publicity director for Loew's, is lining up a dozen school bands, ushers and other theatre personnel to march. Governor Saltonstall will make the opening announcements.

In Hollywood Spencer Tracy has accepted the chairmanship of the Hollywood Studio Committee for the drive, according to an announcement from Mr. Schenck.

EMERGENCY OR NO, WE'LL FIGHT FOR OUR RIGHTS, SAYS NEW UNION CHIEF

Gelber, Successor to Basson in Presidency of Local 306, Says "Others Must Prove They Are as Patriotic as the Unions"

Unions cannot surrender their right to better members' working conditions, even in the present emergency. This was the order issued this week in New York by Herman Gelber, newly-elected president of the country's largest projectionists' union—Local 306.

Mr. Gelber, who upset Joseph Basson, president since 1935, in a hotly contested election last week, saw the press for the first official occasion Friday, January 9th, in his headquarters, and told them his union would do anything the parent organization, the AFL's International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, was pledged to do, but that it would not surrender the right to strike if necessary; and that, he, president of the Local, was "committed to organize New York City 100 per cent."

In view of the well known antipathy between his union and the only strong rival in the state, the Empire State Motion Picture Operators Union, possible trouble is indicated for labor and management in New York projector. Mr. Gelber would not commit himself to peace, either, in the dispute between Local 306 and the Loew circuit, which rose several weeks ago in the demand by the union, under Mr. Basson, that the circuit refuse to allow film to be projected which has been delivered by non-union sources, and a corollary demand that the circuit's parent, MGM, cease servicing theatres which hire projectionists not Local 306 members.

Mr. Gelber did, however, assert that negotiations for absorption of Empire would resume, saying that such negotiations had never been seriously conducted. Empire's men would become Local 306 members; their wages and working conditions would be altered to conform with Local 306 contracts.

Others Negotiating

Even as the new Local 306 head was talking, negotiations between eight IATSE studio locals, and the producers were nearing conclusion, several blocks away, in the New York offices of the producers' labor representative, Pat Casey, with several minor points agreed upon.

And, also within the same radius, negotiations between the New York Screen Publicists Guild, representing advertising and publicity workers in the majors' home offices, appeared halted, with the Guild charging the majors repudiated a previously agreed upon pact-in-principle, and threatening appeal to Governmental agencies.

The IATSE, under Richard Walsh, George Browne's successor, is pledged to "no strikes" for the duration. So is the American Federation of Labor, parent union, according to its executive council, meeting in Washington.

The apparent conflict between these pledges and Mr. Gelber's notation that he is committed to organize New York City "100 per cent" was explained by him with the concurrent notation that employers have been taking advantage of the emergency to cut salaries and alter working conditions, also under "emergency."

JAMES PETRILLO GIVES HIS NOD

By the grace of James Caesar Petrillo, "czar" of the American Federation of Musicians, Boston's famed conductor and head of its symphony, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, will be heard by New Yorkers this season. Mr. Petrillo has granted the Boston musician permission to conduct the New York Philharmonic in six concerts. Dr. Koussevitsky and his Boston orchestra are not members of Mr. Petrillo's union. Ordinarily, AFM men may not play under a non-union conductor.

Mr. Gelber asserted it certainly cannot be fair to have this double standard, and that the union must maintain its weapon of strike, as its only weapon in lieu of machinery for arbitration and mediation. When such machinery is set up, and when it is approved by Local 306's parent, the IATSE, then the local will abide, he promised.

While not asserting, plainly, that the local would strike in further disputes, Mr. Gelber added to his commitment of organizing the city, that it would be done "one way or another," and left his listeners to interpret this remark as they might.

Other Unions Also Active

While Empire State is the chief rival of Local 306, having contracts with the Century, and other independent circuits, it is not the only one in New York. There are also the Independent, and the Metropolitan, small, but a labor supply for theatre owners unable or unwilling to pay regular wage scales.

Abraham Kindler, and William Santasiero, president and secretary, respectively, of Empire, said Friday, January 9th, that they expected resumption of negotiations for their union's absorption by Local 306; but, like Mr. Gelber, they were unable to predict the course of such negotiations.

Mr. Gelber cited 200 unemployed in Local 306, possibly indicating new members will not be accepted. However, he pointed to standardization of union dues at $50 per year.

Local 306's difficulties with its erstwhile attorney, Matthew M. Levy, will be resolved, Mr. Gelber was confident. The union has paid Mr. Levy what it thought he should receive, $10,000 per year. Mr. Levy is asking $40,000, however, and has retained union papers, including those concerning the Loew anti-trust suit against local 306. Nathan Frankel, new union attorney—at $10,000 per year—is seeking return of the papers, via the courts, and also return of union monies it claims Mr. Levy is holding. Meanwhile, he has had copied from records of the Loew attorneys data about the circuit's suit.

Local 306-Empire amalgamation would end the suit, observers believe, inasmuch as the union's demands were made to eliminate Empire by starving theatres employing its members, of product.

The local's executive board was to meet Friday, to consider "100 per cent" organization of the city. They were also expected to appoint a committee to negotiate with Empire, and to consider the Loew suit.

This week may see the conclusion of negotiations for new closed shop contracts between producers and eight IATSE studio locals, which have been proceeding for several weeks in the New York office of Pat Casey, producers' labor representative.

Earlier, jurisdictional claims between unions had been ruled out of discussion. Last week's conversations were said to concern general working conditions, after which are to be discussed the working conditions peculiar to each.

Mr. Casey said late last week wage increases had not been discussed nor had they been broached by the locals. Other studio locals belonging to the seven international unions in the studio labor basic agreement received 10 per cent pay increases last September, retroactive to March.

The producers are said to have agreed to the six-hour day, to replace the three-hour call; to time and a half pay for the fourth shift; double time pay for a Sunday call; payment of one-quarter the regular pay, or employment on another shift, for cancellations; double time for use of the lunch period; other points.

SPG Charges "Repudiation" Of Agreement by Majors

The Screen Publicists Guild, New York, last week telegraphed to the presidents of Loews, Columbia, Paramount, Universal, and RKO, that their companies had "repudiated" an agreement in principle for a closed shop contract; an agreement in which the Guild assertedly made important concessions. The Guild will now revert to its original demands, it said.

It also advised the company heads it would appeal to the proper Governmental agencies. It termed the action of their representatives "contrary to every fundamental principle of bona fide collective bargaining."

Meanwhile, the National Labor Relations Board has certified another major's home office union; the Warner Brothers Associated Office Employees.

At the same time it notified the Screen Readers Guild that this week its name would be changed to that of its parent, the Local 109, Screen Office and Professional Employees Guild, CIO.

Thad C. Barrows has been reelected president of the Boston Projectionists' local, 182, for the 24th year. James Burke was reelected business agent.

The Chicago projectionists' union is admitting new men, for the first time in several years. Gus Anders heads the new members' committee.

William H. Blannett was elected president of Local 120, IATSE and MPO, of Pittston, Pa. Other officers chosen: Sidney Hertz, vice president; James A. Casalo, recording and corresponding secretary; Anthony Zukauskas, financial secretary; Michael Novitsky, treasurer; Norman J. Saunders, business agent; Simon Millis, Henry F. Miller, Norman J. Saunders, executive board.

The local voted to purchase $1,500 worth of defense bonds.

Don MacLuskie was reelected president of Local 140, American Federation of Musicians of Wilkes-Barre, Pa. Other officers elected: Robert E. Knecht, vice president; Charles E. Williams, financial secretary; Charles E. Tite, recording secretary; Peter J. Kleinkauf, treasurer; Frank Magalski, business agent; executive board, William Christian, Joseph Marrone, Delmar E. Hufsmith, Heine Kleinkauf; trustees, Byron Barney, James Calladine, Chester Eddy; examination board, William Gilbert, Leo Jacobs, Edward Venzel; delegates to national convention, Philip Cusick, Don MacLuskie.

Critics' Curse is Gold at Box office says Mayer

Here, again, is the managing director of the Rialto theatre, situated at New York's busy Times Square corner, in his frequent pixie mood and lively skepticism. His theatre is one that is unlikely ever to gain or lose by attention of any sort from the critics of the metropolitan press, anyway—so Mr. Mayer is free to have fun, and does. Some critics have been invited to discuss this discussion, and if they do this may be a serial.—THE EDITOR.

By ARTHUR L. MAYER

It becomes increasingly apparent that the trouble with the motion picture industry is that we do not have enough bad pictures. By bad pictures, of course, I mean the ones the critics do not like—pictures, for instance, such as "Shanghai Gesture," "Sundown," "Hellzapoppin'" and "The Wolf Man," which have been breaking box office records in New York during the past few weeks. Wanda Hale in the Daily News expressed the unanimous opinion of her confreres when she called "Shanghai Gesture," "the most awful piece of boredom that has come out of Hollywood in twenty years." It may have bored the critical fraternity, but it broke the box office record of the Astor Theatre.

About "Sundown," Ted Strauss of the Times wrote, "ridiculous is the word for this trumped up tale—so much banal nonsense." Banal nonsense must be what the public craves because the Criterion, also, established a new all time high. About "The Wolf Man," Archer Winsten of the Post wrote, "It smacks more of a Hollywood charade than of horrors." The Rialto, long famed as the house of horror, should hereafter become the citadel of charades for "The Wolf Man" piled up the year's outstanding gross. "Hellzapoppin'" which was included by the New York Times in its list of the year's ten worst pictures did a heavenly business at the Rivoli, but a few moderately favorable newspaper comments were no doubt responsible for its failure to establish a new house record.

The reluctance of the public to heed the Nestors of the newspapers is no new development. Only a few months ago, another Astor presentation looked like a Hyde to the reviewers and a Jekyll to the picture fans. For four successive years, Shirley Temple, whose adolescent charms failed to stimulate the hardened arteries of the critics, was selected by the exhibitors as their most popular star. For the past three years, Mickey Rooney has been the champion at the box office and poison to the press. The Critics Circle selected as the prize winners for the past four years, "Citizen Kane," "Grapes of Wrath," "Wuthering Heights," and "The Citadel." Only one of these, "Grapes of Wrath" placed in the exhibitors' annual list of best box office bets. The other three failed to even be included in the top twenty-five of their year.

It is unfortunate but undeniable that artistic masterpieces such as "The Long Voyage Home," or progressive social documents such as "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" failed to return their original negative cost from their domestic distribution, while comedies such as the Abbott-Costellos, homely family dramas such as the Andy Hardys, and westerns such as the Gene Autrys made fortunes for their astute producers. I have, personally, been connected with four documentary productions, all of which were greeted with critical accolades, and not one of which ever returned a fraction of its original cost to its producers. On the other hand, during the past year, I have helped to produce a group of independent pictures, every one of which was mercilessly mangled by the press, and not one of which will fail to return a profit of over 100 per cent.

It would almost appear, indeed it has been the experience at the Rialto Theatre over a period of many years, that box office receipts are in inverse ratio to the approval of the press. The question inevitably arises—does the motion picture public not read reviews with any confidence in their reliability—does it not read reviews at all—or does it not read, period? The answer will, of course, vary for different theatres. At a house like the Globe, for instance, the reviews are too sophisticated for the patrons, while at the Plaza, the patrons are too sophisticated for the reviews.

The star system of predigested reviewing was evolved to eliminate this element of sophistication as well as time. Under its far from tender ministrations, superlatives, either good or bad, are generally credited with affecting theatre grosses. Four stars boomed "Boom Town" to colossal receipts. But several years ago, no stars at all created an equal rush to see the film version of "Sanctuary." The Paramount was packed by regular folks (not jitterbugs in those happy ancient days) to see if any picture could be so bad. The superlative theory, however, fails to explain the overwhelming success of "It Happened One Night," one of the greatest pictures of all times, which the News greeted with a two and one-half star review. It would appear that fine pictures do a fine business neither in response to nor in spite of reviews, but because the public with uncanny instinct senses and appreciates their merits.

I am not trying to be smart when I say that our New York critics are too smart. Movies are a mass art and must be judged by men and women whose pulses beat in rhythm with the heart of humanity. Geniuses like Chaplin and Disney were known and adored by the public long before they were discovered by the intelligentsia. Our critics, bless their kind souls and their eager minds, are both too social minded and too art loving to look at pictures the way the average fans look at them. In their judgment of movies, they are greatly impressed by ideological or esthetic merits, while the public, to whom they address their admonitions, is interested solely in entertainment. They are inclined to be overly impressed with technical experiments and photographic virtuosity.

A good example is their enthusiasm for "Citizen Kane," which left most picturegoers either bored or puzzled or both. Writers for the New Republic or the New Masses may well be justified in appraising pictures on the basis of social content or conformity with Marxian determinism. The daily press, however, caters to millions unhampered by advanced artistic or economic theories. If its reviews are to be of value to readers, as well as to the producers and exhibitors of motion pictures, they must be in harmony with the tastes and the standards of the American people.

Critics Select 'Wind' as Best

David O. Selznick's production of Margaret Mitchell's novel, "Gone with the Wind," was selected as 1941's No. 1 feature release by American motion picture critics and reviewers in the 20th annual Film Daily "Ten Best Pictures" poll.

Four hundred and fifty-two ballots were cast for the production, distributed by Metro Goldwyn Mayer, in the coast-to-coast contest, and the picture finished with a 39-vote lead over its nearest competitor. A total of 548 critics and reviewers participated in the voting.

The remaining nine features in order of their selection follow: "Sergeant York," "The Philadelphia Story," "Citizen Kane," "Here Comes Mr. Jordan," "The Little Foxes," "Kitty Foyle," "The Great Dictator," "Meet John Doe" and "Blossoms in the Dust."

Hays Requests AMPA Dinner Postponement

At the request of Mr. Will H. Hays, the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York has decided to postpone until a later date the dinner scheduled for March 6, 1942, in honor of Mr. Hays' 20th anniversary as president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

In a letter to Mr. Vincent Trotta, president of AMPA, Mr. Hays expressed his appreciation and his desire that "when the dinner is held, it be not a personal tribute but a recognition of the real significance of the art-industry's purpose to make certain the establishment and maintenance of its self-regulation, based upon intent and accomplishment that warrant that trust."

LEGAL AND POLICY COMPLICATIONS BLOCK PRODUCT FOR TELEVISION

Industry Asked to Release Features, Shorts for Use on Defense Programs; Copyright Restrictions Cited as Obstacle

The sale of films to television stations by the major motion picture distributors is still a long way off. Even the release of short subjects and features in the vaults for many years is blocked by a tangle of legal complications and policy taboos which, both film and television executives admit, is not likely to be untangled for many years.

Copyright restrictions on music and story material, labor contracts with talent and production groups, agreements with motion picture theatre operators and in many cases specific clauses in the sale of books, plays and stories to motion pictures reserving television rights are among the obstacles to any wholesale release of films to broadcasters.

Pressure on the industry to release back issues of patriotic short subjects was renewed by the American Television Society as Norman D. Waters, president, last Friday in New York requested Will Hays and Francis S. Harmon, executive vice-chairman of the War Activities Committee of the motion picture industry, to ask the major companies to release films on patriotic themes for television defense programs. Mr. Harmon indicated he would refer the request to the Coordinating Committee of the industry's War Activities group for action, and also pointed out that because of contract and copyright restrictions, many picture firms are legally restrained from making their product available to television.

No Shorts Available

Executives in charge of short subject departments, viewing the list of pictures requested by Mr. Waters, indicated there was little chance that they could be made available to television. They pointed out that many titles were being reissued, or were still in circulation.

One executive remarked that the circulation of a short subject frequently topped 20,000,000. He expressed doubt that it would be feasible to release them to a television audience that amounted to less than 50,000. The cost of arranging clearances and copyright release would exceed any possible current or future revenue from television. He remarked that the motion picture industry was already carrying defense messages to virtually every screen in the United States.

The American Television Society, of which Mr. Waters is president, is composed of a group of business men, engineers, publicists and performers interested in the development of visual broadcasting. It is self-described as an "independent, non-profit society to foster the study, understanding and appreciation of television."

During the war emergency, according to Mr. Waters, it seeks to serve as "a central agency for cooperation between the industry, the government departments and volunteer workers for television programs of a defense nature."

TELEVISION PROGRAM MATERIAL VARIED

During the period from October 16th to January 8th, NBC televised 50 features and shorts, and for the period from July 1st to the end of 1941, CBS used 175 films: 20 features, 155 shorts, averaging two and one-half hours of film showings per week. NBC's picture programs averaged five and one-half hours weekly.

Philco's television programs re-broadcast experimentally from NBC, consisted of news, civilian defense, sports, variety and personality shows, educational programs and films.

In addition, CBS used approximately 12 hours of color film experimentally on its color television apparatus during the July 1st-December 31st period.

It proposes to form an organization of Defense Television Units, Mr. Waters said, to gather around existing television receivers and study civilian defense programs arranged by the ATS and the broadcasters. The group is not affiliated with the Office of Civilian Defense or other official agency, although Mr. Waters said it had received official encouragement and predicted it would do much to keep interest in television alive.

The Television Society, he said, seeks to provide "package shows" on defense subjects to the broadcasters without charge. It is for these programs that it has solicited film from the motion picture industry.

Commercial television, launched in 1941 and halted in its development by priorities and the outbreak of war, is being considered currently as one of the nation's post-war industries. Non-commercial television, meanwhile, may become an integral part of U. S. defense activities, it was indicated in New York on Monday, when Noran E. Kersta, manager of the television division of the National Broadcasting Company, informed convention delegates of the Institute of Radio Engineers that plans already are under way to install one or more television receivers in police air-raid warden training rooms in each of the city's air raid zones. Mr. Kersta also reported that receiver manufacturers were cooperating to make television a key factor in training 300,000 air raid wardens.

Analysis of television programs during the last two months of 1941, revealed that NBC, operating commercially through its New York station WNBT; Columbia Broadcasting, operating with WCBW, and Philco, with WPTZ in Philadelphia, had formulated compact, regular programs drawing upon motion pictures, features and shorts, to a great degree.

With the exception of excerpts from "Citizen Kane" and "Dumbo," obtained from RKO for a special New Year's Day program on CBS, and a few review excerpts on NBC television film product has been garnered exclusively from independent distributors, Government and other sources. Many of the pictures are old, as far back as 10 years, and include silent films.

CBS, broadcasting an average of two and one-half hours daily, approximately 15 hours a week, included three news programs, one on war backgrounds, one on civilian defense; a children's story spot; music, variety and personalities' shows and motion pictures, for daily fare. NBC, broadcasting on an average of 15 hours weekly, divided its program into features and shorts, sports, defense programs, variety and music, news and drama.

Concerning television in defense, Mr. Kersta also said on Monday that creation of a television network along the eastern seaboard from Washington through Philadelphia and New York to Schenectady was forecast for 1942. The NBC station in New York, he said, is already linked by radio to television stations in Philadelphia and Schenectady.

Mr. Kersta declared that 22 per cent of the U. S. population lives within range of stations now on the air or shortly to begin television operations. He estimated the number of receivers in the New York metropolitan area at 5,100, of which 78.3 per cent are in homes and 12.5 per cent in public places. An average of 90 receivers monthly are still being sold in this area, Mr. Kersta disclosed.

According to the NBC television chief, reports turned in by police and civilian defense officials after last week's experimental television program on incendiary bombs, had started a movement for regular programs and receiver stations on defense activities.

DuMont Gets Commercial Permit

A construction permit for a commercial television station to operate on 78,000-84,000 kilocycles was granted to the Allen B. Du Mont Laboratories, Inc., of New York, last week by the Federal Communications Commission. Du Mont has been televising experimentally one or two evenings weekly. During the last three months its programs included a variety of defense and other short subjects and newsreels.

For the past year the Du Mont Laboratories have been busy manufacturing cathode ray tubes for military use. Since December 7th, this activity has been accelerated and Du Mont is enlarging factory space to handle U. S. Navy work. The company is an affiliate of Paramount, which owns approximately 50 per cent of the stock. When Du Mont begins televising commercially it will be compelled to broadcast at least 15 hours weekly. This will give New York City a third station with regular telecast programs. Du Mont still reports equipment shortage and it is likely that the 90-day construction period will be extended. No rate cards or commercial promotion for sponsors have been prepared, as yet. A company spokesman explained that defense work required full attention.

MBS SUES NBC AND RCA; CBS AND NBC HIT FCC; NBC'S 'BLUE' GOES TO RCA

Alphabet Tangle Follows Filing of Mutual System's Anti-Trust Suit Against Columbia and National Broadcasting

Frontal attacks against the radio industry from three directions this week placed the two largest networks on the defensive and gave promise that 1942 would be one of the most troubled and litigation ridden years in the history of broadcasting.

At Chicago the Mutual Broadcasting System on Saturday sued the National Broadcasting Company for $10,275,000 triple damages, charging restraint of trade. The complaint followed by just ten days a civil anti-trust action against NBC at Chicago by the Department of Justice.

NBC and CBS at New York went into court Monday at New York with their own suits to test the power of the Federal Communications Commission. Charging that the FCC usurped power they sought to have pending network regulations declared voided.

The National Broadcasting Company, on Saturday, following the orders it sought to reverse, and "for business reasons," divorced operations of the Red and Blue networks. A new Blue Network Company, also a wholly owned subsidiary of the Radio Corporation of America was formed. It was reported, however, that RCA would sell the Blue if buyer and price could be found.

Chicago Stations File

The Mutual Broadcasting System and six affiliate stations led by WGN, Chicago, filed suit in the U. S. District Court, Chicago, on January 10th against the Radio Corporation of America and its subsidiary, the National Broadcasting Company, for $10,275,000 in damages. It charged conspiracy to violate the Sherman Anti-Trust act.

The suit largely parallels the action filed by the Department of Justice on December 31st in Chicago against RCA, NBC and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The Mutual network and its affiliates contend that they have been damaged to the extent of $3,425,000 through the loss of business because of an alleged restriction of Mutual competition in key cities. They seek triple damages, litigation costs and injunctive relief.

In the case of WGN the actual amount of damage is set at $850,000; WOR of New York City, claims $1,000,000; WOL, Washington, D. C., $275,000; WGRC, New Albany, Ind., $75,000; KWE, St. Louis, Mo., $165,000; and WHBF, Rock Island, Ill., $60,000.

The complaint charges RCA, NBC, its officers and agents with "an unlawful combination and conspiracy among themselves and with third persons, to injure plaintiffs by hindering and restricting Mutual freely and fairly to compete in the transmission in interstate commerce of nationwide network programs."

The suit charges that affiliate contracts of NBC deny Mutual representation in cities where there are less than four full time stations. It charges that in many cities NBC and CBS between them control all major stations.

TRADE COMMISSION READS AIR SCRIPTS

The commercial advertising in 24,535 out of 871,909 radio broadcast continuities required detailed attention from the Federal Trade Commission during the fiscal year which ended last June 30th. The annual report of the Commission revealed that this number of scripts received more than a cursory check of advertising claims. An unspecified number of complaints against misrepresentation resulted.

During the year the Commission received 857,890 continuities, amounting to 1,737,181 typewritten pages. The scripts were divided among 1,197,199 pages of individual station script, 529,820 script and 10,162 pages of recorded script. All stations must submit copies of commercial copy to the FTC.

Option time clauses in contracts, it was said, prevent Mutual from obtaining station time even though it is not used by NBC. Five-year pacts between NBC and affiliates and the joint operation of Red and Blue networks injured Mutual's growth, it asserts.

Mutual specifies that because of its inability to supply key stations in Des Moines, Houston, Tulsa, Omaha, Birmingham, Jacksonville, Charlotte and Miami to national advertisers on a regular basis, it has lost substantial amounts of business to the NBC Blue network. It is asserted that affiliated stations thus suffer loss of revenue.

Commenting on the suit, which he characterized as a harassing and unjustified action, Niles Trammell, president of NBC, said that his company would fight it "to expose the motives behind the campaign to break down the networks of the National Broadcasting company."

Mr. Trammell's Statement

Mr. Trammell said:

"It should now be revealed that about two years ago the dominant interests in Mutual, R. H. Macy & Co., and the Chicago Tribune, sought to purchase parts of the Blue Network from us, which would have destroyed the Blue as a coast-to-coast network." These interests sought to diminish, rather than to increase, network competition, he charged.

"We refused to dismember the Blue network. Mutual began campaigns in Washington and elsewhere, urging the adoption by the Federal Communications Commission of new network regulations which would enable Mutual to achieve the end it sought.

"Mutual also induced breaches of contract between our Blue Network and affiliated stations, a fact which we will prove in these court proceedings."

NBC said Mutual carries on no research and has undertaken no substantial financial risks in pioneering the development of nationwide broadcasting.

"The operations and public service rendered by NBC are a matter of public record. We are utilizing every resource at our command in the vital war effort of the nation."

Mr. Trammell said that, although Mutual claimed to be the little fellow of the network family, its powerful and wealthy stockholders represented assets, business and profits far in excess of those of NBC and RCA.

E. M. Antrim, executive secretary and treasurer of the MBS, and an officer of WGN, replied:

"Evidently Mr. Trammell is attempting to have his case tried in the newspapers." The case will come before United States Judge John Barnes.

New York Case Opens

NBC and CBS at New York on Monday launched their joint attempt to prove before a special three judge Federal statutory court at New York that Federal Communications Commission orders revising business relations between networks and broadcasting stations are illegal.

Opening the attack on FCC jurisdiction, John T. Cahill, counsel for NBC asserted that the commission had built up a fictional authority to usurp Congressional and court powers and bolster its sweeping reorganization of the broadcasting industry. Charles Evans Hughes, Jr., attorney for Columbia, charged that FCC orders affecting contracts exceeded the scope granted the commission by the 1934 communications act. Mr. Cahill is a former U. S. Attorney at New York.

The attorneys argued that enforcement of the FCC orders would be unconstitutional, and would jeopardize the future of broadcasting through a misuse of licensing power.

The Mutual Broadcasting System which intervened in support of the FCC testified that the proposed regulations would aid, not ruin the network system, by providing free competition. Fred Weber, president of Mutual, asserted that by ending option time contracts the regulations would permit networks to get business on equal footing and would not impair national radio advertising.

Telford Taylor, FCC chief counsel on Tuesday, in his initial argument stressed the general powers given the FCC and cited specific Congressional authorization for it to refuse licenses to those found to be violating anti-trust laws. He maintained that public interest requires protection against monopoly and declared that the communications acts of 1927 and 1934 gave clear power to the FCC to regulate all phases of broadcasting. He cited parallels in the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

To comply with the Federal Communications Commission regulations the Radio Corporation of America announced Friday through David Sarnoff, president, that the blue network of its subsidiary National Broadcasting Company had been incorporated as a new wholly owned RCA subsidiary, the Blue Network Company, Inc.

With FCC permission the Blue Network will own and manage stations WJZ, New York, KGO, San Francisco and WENR in Chicago. Mark Woods, resigned as treasurer of NBC to become president of the new Blue Network Company. Program service will continue to approximately 100 stations.

Niles Trammell, president of NBC, is a member of the Blue Network board of directors and was elected chairman of the executive committee.

Arrangements are being made to completely segregate Blue Network and NBC operations and it is reported that RCA is continuing discussions with the Wall street firm of Dillon, Read and Company with a view to outright sale of the network.

RADIO CALLS ON HOLLYWOOD FILM TALENT TO AID IN ITS WAR EFFORTS

Stars Revise Programs to Give Time for Defense Bonds, Red Cross and Other Drives; Networks Ready for War Call

Five weeks of America's war against the Axis powers has effected a coordination of activities, a broadening of service facilities unprecedented in the nation's radio broadcasting industry. The war barometer during that critical period began pointing to definite changes, revisions and expected trends in the method of program service to the American people.

From Hollywood, reports of the first five weeks' of war from West Coast broadcasting centers reveal that film-radio talent is fully mobilized and busily engaged in doing the utmost to aid the all-out war effort, this in addition to the stars' contributions in time and talent to the Red Cross, defense stamps and bonds, USO, and other war-and-defense drives.

Programs Stress War

Outside of the physical changes found necessary in Hollywood to increase safety factors, no effect upon the large reservoir of talent for stage and screen and radio has been noted. A possible exception is the increase in demands on their services to appear on programs closely allied with national defense, such as the Navy Relief Fund, etc.

Responding eagerly, virtually every name player in show business resident in Hollywood has added to his program, if already established, a section in which national defense items have their place, and/or is scheduled, or has appeared on, special programs whose purpose is the advancement of sale of defense bonds and stamps, the Red Cross and other matters of national import.

Staging of rehearsals in daylight hours, instead of at night, to facilitate the troupe's return home before dark is the only major change affecting the status of talent.

Should an air raid alarm cause local stations to go off the air, the four networks, Mutual, CBS, NBC and the new BNC, will continue to "pipe" the transcontinental programs cast without interruption, and without making the eastern listeners aware of the local stations' blackout. This was illustrated during the first Los Angeles blackout Dec. 8 on the Orson Welles' program. Welles and Joseph Cotten engaged in a bit of dialogue in which Cotten asked Welles if the program was still on the air. Welles replied that he didn't know but to continue anyway. Two minutes later, KNX, CBS Hollywood outlet, went off the air, the stations in the east continuing to carry the program.

The Federal Communications Commission has stationed at the headquarters of the Fourth Interceptor Command an official whose duty it is to transmit, by direct wire, orders of the Army command to the local stations to go off the air should a blackout be ordered.

The direct wire is held open 24 hours a day, stations KNX, KFI, KHJ and KGFI remaining on the air all night.

By direct appearances and transcriptions, name talent has appealed by the scores to the public in the interests of various campaigns. Local radio stations have devoted much of their time to spot news broadcasts, public service and information programs, and morale-

BANNED RADIO "HAMS" HOPEFUL

At the request of the Defense Communications Board, the Federal Communications Commission last week banned 2,000 amateur radio operators from the air. On December 1st, about 65,000 operators were ordered off the air, but the defense board gave special authorization to approximately 2,000 to resume.

Kenneth B. Warner, secretary of the American Amateur Radio Relay League, in West Hartford, Conn. at WIAW, the league's key station, reported he was hopeful that arrangements for part-time operation by amateurs could be worked out with the FCC and the defense board this week. "It seems that some provision should be made for amateur stations vital to civilian defense work," he said, and added that the amateur should be permitted to "help out his community when it's in a jam, as he always has, whether it was a flood, hurricane or any other emergency."

building shows. One station, KNX, for example, carries 115 news programs weekly, some of them sponsored, many unsponsored.

One direct effect of the war upon talent was the relaxation of the rules about jokes and derision of the Axis.

A notable instance was Jack Benny's program of Jan. 4, when the comedian said, after loud barking of a dog was heard: "Shut up, Adolf, we're on the air."

When a very much weaker bark was heard a few seconds later, Benny ordered: "You, too, Mussie."

Herbert Marshall, Bert Wheeler, Hank Ladd and the Merry Macs of the Old Gold program, have two broadcasts on Monday—during daylight hours in Hollywood for the east, and at 8:00 P.M. (PST) for the Pacific Coast. Since the war the cast stays within walking distance of the NBC studio during the four hours between shows to avoid being stranded by an "alert" or "alarm."

After four years of broadcasting Wednesdays on CBS from Hollywood, Rinso's "Big Town" program starring Edward G. Robinson, switches on Jan. 22nd to Thursdays on the same network, with time 9:30 to 10 P.M. EST, thus eliminating rebroadcasts.

News commentators have dropped all restrictions, except those of good taste, in describing the Axis.

In order to determine NBC policy on matters of the national emergency, whether regarding a comedian's script or public service programs, the network's Hollywood office has set up a committee, headed by Lew Frost, assistant to Vice President Sidney Strotz, to make final decisions.

Sirens and gun shots have been eliminated from network programs in order that the wrong impressions might not be given listeners prone to quick hysterics. All tours of visitors to the three network offices and studios in Hollywood have been discontinued since the start of the war. Private operators from Pinkertons, Nick Harris and other detective agencies are guarding all vital spots of the studios and their respective transmitters. Placing of buckets of sand and other preparations have been made in the event of incendiary bomb-dropping by the Japs et al. Auxiliary power units were installed when the three broadcasting centers were built and enlarged several years ago. Army, Navy and Marine Corps men in uniform are admitted to studio broadcasts without tickets, preference being given them over civilian ticket holders. The only program cancellation due to the war was one requiring spot telephoning from listeners on KNX. The program was dropped when Army officials and the telephone company asked its discontinuance because of the heavy traffic on the phone lines.

Tours of transcontinental show troupes to Army and Navy encampments are under way. Kay Kyser, Jack Benny and others have visited camps in Southern California, and the Edgar Bergen-Charlie McCarthy program will be broadcast on Jan. 18 from Moffett Field where Charlie will face a mock court martial for going A. W. O. L. and other things.

For civilian defense workers, such as aviation plant laborers, KNX has inaugurated a 15-minute "swing shift news" period at 1 A.M.

All local stations, from networks down to the smallest of the independents, have donated much of their time to local civilian defense officials, issuing bulletins ranging from appeals for air raid wardens to news of federal and local civil service examinations for defense workers.

Plans for evacuation of radio staffs, talent and equipment to the hinterlands in case of bombings and other assaults on the coastal plains, probably have been discussed but naturally, station officials would not talk about them.

Networks Ready for Emergency Call

All four major networks, the National Broadcasting Company, the Blue Network, Inc., formerly a division of NBC, Columbia Broadcasting System and Mutual Broadcasting System, since December 7th, have marshalled their facilities, expanded their services and are now standing by at a moment's signal from the Federal Communications Commission and the President's appointed Defense Communications Board, for further participation in the fight ahead.

From the first air-wave news of Japan's attack on Pearl harbor, the industry quickly adjusted to the U. S. Government's imposed censorship with regard to broadcasting at home and abroad of war dispatches and communiques. Radio is hopeful, however, that Byron Price, former executive news editor of the Associated Press and President Roosevelt's appointee as director of censorship, will not make any drastic demands unless sudden new developments warrant them.

A survey this week of the leading networks and the New York radio departments of the ten largest advertising agencies which handle the bulk of America's ether entertainment fare, revealed a number of significant factors where broadcasting is concerned.

Comedy and music-variety shows will be on the increase as "sure-fire" weapons in the fight to maintain a high military and civilian morale, it is expected. Programs sponsored by the automobile industry and other commodities greatly affected by the war probably will take advantage of the "war clause" in their contracts, with Helen Hayes' "Theatre of the Air" and Major Bowes' "Amateur Hour" first to fall victims. Miss Hayes' show, sponsored by Lipton's Tea on CBS, will be terminated as of February 1st because of the uncertainty of tea shipments from Lipton plantations in the Far East. Major Bowes' hour has been cut in half because Chrysler Motors, the sponsor, has been seriously affected by curtailed auto production and the hour show represents a heavy cash outlay.

CANCELLATIONS CUT BIG AIR SHOWS

Package products—food, drugs, soap and tobacco—are believed likely to dominate radio time-buying within the next six months because these products are as yet unaffected by the crisis. According to estimates, package products during normal peacetime, constitute from 50 to 60 per cent of radio revenue, with the bulk of the top-ranking popular shows—Bob Hope, Jack Benny, Edgar Bergen-Charlie McCarthy, Bing Crosby, et al., sponsored by firms in these categories.

Expenditures Up 10.4%

In 1940, radio expenditures by package product companies was $34,392,836. In 1941, the figure was $37,980,537, showing an increase of 10.4 per cent.

More programs geared to the entertainment needs of the armed forces at home and abroad is the future keynote. The American Tobacco Company, through its Lucky Strike—"Hit Parade," has already taken the lead in this direction by devoting one-half of its weekly Saturday night show to playing the favorite songs of servicemen and presenting their favorite radio singers. "Vox Pop," sponsored by Bromo Seltzer, on CBS, Monday nights, is going into Army and Navy training grounds, bringing servicemen to the microphone for personal interviews and presenting gifts offered by the sponsor to the interviewees in the form of portable typewriters, portable radios and other items useful to boys away from the comforts of home.

Another wartime trend in radio is the probable increase of "audience participation" programs, bringing the folks at home closer to each other and to the boys in Army camps and Naval and Marine bases. This type of service received tremendous impetus in England during the last two years and it is likely that the U. S. eventually will take a leaf from the British Broadcasting Company's book of radio during-war.

Revise "Soap Operas"

One of the greatest upheavals predicted for one phase of radio entertainment is that of the day-time serial, or "soap opera" which dominates the morning and early afternoon sponsored hours on the air. These shows, principally dramatic sketches and stories which have large appeal to women audiences and for the most part are sponsored by the package product companies, will have to revise their program material. The change, it is indicated, probably will be gradual, to take into account the fact that nearly every home in America will be affected by the war and therefore the "soap opera" plots must in some way reflect war and defense activities.

Douglas Coulter, acting program director for CBS, pointed out on Monday, that the war had "very definitely" affected program material and "will continue to do so." All air shows, he said, will naturally cooperate with the Government in helping to build military and civilian morale and in giving the public "the most

FAME'S RADIO POLL ON EIGHT AIR SHOWS

Presentations of scrolls to winners of the Motion Picture Daily - Fame newspaper radio editors' poll establishing the year's top aircasters have been made so far on eight different national radio programs, on both CBS and NBC, giving extra attention to the poll itself and to those who won in various classes. Recipients of awards appeared on the following air shows:

enlightening and truthful news." Comedy on the air, declared Mr. Coulter, should increase, and all "creative thinking in radio will be tied up with the war indefinitely."

Arthur Pryor, Jr., radio director of Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn, advertising agency, asserted, "I believe it is still too early to predict what changes in program material there will be. The industry, meanwhile, is doing everything in its power to bolster the war effort and to publicize the Red Cross and defense stamps and bond drives. We are watching trends, carefully, but how we will vary the entertainment of our shows is not yet determined."

Spokesmen for J. M. Mathes, J. Walter Thompson, Young & Rubicam, Lord & Thomas, Benton & Bowles, N. W. Ayer & Sons, Ruthrauff & Ryan, Arthur Kudner and other agencies all concurred that it was still "too early to predict" the definite changes in form or context their shows will take in the near future. They agreed, however, that in some way or another, the war has been incorporated into scripts during the last five weeks. Agency and network executives also said that sponsors had willingly agreed to permit news flashes to be cut into programs whenever necessary. In some instances, the sales departments of networks sent letters to the sponsors and advertising account executives handling individual shows requesting cooperation in this direction, as a protection against possible law suits.

Short Wave Stations Expand Activities

There are six private companies making America's war effort known and heard overseas via short wave transmitters: NBC, CBS, Westinghouse, General Electric, Crosley Corporation and a non-commercial organization, the World Wide Broadcasting Foundation. Between them, they flood the ether with 2,500 different programs a week.

In addition, CBS maintains a "listening post" of foreign broadcasts with emphasis on Axis activities and propaganda, at Roosevelt, L. I. NBC has two such posts, one in Bellmore, L. I., and the other in North Hollywood, Calif., where the latter post covers the Pacific area and is keeping close watch on broadcasts from Tokyo, Chungking, Australia, Manila and the Dutch East Indies.

Another important listening post is that maintained for the past 18 months by Princeton University through its School of Public and International Affairs. This center has amassed records of some 10,000,000 words of broadcasting propaganda and also has developed a technique for analysis of such programs. It was able to help the FCC set up the Foreign Broadcasting Monitoring Service in March, 1941.

One of the most powerfully equipped international broadcasting short-wave stations in America is that of WRUL, operated by the World Wide Broadcasting Foundation in Boston. The station operates on a 100-kilowatt and a 50-kilowatt transmitters equipped with directional antennas that enable it to aim a power beam at any point on the globe. Recently, it obtained a license to set up a third transmitter.

Grants Support World Wide

World Wide was launched in 1935 by Walter Lemmon who, after the first World War, was appointed special radio officer to Woodrow Wilson at the Paris Peace Conference. The company is a non-profit organization, functioning on substantial grants from the Carnegie, Rockefeller and Sloan Foundations and from donations by Thomas J. Watson of International Business Machines.

WRUL is educational in its function and sends programs eastward eight hours daily in 15 different languages. One of its special features has been the Friendship Bridge to England over which refugee children in the U.S. have been sending messages to their parents at home. It is understood that WRUL may become an important adjunct of the Government's air-propaganda media during the war.

These six companies, with 13 powerful short-wave transmitters for international broadcasts have a world listening audience of 300,000,000, estimated at the beginning of 1942. According to Charles J. Rollo, author of "Radio Goes to War," and analyst of the Princeton Listening Center, there are more than 100,000,000 radio sets in existence: 40,000 in Europe, 55,000,000 in the U. S.; 4,000,000 in Latin America; 1,000,000 in Africa and the Near East and 6,000,000 in the Antipodes.

WAR'S DRAFTING OF MANPOWER STARTS TO PINCH THE STUDIOS

Major Studios Drafting Manpower from the Independent Producers; 353 Employees Are Called from Ten Companies

With the United States preparing to draft all available manpower to serve in the various branches of the Government's armed and technical forces—many of whom will be taken from the motion picture industry—Hollywood studios have already felt the loss of those engaged in the war effort and are making preparations to replace those now on reserve who expect to be called shortly.

Cameramen, specialists and technicians answering the call to arms or volunteering their services to the various units are reported causing independent producers some worry. The independents are unable to hold their crews together, with major studios draining the workers off as their own employees depart.

The situation has become serious but not acute, because there are still technicians available to replace those taken.

John Ford Organizes Unit

John Ford, director and a commander in the Naval Reserve, has organized a Naval photographic unit. Serving with him are: Lieut. Frederick Spencer, executive officer; Ensign E. R. Kellogg, Ensign Marcus E. Armistead, Chief Petty Officer R. J. Pennick. This staff works with Captain Merian C. Cooper, United States Air Corps, also assigned to this particular office.

Under Mr. Ford's command on active duty are also: Camera Unit No. 1, Lieut. Joe August, commanding; A. T. Powell, Chief Petty Officer; G. J. Irvine, J. P. Mackenzie, E. M. Tronowsky, R. B. Yould. Camera Unit No. 2, Lieut. A. Siegler, commanding; L. L. Goldstein and W. J. Wheeler, Chief Petty Officers; W. H. White, B. H. Heath and R. L. Harris. Camera Unit No. 3, Lieut. H. Van Pelt, C. W. Inman, J. J. Stout, H. R. Martin.

In addition to these, two motion picture figures are holding high positions in the 11th Naval District's Procurement and Personnel Office. Ranking liaison officer for the Navy is Lieut. Commander A. J. Bolton, U. S. N., formerly with 20th Century-Fox, and his executive officer, Lieut. Commander Eugene Zukor, U. S. N. R., formerly with Paramount.

The Army general headquarters photographic unit of the Signal Corps Reserve, organized under the Research Council and with Col. Nathan Levinson, Warner chief sound engineer, as commanding officer, was told to stand by for immediate call. Some members were called for immediate duty, such as Sy Bartlett, film writer. This unit includes such notables as Major Sam Briskin, Columbia executive; Captain Gordon Mitchell, manager of the Research Council; Major John Aalberg, chief sound engineer for RKO; Lieut. Jack Warner, Jr., son of the Warner production chief; Lieut. Jules Buck, cameraman, and others.

Meanwhile, ten of Hollywood's film studios have compiled lists now serving in the various branches of the Government's services.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

When Will H. Hays spoke to some 13,000 Hosiers, Thursday, in the great hall of Cadel Tabernacle, in Indianapolis, in behalf of the sale of United States Defense Bonds, he was there at the specific request of the U. S. Treasury Department because it was Mr. Hays who led his native Indiana to No. 1 position in per capita statewide Liberty Bond sale in World War I, twenty-five years ago, and so both Mr. Hays and Indiana were honored to open the state-by-state campaign, which is to be staged by the Government. Mr. Hays' Indiana National Defense Committee of that first war, besides running millions ahead of any other state in the Union on a per capita bond sale, also was generally considered to have been a real working model of operation. So much so that, at the "suggestion" of the Federal Government, many a state Governor sent their representatives to Indianapolis to copy the Hays setup.

Before Mr. Hays spoke, Thursday, he and Carole Lombard, representing Hollywood, were among honored guests at a flag raising ceremony at the Indiana State Capitol. The flag that was raised was the same banner that waved over Congress in Washington on that eventful day of December 8th when the statesmen of this nation were declaring war on the Japs.

One for the book is the yarn being told about an incident which occurred at Jack Yeo's Plaza Theatre, in Burlington, Wisconsin, when, during a recent heavy snowstorm, the lights went out, making it impossible to operate the projection machine. After "rain checks" had been given to patrons, and all had left the house, it was discovered that the power shutdown was due only to a burned-out fuse, a minor matter. But the topper is the fact that the town's chief electrical inspector is the projectionist at the theatre!

Twentieth Century-Fox announces a new motion picture entitled "Hearses Don't Hurry."

An enterprising WOR, New York radio station, statistician thinks it is time some one compiled a list of the various objects that have been sought—and obtained—by contestants on WOR's crazy treasure hunting "Go Get It" program. He did some research and came up—glassy eyed—with a list which ranges from the A of Autographed slipper of actress to the Z of Zither. Members of the program audience are enlisted to go out and bring back before the end of the air show a certain designated object. So far they have brought back a dressmaker's dummy, 50 pounds of ice, a zither, a peanut vendor, umpire's chest protector, sailor with a tattooed chest, policeman's garter, an eight ball, a barber, bed spring and mattress, chorus girl in costume, red flannel underwear, an actress, white mice, two prize fighters, honeymooning couple, see-saw, four bridge players, table tennis outfit. . . .

Also: A trick dog, a Scotsman in kilts, fireman's helmet and boots, saddle reins and bit, pitchman and his equipment, dance hall hostess, pin ball machine, an old-fashioned corset, person speaking Esperanto, a phrenologist, seven lawyers (six Cohens and one Kelly), a witch's costume and broom, waitress and pumpkin pie, tub of water and two pounds of apples, stranger from a railroad station, red cap and baggage.

Plus: One fortune teller, a lifeguard, five different kinds of clocks, an electric vibrator belt, a singing canary, a father of a one-day-old child, persons speaking in six different regional dialects, double jointed person, man 6 foot 4, woman 4 foot 6, a double talker, a goat, a whole audience from a soap box auction, male whistling quartet.

All this and, this too: tattoo artist and clients, busload sightseeing passengers and their guide, a live snake, a professional wrestler, live chicken, a masseuse, cowboy from rodeo, Hawaiian dancer, park bench and two spooners, hair dryer, strait jacket, cigar store Indian. Culture marches on!

Stone has a well organized home-defense unit going strong right now—his "evacuation regiment." It includes 110 station wagons and about 300 drivers and helpers. The regiment is part of the California State Guard. It has been drilling for months.

Most of the regiment is just Mr. Smith and Mrs. Jones who live in the San Fernando Valley where Mr. Stone lives, but the roster includes Robert Young, Buster Keaton and Richard Shiner, screen writer.

Stone drills them every Tuesday night: Foot drill, first aid, driving in the dark, repairing autos. He has obtained the loan of a Warner stage which has been turned into an armory with twenty-four-hour telephone service.

Quiz Exhibitors In Schine Suit

Pre-trial examination of Government witnesses in Cleveland will be conducted by counsel for the "Little Three" majors in that city next week, as preparation for the March 3rd anti-trust trial in Buffalo Federal Court by the Department of Justice against the Schine circuit, subsidiaries, and Columbia, United Artists and Universal.

The witnesses are to be quizzed on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

The Buffalo court has not ruled upon a motion by Willard McKay, Schine counsel, for deferment of trial.

Motions to dismiss the million-dollar anti-trust suit, recently filed by Thomas Murray in the Federal Court in Chicago and naming most of the film companies. The Balaban & Katz circuit, its subsidiaries, and several individuals have been filed.

Spitz & Adcock have filed motions on behalf of Publix-Great States Theatres, Inc.; Balaban & Katz Corporation, Midcity Theatres, Inc., Paramount Pictures, Inc., Morris G. Leonard (as an individual) and the Milo Theatre Corporation, reasoning that the complaint fails to state a cause for action under the anti-trust laws.

The Hillside Amusement Company, operator of the Mayfair, Hillside, Newark, N. J., last week won from Federal Judge John Bright the right to examine five major defendants before trial. The Hillside company is suing under the anti-trust laws for triple damages of $900,000.

At the meetings, expanded production and distribution plans formulated following the consummation last week of the deal in which Pathe purchased a controlling interest in PRC will be revealed and coordinated.

"Snow White" for Latin America

Arrangements have been made for the exhibition of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" in South America for the second time. Following the requests of many filmgoers Walt Disney has sent a new print of the picture to Lima, Peru, and it will go into general release on January 15th at the Excelsior theatre in that city.

Republic Buys Ohio Franchise

Republic Pictures has purchased the franchise agreement held by Nat L. Lefton of Cleveland, for the distribution of Republic product in the territories covered by Cleveland and Cincinnati, James R. Grainger, Republic president, announced last week.

Mr. Lefton came to New York to conclude the deal, and will take a vacation.

Equity Vote on Red Ban Delayed

The issue of Communism which has plagued Actors' Equity Association for 18 months was finally put to a test vote in New York, last Friday, at an Equity meeting. Members gathered to take action on a proposed constitutional amendment which would prevent Communists, Nazis and Fascists and their sympathizers from holding office or being employed by Equity.

Of the 412 members present, not all of them had the privilege of voting, and only 237 ballots were cast. The results were: 122 in favor of adoption; 101 against and 14 were void for one reason or another. Failing to get a two-thirds majority required for amendment adoption, and due to the fact that amendments must be voted on by 750 members, Equity's Council considered recommending a membership referendum.

According to the by-laws of the association, the Council has the prerogative of accepting or rejecting the results because less than 750 members in good standing were present at last Friday's meeting. If it should accept the results the amendment would be shelved despite the majority vote in favor of the proposal.

At a meeting of Equity's Council on Tuesday, however, no action was taken concerning failure of the membership to put the amendment through last Friday, nor was a resolution presented calling for a referendum.

RKO Continues Theatre Shifts

RKO Theatres, under the general management of Charles W. Koerner, continued its recently inaugurated policy this week of streamlining its managerial setup for more effective operation of the theatres. Harry Lyons, manager of the RKO Alden, Jamaica, has been made city manager of Yonkers in charge of Proctor's, the Park Hill, and Strand theatres, and Sigrid Wexo, manager of the Strand, Far Rockaway, has been named district manager for the Rockaways, it was announced at a luncheon tendered in New York Monday by Mr. Koerner.

At the gathering Mr. Koerner introduced the newly appointed division managers, John C. Hearn and Michael Edelstein, who assume the theatres formerly supervised by Sol Schwartz. Mr. Schwartz has been placed in charge of the newly created out-of-town division.

Other promotions and changes in the RKO Theatre set-up are as follows: John Dewberry, assistant at RKO's 86th Street, Manhattan, will manage the Park Hill in Yonkers; Al Pluchos, assistant at Proctor's, Mount Vernon, will become acting manager of this theatre, pending the return of Baker Shelton, who has been recalled to military service; Thomas Johnston, assistant at the Strand, Yonkers, will be transferred to Proctor's, Mount Vernon, as acting assistant manager; John Berger, manager of Park Hill, Yonkers, will become manager of the Strand in this same city; Lee Koken, manager of Keith's Richmond Hill, replaces Harry Lyons at the Alden, Jamaica; Fred Smith transfers from the Orpheum, Brooklyn, to Keith's Richmond Hill; and Maxwell Levine, manager of the Colonial becomes manager of the Orpheum, Brooklyn. Raymond Malone will be in charge of exploitation for the new John C. Hearn division, and Vincent Liguori, will serve in the same capacity for Mr. Edelstein.

This meeting was the first of a series that Mr. Koerner is planning at which prominent industry heads will speak. The guest of honor was Gradwell Sears. He spoke briefly of his company's product.

ESTEEMED EDITOR:

This week's rebound of production activity from last week's low is, as they say in those market letters at $50 per annum, strictly technical.

The increase in shooting schedules is more compensatory than significant.

Inspection of the projects yields no evidence of a stampede toward that all-A policy which Production is forever pledging in response to Exhibition's clamour for abandonment of the double-bill. Just who's appeasing whom and who's paying, in this unending meeting-of-minds in principle without eventuation in practice, is among the matters a Dr. Leo C. Rosten might use for copy some time.

Neither is a stampede toward militarism indicated in the report of new undertakings.

Probably the most expensive enterprise launched during the week is Orson Welles' "Journey Into Fear," which will follow his still unfinished "The Magnificent Ambersons" on the RKO-Radio schedule. Attending to the simultaneous production of two motion pictures, a radio program and a sequence of guest performances is considered no trick at all for the quadruple-threat man of the allied arts.

The other picture of note on the list of new ventures is "Secret Agent of Japan," a Sol Wurtzel assignment for Twentieth Century-Fox. It is to present George Sanders, who has had a monopoly on the Nazi villainizings, in some more conniving in the interests of the emperor whom a local radio commentator has dubbed Hiro Hitler.

Film to Test Public

The film is in the nature of a trial balloon, lightly ballasted as to budget, which will be sent up for the purpose of determining whether the fever of interest in the enemy which greeted "Beast of Berlin" in that other war has again gripped the population. Doubtless some more trial balloons will be sent up before the recordings of this one are finalized, and on the evidence of these experimentings the producers will decide what manner of films we're to have between now and the next peace.

Mr. Welles signalized the start of "Journey Into Fear" by inviting the press at large to a soiree conducted informally and at length upon a vast stage of RKO's Culver City plant. Swingband, buffet and bar beguiled the guests until the host arrived to entertain with banter and pose for pictures. Affability untinged with perceptible commercialism marked the occasion and most of the occasioners.

A good deal of talking occurred during the exercises, as is par for these events, and no one considered it inappropriate that most of the conversation pertained to "Citizen Kane," the Welles' candidate for Academy Awards, instead of to the picture announced as in celebration. Among those present and talkative on the subject were the Messrs. Albert A. Galston and J. M. Sutton, owners of the Hawaii theatre on Hollywood Boulevard where the picture was finishing its twelfth week and appeared set, said they, for many more to come. Doubtless some Academy votes for "Kane" will accrue, although the Town is veering rapidly to the opinion that the picture is past the point of requiring electioneering in behalf of Oscars. Speculation on that score has narrowed down to the question of how many it will win.

That matter of where to preview the pictures for the press was up again for consideration of the Studio Publicity Directors Committee, at its weekly meeting, and is to come up yet again.

Reckonings and cogitations which have been following a pattern spelling status quo were deflected this time to a document placing before the confreres a new and inflexible factor thrust into the problem by the Office of Production Management.

It was pointed out to the gentlemen that a journalist attending the week's remotely placed previews would have driven his irreplaceable automobile some 150 miles on its irreplaceable tires for no reason which could not be annulled by bringing the previews into Town.

That morning's newspapers had featured an announcement by the local sheriff warning citizens against parking cars at night on streets or parking lots because tires being stolen in mounting numbers cannot be replaced by insurance companies, owners or otherwise.

The membership of the SPDC kicked that around a while, failed to boot it between the goal posts and called for a time-out.

Hope was expressed that the subcommittee assigned to study of the OPM's riddle would report back with a solution at the next meeting.

If it does, your correspondent will telegraph it to you for transmission to the exhibitors of the nation for transmission to their customers and a great work in the national as well as industry interest will have been wrought.

Academy Question Quiet

That burning to-be-or-not-to-be question of the Academy banquet has subsided to a smoulder. Even those nightclub magnates who were campaigning in their house organs for reinstatement of the ceremony for business reasons have desisted, mayhap with leave to reinstate.

The community appears to be drawing gradually closer to realization that it was never the banqueting but always the voting that gave the Academy's Oscars their news value and the art-industry the benefits thereof.

Gabe Yorke's suggestion via Walter Winchell's column that the affair be staged informally in the Shrine Auditorium, with 10,000 paying guests rolling up a nice gate for charity, collided with the Army's fixed limitation of gatherings to 5,000 and a foundation in utility.

INDEPENDENT CHARGES LOEW-MGM WITH EVADING ARBITRATION RULING

Delaware Exhibitor Files New Arbitration Complaint Asking Enforcement of a Decision; Arbitration's Ruling Reversed

Charges that a consenting distributor—Loew-Metro—had failed to comply with the provisions of a previous arbitration award were made the subject of a new arbitration for the first time this week.

The Earle theatre, New Castle, Delaware, operated by John and Grace Koczak, on Monday filed its second complaint, a combined some run and clearance action, against Loew's, Inc. They assert in their complaint, Philadelphia's 16th action, that MGM, contrary to the award in a previous arbitration action, has offered a run only on "terms and conditions calculated to defeat the purpose of Section V of the consent decree."

The Earle asks that the arbitrator "order the distributor to grant the exhibitor the same run that the exhibitor receives from other distributing companies." The complainants hold that the runs offered by Metro subsequent to a some run award in favor of the Earle last October served to nullify the power of the decree.

The second part of the action, based on Section VIII asks that the present clearance over the Earle on MGM pictures be declared unreasonable and that Loew's be ordered to grant the same clearance afforded by the other consenting distributors. It demands that MGM be ordered to grant, as do other distributors, ten days after Wilmington first runs.

The Earle on July 5, 1941, in Philadelphia's second case, won an award ordering Loew's, Inc., to grant some run. The complaint had been filed by the theatre, formerly owned and operated by Loew's, by David Silver. In the interval between the hearing and the award the Koczaks purchased the house. MGM appealed the original decision written by Ruppert C. Schaeffer, on the ground that it interfered with the operation of its affiliated Wilmington theatre, the Aldine, contrary to Section 17 of the decree. The Appeal Board on October 10th upheld the arbitrator.

Observers at New York said the reopened case would provide an important test of the powers of the consent decree and the extent to which consenting distributors can be compelled to abide by arbitration awards. The reopened Delaware case came less than a week after the Appeal Board had delivered its second decision in favor of an exhibitor in a some run case.

Decision Reversed

As reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week the Appeal Board on January 7th ordered Loew's to grant some run to Louis Sosna's Sosna theatre at Mexico, Mo. The decision reversed the finding of the arbitrator, Fred A. Armstrong.

"The purpose (of Section VI) obviously is to enable an exhibitor to obtain pictures for exhibition in his theatre, where previously he has been unable to obtain them, upon a run and upon terms and conditions, fixed by the dis-

APPEAL BOARD LISTS SOME-RUN FACTORS

The Appeal Board, in its ruling granting some-run to the Sosna theatre, Mexico, Mo., lists some of the factors to be considered in determining the purpose of Section VI and whether the terms offered by distributors are calculated to meet or defeat that purpose.

"All factors directly or indirectly bearing on the question should be considered," the Board said, "including: the run offered; the clearance imposed; the clearance between each prior run; the availability of the theatre offered the run; the type of pictures offered for license; whether they are current pictures, reissues, revivals or pictures having prior runs; the prices charged by the distributor for exhibition of its films; the reasonableness of any limitation imposed upon an exhibitor with respect to admission prices to be charged by it; whether prior run theatres are operated by the same interests and may then be considered together; the location, age, seating capacity, equipment and distinctive characteristics of theatres in the same competitive area."

tributor in good faith which are not unreasonable either for the distributor or the exhibitor," the Appeal Board wrote in the St. Louis decision.

In explaining its reversal of Mr. Armstrong the board held that he had excluded testimony which he should have received and developed on his own initiative, and failed to ask for sufficient proof of statements by both parties. Technical legal objections to some of the evidence were declared not applicable to arbitration proceedings.

The Board also observed that Section VI requires an arbitrator to order distributors to offer run when he finds that some run has been refused. In the Sosna case the board found that the arbitrator had made neither the finding nor the award to which the complainant was entitled by the evidence.

Citing its second opinion, in the complaint of Ruben Frels, Dallas, the board reiterated that the clause in Section VI requiring that the terms must be such as are not calculated to defeat the purpose of the section is to be broadly construed by arbitrators to insure good faith on the part of the distributors in the exercise of their right to designate runs.

The Appeal Board observed that the language of Section VI was not specific in prescribing the factors which should be considered in determining whether the terms and conditions offered by a distributor are calculated to defeat its purpose. The board indicated some of the factors which should be taken into consideration (see accompanying box).

The fourth Los Angeles case ended in a dismissal this week when H. Eugene Breitenbach, arbitrator, disallowed the clearance complaint of D. Lemucchi and James J. Banducci in behalf of their River and Arvin theatres in Oildale and Arvin, Calif. The arbitrator held that they had not proved that the clearance of Bakersfield theatres, in force for many years, was unreasonable.

All five distributors had been named in the original complaint but 20th Century-Fox was dismissed from the action by reason of its affiliation with the intervenor, Fox Bakersfield Theatre. Costs were divided equally.

Late booking of pictures and the failure to take advantage of present availability by both the River and Arvin theatres were cited as "a most decisive factor in the proceeding." Mr. Breitenbach said, "The record indicates that the River exhibited pictures from two to 278 days after they became available for exhibition, and no valid excuse or reason was given for this, although every opportunity was provided." The Arvin, he found, plays pictures two to 97 days late.

"Complainant may reach the result of earlier showing by bringing up his exhibition dates to the dates of availability," he said. "Before the long established clearances in this case are changed, Complainant should accelerate his late exhibitions, since many if not all of the Complainant's difficulties and grounds of complaint may be remedied by exhibiting films more promptly after their availability. The evidence on this issue is largely uncontradicted."

Mr. Breitenbach found that business had increased at both complainant theatres during 1941, and that net income for October in the case of the River was twice the July figure. He cited the extensive use of auto transportation as a factor in spreading the Bakersfield competitive zone over a wide area.

Indianapolis

The first Indianapolis complaint was withdrawn Friday when Charles G. Bowles, operator of the Grand, a new theatre at Elizabethtown, Ky., reported that the five consenting distributors had agreed to supply him product. The some run case, filed in November named a new Crescent Amusement Company theatre under construction at Elizabethtown. The Grand opened just before Christmas.

As the first Indianapolis case was withdrawn a second action, on clearance, was filed there by William Rosenthal, operator of the Irving theatre, Indianapolis. On January 7th he complained that Loew's, Inc., refused to give him "42nd day run pictures on a fair and reasonable basis." The Rivoli theatre, operated by the Eaton Theatre Corporation, is named as an interested party.

Buffalo

The clearance complaint filed at Buffalo two weeks ago by Basil Brothers for their Appolo theatre, case number 11, was withdrawn last week following an agreement with the Big Five. The complaint sought pictures immediately following the Shea Elmwood. The withdrawal did not reveal terms of the settlement.

Arbitrators in three other Buffalo actions were also named this week and hearing dates assigned. Richard H. Templeton, former U. S. Attorney, will hear Case No. 7, combined clearance and some run action by Ryan theatre, Ithaca. Hearings will begin January 24th.

Joseph M. Boehm, attorney, will arbitrate the complaint of the Astor theatre, Attica, with the first hearing set for January 22nd.

William E. Barrett, attorney, will arbitrate the action of the Playhouse, Clyde, N. Y., Case No. 10. Hearings begin January 23rd.

The Cuba theatre clearance complaint, Case No. 8, has been postponed until January 21st by agreement.

The Galewood and Southlawn theatres, Grand Rapids, the complainants, the five defending distributors, and the Butterfield circuit have agreed to a simultaneous hearing of both cases.

New York

Arnold J. Brock, lawyer, will arbitrate the 28th New York case filed by the Drake Amusement Company for the Central Theatre, Cedarhurst, L. I. George H. Engelhard, lawyer, will hear the clearance complaint of the New Paltz theatre, New Paltz, N. Y. Case No. 29.

Chicago

Hearings on the Alcyon theatre clearance complaint were postponed to January 14th by Drennan J. Slater, arbitrator.

San Francisco

An appeal from the decision of Donovan O. Peters, in San Francisco's fourth case, the clearance demand of Gerald Hardy's Piedmont theatre, Oakland, was filed on January 9th at San Francisco by 20th Century-Fox, and the intervening Fox West Coast circuit and Solano Theatre Corporation. Mr. Peters' award set a maximum clearance of one day between fourth and fifth Oakland run and excludes move overs from first run computations.

Variety Clubs Induct Officers, Honor Members

Chief Barker Stanley Kozanowski and other newly-elected officers of the Buffalo, N. Y., Variety Club were installed Saturday, January 10th, at ceremonies at the club's headquarters. The new chief barker is managing director of the Rivoli theatre in that city.

Other officers chosen by the new board of directors are: First assistant chief barker, Elmer F. Lux, Buffalo branch manager for RKO-Radio Pictures; second assistant, Andrew Gibson, secretary of Playhouse, Inc., which owns the Erlanger Theatre; secretary-treasurer, W. E. J. Martin, drama editor of The Courier-Express, named for a seventh consecutive year.

The Baltimore Variety Club gave a testimonial dinner Friday, January 8th, to E. A. Sherwood, who is being transferred from that city to Cleveland by Ascap.

The opening night of "Ice-Capades" Wednesday at Uline Arena in Washington, D. C., was sponsored by the local Variety Club as a benefit performance for the Navy Relief Society.

"Citizen Kane" Set for Philadelphia

After being stalemated for several months, Warner theatres and RKO have finally come to agreement and "Citizen Kane" will be shown in Philadelphia after all. It is believed that the renewed interest in the picture because of the action of the New York Film Critics in voting it the "best motion picture of 1941" made a break in the impasse possible. As a result, "Citizen Kane" is now definitely scheduled to open at the Aldine Theatre following the current run of "How Green Was My Valley," which is expected to continue throughout the January month.

After finally agreeing to percentage terms, RKO had withheld the picture when Warners booked it into the Stanton Theatre, first-run house primarily for action and thrill features.

HOLLYWOOD BOUGHT 495 BOOKS AND PLAYS IN 1941, WAR NO. 1 TOPIC

Producers Buy 65 Properties During November and December for 1942 Production; Universal Buys "Spoilers"

Hollywood bought 495 books, plays and originals in 1941 for feature production, and, by far, the No. 1 theme was war and defense, patriotism and Americanism. There was a drop of 49 purchases from the 544 of 1940.

Of the 495 acquisitions in 1941, 287 were original stories, 44 were past and current stage productions and 164 were books which also includes 31 published magazine stories, five radio scripts, two films, two musical compositions to be used as a basis for motion pictures, and five newspaper comic strips. MOTION PICTURE HERALD publishes a list of current story buys monthly.

Hollywood producers during the month of November, acquired the screen rights to 39 story properties. Of those acquired 20 were originals, three were stage plays, 14 were novels, one was a Cosmopolitan magazine story, "Over the Hill," and one was a musical composition entitled, "Cowboy Serenade," which Republic purchased as a basis for a picture to star Gene Autry.

Highlight of the November purchases was the acquisition of Gypsy Rose Lee's first literary effort, "The G-String Murders." The book was published by Simon and Schuster in October. The story is one of mystery and murder and a romance between a burlesque 'strip-teaser' and a comedian. Upon its publication Miss Katherine Brown, eastern story editor for David O. Selznick, took an option on the book, contingent on its approval for the screen by the Hays Office.

Beach Novel Bought

"The Spoilers," Rex Beach's novel of the Alaskan frontier days, will reach the screen for a third time with Marlene Dietrich, Randolph Scott and John Wayne, Universal announced. The picture will be made by the Frank Lloyd-Jack Skirball unit for distribution through Universal. Rights to the novel, together with players' services, were acquired in a package deal from Charles K. Feldman Group Productions. It is understood Universal will pay the stars $150,000 and that Mr. Feldman received $50,000 for the story and the screen treatment which was prepared by Tom Reed.

During December the screen rights to 26 stories were purchased, of which 15 were original stories, six were books and four were magazine stories.

For the sum of $50,000 Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer acquired the screen rights to I. A. R. Wylie's "Keeper of the Flame," from RKO who had purchased it some months previous. Spencer Tracy has been chosen to star in the picture and will be seen as a newspaper man who is assigned to write the biography of a deceased politician and uncovers the dead man's plot to establish a dictatorship in the United States.

Paramount acquired two properties during December for production this year.

'ROAD TO HAPPINESS' WARM, HUMAN FATHER AND SON TALE

John Boles Return Solidly Successful

"ROAD TO HAPPINESS"
(Monogram)

Scott Dunlap has scored a ten strike for Monogram by the reintroduction of John Boles to screen audiences. Absent some three years on concert tours, Boles gives an account of himself that makes us realize how much he has been missed. Both in his vocalizing—he sings three times in rich baritone voice—and in the warmth of his performance, he is completely the distinguished star whose feminine following will be quick to welcome his return, unchanged in appearance or personableness.

And nothing has been overlooked in celebrating Boles' reappearance on the Hollywood scene. "Road to Happiness" provides a sound father-and-son script by Phil Rosen, and sensitively directed by Matt Taylor.

Billy Lee does a grand piece of trouping as the son, and is a splendid running mate for Boles in their many intimate sequences together. The dialogue which Andrews' screenplay gives them rings true, and Rosen's direction avoids the maudlin. The original was an American magazine story by Matt Taylor, titled "First Performance."

Mona Barrie is properly selfish and to be disliked as the mother, her second husband pleasingly portrayed by Selmer Jackson. Roscoe Karns plays an actors' agent for a straight comedy standout. Lillian Elliott is excellent as a kindly boarding house landlady, Paul Porcasi is an excitable operatic maestro, and Brandon Hurst an old-school actor resident of the boarding house.

Massenet's "Vision Fugitive" is the selection Boles sings for a rousing climax, his other two numbers fine renditions of "America" and "Danny Boy." Edward Kay handled the expert musical direction, and Harry Neumann did the capable photography.

school. He insists upon taking the boy to live with him, and struggling to support him, takes the first available job he finds—acting an Indian character on a juvenile radio program. The kid is aware of his father's sacrifice and valiantly tries to pretend he would rather live with his mother and her wealthy second husband. But he's not quite able to put over his deeply moving scene, for his dad is not deceived.

Mississippi Weighs Sunday Showings

With Governor Paul B. Johnson officially on record as favoring the move to rid the state of the Sunday film ban, legislation legalizing Sunday showings of motion pictures is being pressed at the sessions of the state legislature in Jackson, Miss., which went into session on Monday, January 12th.

The decision as to whether to ask for outright repeal of the statute which now makes Sunday showings illegal, or to request adoption of a local option law was the main question as the legislators met. Exhibitors, however, are highly confident of passage of some bill which will permit the showings.

At the same time theatre men are attempting to secure the repeal of the state amusement tax law, identical with the Federal tax, making the total levy 20 per cent in Mississippi. The state tax is estimated to yield $500,000 in revenue annually.

New York Considers Measures

A state legislature geared to complete coordination for the war effort by Governor Herbert N. Lehman's annual message got down to work in Albany, N. Y., last week for its 1942 session.

Among the bills introduced was a proposal by Senator Phelps Phelps, New York Democrat, for a state lottery under governmental supervision, prizes to be in the form of defense bonds. Government, Senator Phelps said, it might better abandon its "hypocritical attitude" towards gambling of many diversified types and use moneys for the war effort derived from a state-operated lottery.

Assemblyman William T. Andrews, Harlem Democrat, sponsored a series of anti-discrimination bills, one of them intending to effectuate the present law against discrimination by public utilities to be broadened to include businesses affected with a public interest. Violations of the law would automatically become misdemeanors under the Andrews bill.

Senator Frederic R. Coudert, Jr., and Assemblyman Abbott Low Moffat, both New York Republicans, introduced a measure enabling New York city to continue imposition of its tax on services from July 1st, 1942, to June 30th, 1943, for unemployment and old age pension relief.

Ready for introduction in the near future is a bill intended to levy a sliding scale charge of taxation against chain stores and chain theatres.

Warners Hold Sales And Circuit Meetings

Harry Kalmine, head of Warners' theatre circuit, left New York last weekend for Cleveland to meet Nat Wolf, Cleveland zone manager, and other circuit executives in that area. Accompanying Mr. Kalmine were Leonard Schlesinger, Harry Goldberg and Rudy Weiss, theatre department executives.

Roy H. Haines, eastern and Canadian sales manager for Warners, and Arthur Sachson, Warner sales executive, held a sales meeting Saturday, January 10th, at the Ritz Carlton Hotel in Boston, with all branch heads in the eastern district. The two executives outlined plans for the handling of product during the current "Vita-graph's Drive of Champions."

Those attending included: Norman Ayers, eastern district manager; William Horan, Boston branch manager; Paul S. Krumenacker, Albany branch manager; Max Roth, Buffalo branch manager; and Roger Mahan, New Haven branch manager.

GROSSES IN BRITAIN INCREASE 25% BUT EXHIBITORS FACE NEW WORRIES

Receipts for 1941 Estimated at £60,000,000; New Year Will Bring Staff Replacement Problems and Quota Difficulties

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

With 1941 now finally out of the way, Britain exhibitors have turned to face the New Year with mixed emotions. The year may well be the most difficult on record.

Not the least considerable obstacle facing exhibitors in the forthcoming year is that of labor shortage, a shortage which will make itself felt in the studios no less than in the picture houses.

During the past year, it is estimated by C. E. A. Secretary W. R. Fuller, Britain picture houses grossed approximately £60,000,000, as opposed to the pre-war average of £45,000,000. The figure, a remarkable one in the wartime circumstance, indicates vividly the tremendous impetus which the entertainment-going habits of the people have experienced during the past year. If anything, it serves to intensify the exhibitors' headache for 1942 and to make him wonder just how he is going to carry on. It may well prove in 1942 that as the exhibitors' market increases and multiplies so may the difficulties of operating his picture houses.

Personnel Assured

The labor situation in regard to picture houses has certainly eased considerably from that of a few months ago: eased not only in relation today, but also in relation to tomorrow. It would seem more than likely that as far as first projectionists are concerned the exhibitor is not going to have a great deal of trouble, although reservation of projectionists is, with the passing of the new Manpower Act, gone by the board, all block reservations having been abolished. Nevertheless, the exhibitor, after conversations with the Ministry of Labor, has received assurances that first projectionists over 35 will not be removed from the cinemas and a virtual "gentlemen's agreement" that everything will be done to retain them even below that age.

At the present moment negotiations between the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, the Ministry of Labor and the Board of Trade are going on in which an agreement will be reached upon what is the essential staff for a picture house. If agreement is reached between the two sides of the bargain it can safely be assumed that the picture house exhibitor will get a square deal from the Government. It will, of course, deal with all his staff and not merely the man in the operating box.

By arrangement with the Ministry of Labor exhibitors wishing to retain their projectionists and technicians will be able to apply for deferment through 44 District Boards, who will work under advice of the Ministry itself.

Women, of course, are being taken from the cinemas to work in munition factories

BRITISH REORGANIZE ARMY FILM UNIT

The British War Office Directorate of Army Kinematography has outlined its plans for production, distribution and showing of films made under its aegis. The unit is responsible for the production of training and instructional films required by the Army, and the supply, servicing, distribution and maintenance of all equipment and films required by the Army for purely recreational purposes. In the former category some 100 films have already been made in 15 months and many more are in current production. Most of these have been made by the trade, supplemented by a small Army Unit which has now been reorganized and expanded in the Army Kinematograph Service Film Unit. The training films are not shown generally to the public.

The Army Film Unit is under the control of the Director of Public Relations and aims at obtaining film material dealing with the Army for distribution through trade channels and screening in picture theatres throughout the world. Many of these pictures have been, or will be, issued through the Ministry of Information.

Army Film Unit cameramen were, for instance, engaged and took material during the recent Norwegian Commando raids. Material is also issued to the newsreels. It is likewise available for purchase by commercial film producers whose films may have been approved by the Ministry of Information and the War Office.

and to serve in the Service organizations, etcetera. Appeals are still being made, and for the most part granted, for deferments, through the Local Committees, the operations of which have already been reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD. It is not likely, however, that women between 20 and 30 will be given reservation, nor will they be available from now on for training as projectionists. At present many women within these age groups are being trained as projectionists and these presumably, if they replace men of military age, will not be taken away. From now on, however, it will be the older women, above 30, who will have to supplant projectionists, second and third, already called to the Colors.

Until March 1, 1942, a virtual blanket is being placed upon the call-up of projectionists. After that it would seem likely that the Ministry of Labor will set a tempo on their call-ups to synchronize with the rate at which substitute labor is available.

Labor, however, is not going to be the only headache likely to afflict the exhibitor in 1942. A long view of the conditions at the moment suggest that neither the Quota nor the rental situation will be entirely absent from the discussion tables. Already, despite the reduction of the Quota to 15% for exhibitors, what is colloquially known as a "poor view" of the situation is being taken in C. E. A. Branches.

One complaint has gone out from an exhibitor group against the unfairness with which the re-issue clauses of the Films Act operate against the exhibitor. With the decrease in the amount of product available many renters are re-issuing earlier films. Against these re-issued foreign films the exhibitor still has to find British quota films (British films more than four years old are not eligible for quota). The contention is that if, for instance, a renter hires to an exhibitor two or three older films the exhibitor has to go out and find contemporary British footage to put against these, although he may already have shown British films against the re-issued foreign films when they were "fresh." Hence the new demand that the same conditions should be applied to foreign re-issues, that they should not be registrable above four years old.

Shorts Status Questioned

Another Quota detail, which has focussed the attention of the more alert amongst exhibitors, is the proposition that American war shorts should count as ex-Quota, that they should in fact be neutral for Quota purposes and that no British footage should be required to offset them. Whilst there is no objection to this, a counter suggestion has been made in production and labor circles that British propaganda films should be placed in the same category. To quote George Elvin, Secretary of the Association of Cine Technicians: "If they cut out all war films in counting for or against for Quota purposes it would seem, on a first reaction, that there would be no objection."

"We welcome over here every war film made by the Americans and we feel that it would be mutually beneficial if there were a full exchange of all such subjects between British and American producers."

On the production side an immediate sequel to the alteration of the Quota schedules, and the adoption of the Manpower Report, has been a discussion between the Films Council's representatives and the Board of Trade itself. It is informatively believed that back of these discussions is the Board of Trade's examination of the rationalization proposals already discussed by the Council, whereby the pooling of artists, studios, materials and other production assets would be set up as a possible solution of the present difficult situation.

Recently the British Films Production Association has leaped to a more virile and more representative shape. Its chairmanship has been taken by British executive C. M. Woolf, chief of General Film Distributors and joint managing director of Gaumont-Britain. Following the issuing of the new constitution no less than 16 British producers, previously outside the association, have joined.

CANADIAN INDEPENDENTS ASK TRADE REFORM; GOVERNMENT PEGS RENTALS

Ask Government Intervention on Distribution Problems and Trade Practices; Fitzgibbons Details Industry's Effort

Independent Canadian exhibitors took steps last Friday to request the Dominion Government to deal with distribution problems and trade practices, in addition to ceilings on admissions, film rentals and tax measures arising out of the war emergency. Henry Falk, representing unaffiliated Canadian exhibitors on the industry's advisory committee of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, issued a formal request for Government intervention. Almost immediately, the Government responded by pegging film rentals in Canada at terms prevailing during the basic period from September 15th to October 11th, 1941. This announcement came from R. G. McMullen in Toronto on Monday. He is the new administrator of Theatres and Films under the Prices and Trade Board.

Mr. McMullen declared on Tuesday, however, that details of the regulations affecting the industry would be decided only after conferences between the Administrator and trade representatives. He said that the projected policies, including the pegging of film rental prices, was still in an embryo stage.

Mr. Falk, named by the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, which was recognized by Mr. McMullen as representing unaffiliated theatres, declared in his statement last Friday, "A new situation has arisen in Canada today. The war emergency gave rise to the Wartime Prices and Trade Board primarily to stop profiteering and to prevent inflation. Actually, Government regulation of industry and commerce, including motion pictures, has arrived in Canada. Some of the basic matters concerning the operation of our business, such as taxes, ceilings on admissions and film rentals, distribution problems and fair trade practices, will now receive consideration."

Compares Film Situation

Mr. Falk referred to the New York consent decree developments in the United States and regulation of the film industry there under Government supervision as a parallel situation. Regarding the trade in Canada, he said: "For years, the powers-that-be in the motion picture business have fooled around with ideas of self-regulation." He charged that the old cry of self-regulation to dissuade the Government from exercising control "is sure to be pulled again."

Mr. McMullen, in announcing that film rentals would be pegged, indicated on Monday that no deviation from the ceiling prices, based on those in effect the September 15th-October 11th period, would be permitted by the Government. He declared the Government's policy would be to insure equitable distribution of films among all theatres.

Early in the week it was reported that J. J. Fitzgibbons, president of Famous Players Canadian Corp., left Toronto for Western Canada.

ONTARIO DROPS NEWSREEL QUOTA

The Ontario provincial board of censors has dropped its requirement that all newsreels shown in that province contain a quota percentage of British Empire news, it was learned last Friday in Toronto.

The board's action was taken primarily because of the United States' substantial participation in actual warfare since December 7th, and because of the limited newsreel coverage from various parts of the empire. The board's policy had been that 25 per cent of each newsreel issue be devoted to British Empire or Canadian news items, but recent releases on war developments have been practically all American, dating from Japan's attack on Hawaii.

Fitzgibbons Reports on Industry in War Effort

by PAT DONOVAN in Montreal

Summarizing the Canadian film industry's contributions to Canada's war effort, in an article in the Montreal Gazette's Commercial and Financial Review for 1941, J. J. Fitzgibbons, president of Famous Players Canadian Corp., Ltd., detailed the varied activities in which film leaders and exhibitors participated during the year.

Mr. Fitzgibbons said: "In its contribution to the war effort, the Canadian motion picture industry has gone far beyond mere entertainment. It has helped give impetus to the national spirit, to the patriotic fervor that has made so many war activities successful."

Assistance appeals made on the screens of Canadian theatres during 1941, he said, included such campaigns as the Canadian Red Cross, war loans, war savings, income tax appeals and other national objectives. One of the outstanding examples of exhibitor cooperation, FPC's president pointed out, is the monthly presentation of the National Film Board's fine series, "Canada Carries on." He also cited that the industry brought many famous stars to Canada at its own expense to stimulate interest in Government war and defense efforts.

New Brunswick Border Business Increases

by VICTOR SERVICE
in St. Johns, N. B.

Activities of picture exhibitors located along the U. S. side of the Canadian border on the Maine-New Brunswick division, have been indicating modification of the restrictions on border travel, reports from border towns reveal this week. Exhibitors and merchants have been seeking such modification, as the check on the flow of Canadians across the boundary has marred business generally in eastern Maine.

At Calais, Me., the State theatre has been reconditioned by Lockwood & Gordon, and with new drapes, carpets, acoustics. With the St. Croix closed, this is the only theatre currently functioning in Calais. Across the St. Croix River and boundary is the Queen. The Calais theatres normally rely on at least 50 per cent of their patronage from the Canadian side, chiefly the town of St. Stephen, N. B., with an international bridge connecting the two border communities. At Eastport, Me., Mrs. Nellie Shea has erected and outfitted the new Wilbor, successor to the burned Acme. Eastport normally depends on the Canadian islands of Deer and Campobello, within about a mile, the island of Grand Manan, farther away, and the mainland of New Brunswick, at St. Andrews, and nearby fishing towns, for at least 50 per cent of its business.

Theatre Improvements

At Lubec, Me., Mrs. Shea has improved the Lubec theatre, which generally looks for much of its patronage from nearby Campobello, Deer, Grand Manan, St. Andrews, etc. A ferry connects Lubec, Eastport and Campobello. At Machias, Me., Mrs. Emma Means has completed extensive improvements to her Colonial theatre. These include a new front of cement and asbestos, new marquee sign and letters, display frames, foyer, seats, curtain, drapes, floor coverings and projection and sound equipment. The Colonial received considerable business from the Grand Manan Island, just off the Maine coast. The Opera House in Princeton, Me., has been improved. This theatre received patronage from the New Brunswick side before the barriers went up. At Houlton, Me., the new Houlton has been opened by Mullin & Pinanski Theatres, and renovations have been made at their Temple. Ordinarily, at least 40 per cent of business here comes from the New Brunswick side, including border town of Woodstock. Renovations and new projection and sound have prevailed at the State, operated by Lloyd Bridgman in Presque Isle. The State and Opera House, totalling 1,900 seats, relied on the Canadian side for a large percentage of their gross business.

Some improvements are reported for the Paramount, at Fort Fairfield, Me. At Caribou, Me., some changes are forecast at the Powers and Rudy, where prior to the advent of the stringent wartime regulations, Canadians were almost as numerous as U. S. residents at the box offices.

Considerable activity in theatre improvement is being manifested in Canada's eastern provinces, but with delays caused by priorities, it was reported this week. In Halifax, N. S., the Casino theatre has been remodeled, including reseating, new fixtures, enlarged lobby, re-decorating and new sound and projection lighting. In the same town, at the Oxford, new comfort rooms and an improved foyer is being established.

OBITUARIES

Sir Oswald Stoll, British Showman, Dies in London

Sir Oswald Stoll, noted British theatrical manager and producer who for 60 years purveyed vaudeville, musicals, spectacle plays, ballets and motion pictures to the English public, died Friday, January 9th, at his home in suburban London. He would have been 76 years old on January 20th.

Brought to England from Australia as an infant Sir Oswald became associated with the theatre business at 14. He believed the British theatre should be run by Britishers. When Martin Beck and other American managers in 1910 declared their intention to combine with certain English interests opposed to him in the British variety field, Sir Oswald threatened to organize a $5,000,000 variety company to operate in America.

In 1925 he asked his government to help British cinema producers overcome American competition. The same year he organized Cinema Productions, Ltd., a pool of British cinema companies, to contest the virtual monopoly of the British market by American motion picture companies. In 1926 he urged an exhibit duty on all non-British films. In 1929, however, he condemned the British quota act on films, because it caused a shortage of attractive productions.

In 1930 Sir Oswald, always a pioneer in the developments of the art and science of entertainment in Great Britain, turned his attention both to television and the wide screen. He arranged demonstrations of television in the Coliseum, his principal London theatre, and gave demonstrations of the wide screen in the Stoll Picture House in Kingsway.

Sir Oswald married, in 1892, Harriet Lewis, who died in 1902. A year later he married Millicent Shaw. He had a daughter by his first wife and three sons by his second.

George H. Hall

George H. Hall, president of Lakeside Country Club in Hollywood and general manager of Walter Lantz Productions, producers of film cartoons, died Saturday, January 10th. He was 51 years old.

Frank Borchert

Frank Borchert, 49, Sturgeon Bay, Wis. exhibitor and manager of the Door theatre in that city, died January 7th, of a heart attack while attending a Milwaukee theatre. A native of Milwaukee, Mr. Borchert was a member of the American Legion. He has operated the Door for more than 10 years. Survivors are his wife, a son, his mother, two sisters and two brothers.

Leo F. Russell

Leo F. Russell, 42, projectionist at Fox's Retlaw theatre in Fond du Lac, Wis., until forced by illness to retire several years ago, died in that city Saturday, January 10th.

Jule Rachman, Omaha Exhibitor, Dies at 49

Jule Rachman, motion picture theatre operator, died Monday, January 12th, at his home in Omaha, Neb. He was 49 years old. In 1932 Mr. Rachman was sentenced to 15 years in the Nebraska State Penitentiary after being convicted of homicide in connection with the murder of his two cousins, Harry and Sam Goldberg, while they worked in the offices in a downtown Omaha theatre. The three men had quarreled over control of a group of theatres.

Last September, Mr. Rachman was released on parole after an outstanding prison record. He was credited with lifting the morale of the men in the penitentiary through promotion of entertainment for prisoners, including the exhibition of motion pictures. He returned to Omaha to rise again in the theatre business when he died of a disease contracted at the penitentiary.

IN THE COURTS

Decision Reserved On Schenck Appeal

Joseph M. Schenck, former chairman of the board of Twentieth Century-Fox, and Joseph Moskowitz, executive of that company, this week waited a decision from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals determining whether they will serve their prison sentences and pay their fines on conviction of evasion of income taxes in 1935, 1936 and 1937.

Monday, in New York, after a full day of argument, the Court reserved decision on appeals from conviction. John W. Davis, and former Judge Joseph Proskauer, their counsel, insisted the Government failed to prove criminal intent, that it merely made a civil case for recovery of taxes.

Evidence during the trial by Government witness Lawrence Gibney was termed unsupported. Mr. Gibney's computation, that only $167 of $20,000 in deductions was proper, was a main point, Mr. Proskauer asserting: "I am willing to rest my entire case on my contention that no evidence supported this computation."

The defendants were convicted April 17th last and sentenced April 24th. fined $10,000.

Both remained free under $5,000 bail each, pending determination of their appeals from conviction.

Hakim Award Confirmed

Justice Edward R. Koch, of the New York supreme court, has confirmed an arbitration award in favor of Raphael Hakim, producer of the French film, "The Baker's Wife," against the distributor of the picture, The Baker's Wife, Inc.

Indiana Firm Organized

Popular Pictures Company, which will distribute independents' pictures in Indiana, has established offices at 406 North Illinois street, Indianapolis. Joseph W. Goldberg, formerly of Louisville, is one of the organizers. Mrs. Dorothy Schrand is booker and office manager.

Court Rules on 'Lone Ranger' Presentations

No one may use, without permission, a character originated by radio. They may not advertise the character; they may not act as the character. And it does not matter that they had previously appeared as the character in a motion picture licensed by the originator.

Such is the import of a United States Circuit Court of Appeals decision in Richmond, Virginia, where the Court enjoined E. O. Cox, doing business as the Wallace Brothers Circus, and Lee Powell, actor, from advertising, and appearing as, "The Lone Ranger"; and the Court confirmed that the character belongs to the radio station which evolved it, station WXYZ, Detroit, key station of the Michigan Radio Network, and member of the Blue Network of the National Broadcasting System.

President and treasurer of the station is George Trendle, who retired some time ago from his United Detroit Theatres (succeeded there by Earl Hudson), to devote his time to radio. He was a pioneer in mid-west's exhibition.

In the decision, Mr. Trendle in some degree wins a decision for radio against his former entertainment medium, films; for Mr. Powell, the actor enjoined by the decision from appearing any longer as "The Lone Ranger," had played the part of Allan King, the Ranger, in the serial of that name produced in 1938 by Republic under license.

Mr. Powell had been appearing in the circus as "the original" Ranger, riding masked on a white horse, and crying: "Hi-Yo, Silver!"

The Court remarked, in part, that even the production of a succeeding picture to "The Lone Ranger"—"Hi-Yo, Silver," (Republic, 1940)—was not productive of effect upon the rights of the parties, asserting: "Powell's part in that picture was substantially the same as in the previous one, and could have conferred upon him no greater right than did that to advertise himself as 'The Lone Ranger' or to use the distinctive call to the horse, of the radio broadcast."

Trustees Bring Injunction

The First National Bank and Trust Co., of Bridgeport, Conn., and Florence N. Anderson of Fairfield, trustees under the will of Charles H. Hawley, have brought an injunction and suit for $45,000 damages in the superior court in Bridgeport against the Capitol Amusement Corporation and Louis J. Anger, operator of the Barnum theatre, claiming non-payment of a balance of $34,500 due on a $40,000 promissory note executed by the defendants in 1936.

German Films Shown

Joe Pastor's German Kino, showing German films in Milwaukee for the past five years, closed after the declaration of war but was scheduled to open with American films. Instead of the theatre, which has been renamed the Radio, has inaugurated the policy of showing German non-political films.

Chicago Rallies for Service in War and Defense

Chicago circuits and their personnel, theatre managers, film exchange employees and others connected with the business in the midwest city are doing their share, in money and deeds, towards supporting the government and its needs and in upholding the morale of its defenders.

In this connection, Balaban & Katz are pursuing an "all out" support of the United States' defense program in several ways. Four months ago, before the selling campaign for Defense Bonds had even started, 200 of the company's employees pledged themselves to buy the bonds on a payroll-allotment plan. Today 600, more than half of the company's employees, are buying Defense Bonds and Stamps to the extent of 7 per cent of their weekly incomes, and officials are confident that, within a short time, 100 per cent of the organization will be represented.

Bonds, Red Cross Sold

Several weeks ago a line was set in the Chicago Theatre marquee reading "Buy Defense Bonds—Give To Red Cross" and since this idea was inaugurated an order has gone out to all houses in the circuit to do likewise. Men who have left the company to go into the armed service are not forgotten. On their birthdays they receive a letter of congratulations, signed by John Balaban, and a $10 present from the Balaban & Katz Employees' Club, who also sent service kits to all their former associates, now in the Army or Navy, on Christmas. Many of the cashiers and office workers, among the women, have joined the new Theatrical Red Cross unit, organized by Lucille Ballantine, booking agent, as have numerous women employees of the offices along film row.

Film exchange employees are buying Defense Stamps each week, the RKO office having signed up 100 per cent to buy approximately $100 worth of stamps weekly. Most of the city's 375 theatres are running flag or patriotic trailers of some sort and will cooperate to the fullest extent on the coming Red Cross and "March of Dimes" drives.

The Amusement and Recreational division of the Chicago Civilian Defense Committee has been instrumental in upholding the morale of soldiers and sailors visiting the downtown district with short funds, by providing them with thousands of free passes weekly and facilities for entertainment at the Social Center, formerly the Elk's clubhouse. This division is headed by James Coston, of the Warner Circuit, and John Balaban, of Balaban & Katz.

In an effort to spur the sale of defense stamps and bonds in the city, the Soundies Distributing Corporation of America, of which James Roosevelt, son of the President, is a vice-president, has contributed six Panoram sound machines for the use of Mayor Edward J. Kelly. One of these has already been installed in the first floor corridor of the City Hall and each buyer of at least $1.00 worth of stamps is entitled to hear one of the seven subjects on the machine, most prominently of which is a number called, "We'll Slap the Japs." The other five machines will soon be installed in the lobbies of other large buildings in the Loop.

Thousands of persons, from ushers in small theatres to top executives in the exhibiting and distributing ends of the industry are all contributing to the cause, in dollars and effort. Six hundred Balaban & Katz employees have signed up for Civilian Defense work. Among the em-

Mexico Probes 'High Admissions' At Top Theatres

by LUIS BECERRA CELIS
in Mexico City

Alleged profiteering by local exhibitors, particularly the first run houses, which for several months has claimed the interest of a few of congressmen and senators, has now been officially made the subject of an investigation by the Ministry of National Economy, in behalf of the federal government. The Ministry says that it intends to probe this matter completely, to find out whether or not the exhibitors are charging excessively high admittance prices. Complaints to the federal legislators, which have been turned over to the Ministry, are that the charges of the theatres are exorbitant, for, it is said, the distributors, principally American, have not appreciably increased their rentals and labor costs do not justify raising rates to the public.

The legislators have agreed with the complainants that rates of the first run theatres here, varying from 35 cents for ordinary pictures to 65 cents for super attractions are too high. The exhibitors counter with the argument that their costs, chiefly labor, have increased so much that they can make but a fair living, a question of bigger grosses but smaller nets, for, after all, the public at least of the first run theatres is not stopped from attending because of the prices.

50 Features Set

Mexican production in 1941 is announced at 40 pictures, an improvement on 1940 when the output was only 27. Production for 1942 is estimated at about 50.

The producers did not profit so very much last year. Only three of the 21 of them who are members of the Association of Mexican Producers of Motion Pictures made money in 1941.

A new note of optimism has come to the production and studio branches of the picture business, though they admit that the dark clouds of a probable acute shortage of raw materials and equipment loom for them as a result of war conditions. Producers have lined up an imposing schedule for 1942, and the studios are going ahead with arrangements for modernizing for more and better production. The 1942 tentative production will be the biggest that Mexico has had in any year for some time.

Nevertheless, it is freely admitted that this entire program hinges upon just how much material, raw and otherwise, the industry will be able to obtain from the United States.

The production program features the decisions to make 20 pictures by Jesus Grovas & Co., 12 pictures by Filmex, S.A., one of which will be a new version of "The Count of Monte Cristo," to cost $105,000, one of the most expensive films ever made in Mexico, and starring Arturo de Cordoba who is known in the United States and who has been signed for some Spanish films by RKO; six by Felipe Mier & Brother; five by Mexico-España Films, S.A., recently organized by Gen. Juan F. Azcarate, former Mexican minister to Germany, and a farcical presentation of "The Three Musketeers" by Posa Films, S.A., Santiago Reachi president, brother of Manuel, representative of the Mexican government in Hollywood, and to star "Cantinflas."

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

BLONDES FROM SINGAPORE, THE: Florence Rice, Leif Erikson—We've got to have more than "Blondes from Singapore" to draw them in.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

BULLETS FOR RUSTLERS: Charles Starrett, Lorna Gray—Nothing to get excited about. Starrett's average. Running time, 58 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

HERE COMES MR. JORDAN: Robert Montgomery, Rita Johnson—This will please those that you are able to get in, but I'm afraid you will have trouble doing just that. Had one of the poorest Sundays of the year and Monday was also below par. Running time, 94 minutes. Played December 28-29.—H. Goldson, Plaza Theatre, Chicago, Ill. General patronage.

MEN IN HER LIFE, THE: Loretta Young, Dean Jagger—A good picture that went over well on the holiday but I couldn't have done anything with it any other day. All that saw it were fairly well pleased. Her gowns were gorgeous, the ladies said. Played December 25.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

MILITARY ACADEMY: Tommy Kelly, Bobby Jordan—Wish Columbia would stop making these weak drag-outs. Nothing to wish your public on. Running time, 66 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

PENNY SERENADE: Irene Dunne, Cary Grant—A very touching human interest story, so good that despite some reports that it was more a picture for women, it pleased our men 100 per cent, "and that ain't kiddin'." Just as has been reported by others regarding this picture, when it was concluded we also heard many throats and noses being cleared, and not all of them because of colds either. That indicates how engrossed our audience became in the excellent and realistic acting of Irene Dunne, Cary Grant, Edgar Buchanan (who supplies plenty of wholesome comedy), Beulah Bondi, et al. It's a dandy, one your patrons will be pleased to see. Running time, 124 minutes. Played December 20.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

SON OF DAVY CROCKETT: Bill Elliott, Iris Meredith—Average western that didn't do average business. Could Bill Elliott be given a fairly good story and a little money spent on production? I for one believe that Columbia would have a William S. Hart, and how we need one now, with all the sissy-pants cowboys and their glamour spoiling our westerns. Running time, 59 minutes.—Al Eliassen, Koronis theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Small town patronage.

TILLIE THE TOILER: Kay Harris, William Tracy—The first edition from the comic strip by the same name, went over very well with my patrons and produced a profit; however, it has to be teamed with something else owing to its length. I do not consider it in the same class as the other series "Blondie" that is already established and doubt very much it will reach the same reputation with the show-going public. Running time, 62 minutes. Played December 30.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BARNACLE BILL: Wallace Beery, Virginia Weidler—Beery always goes over good here, and this was no different from the rest. They should put him in more good westerns. Played December 23-25.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

BILLY THE KID: Robert Taylor, Brian Donlevy—Just what I need more of in this territory. Give any name in a picture here with a gun and my business will hold up. With a big name and color I really go to town and this picture was a typical example of the best. Nice business from the Saturday patrons. Running time, 95 minutes. Played December 14.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

BLOSSOMS IN THE DUST: Greer Garson, Walter Pidgeon—Nothing but praise from all angles for this production, shows what can be done with good material and direction. Business very sweet for this time of the season, which is usually below par in more situations, suitable for preferred playing time. Running time, 98 minutes. Played December 17-18.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

BLOSSOMS IN THE DUST: Greer Garson, Walter Pidgeon—Somewhat disappointed in the business this did but some of the fault can be blamed on the weather which was sub-zero. Wonderful picture with a great actress as the star. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 25-26. G. W. McLean, State Theatre, Big Timber, Mont. Small town patronage.

BLOSSOMS IN THE DUST: Greer Garson, Walter Pidgeon—A picture that was different, and was well taken. Had a lot of compliments on this one. Played December 26-28.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

CHOCOLATE SOLDIER, THE: Rise Stevens, Nelson Eddy—An elaborate production bringing a new star, Rise Stevens. Her voice will rank with the best, as was to be expected inasmuch as she came out of grand opera. The little lady has looks, too, and photographs attractively. The score is good, with old songs that have been popular some time ago. But for the drama end, with Eddy as the phony Russian, the less said the better. It could have been cut to a large advantage in this latter part for Eddy is not, and never has been a dramatic actor, and I am sorry to say that in these sequences, they laughed in the wrong place. And speaking of voices, the greatest of them all was Miliza Korjas in "The Great Waltz," who has never appeared again. We still have people ask what has become of her. They don't remember her name, but they do her voice. Personally, I would pay top prices to hear her sing that score again. Although the "Waltz" did not do business, it was great, anyway.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

DR. KILDARE'S WEDDING DAY: Laraine Day, Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore—This may be a little off color along side of the other Kildare pictures preceding it, however by using it as the number one feature along with "Officer and the Lady" from Columbia I had a bang-up show with general satisfaction and excellent business both nights.

DR. KILDARE'S WEDDING DAY: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day—Played on "Take a Chance Night" to below average business, although this series is liked here. Many remarked that they did not care for the method of getting Miss Day out of the series. Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 17.—G. W. McLean, State Theatre, Big Timber, Mont. Small town patronage.

GET-AWAY, THE: Robert Sterling, Dan Dailey, Jr.—Well now, if all program pictures were like this one, we wouldn't have any problem getting our patrons to come regularly. When I saw the running time on this, I thought that it would be a nice long dull program. But, as it turned out, it was better than my feature, "Tom, Dick and Harry." It's a gangster story that has a lot of action, drama, and if I'm not mistaken, it follows the pattern of John Dillinger and his gang. My patrons enjoyed it and I had some favorable comments. Running time, 87 minutes. Played December 28-30.—Peter Kavel, Campau Theatre, Hamtramck, Mich. General patronage.

GREAT WALTZ, THE: Luise Rainer, Fernand Gravet, Miliza Korjus—See review on "The Chocolate Soldier." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HONKY TONK: Clark Gable, Lana Turner—I wouldn't ask for anything better. I drew business from three neighboring towns that have larger theatres, but they had not played this natural. I wish I could do this more often and with a picture like this I can. It brought out customers that I hadn't seen since Christmas and they were far from disappointed. The stars and the name of the picture made a swell team. Running time, 105 minutes. Played January 4-5.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

LADY BE GOOD: Ann Sothorn, Robert Young—A very entertaining picture that did a little above average business. The preview helped sell it very effectively. The colored boys drew business from their race and the white stars weren't bad. Should have played this one two days. Played January 1.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

LIFE BEGINS FOR ANDY HARDY: Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland—A fair grosser for the series and pleased; however, took a nose dive the second day, which would signify there was no praise given it by word of mouth. Still believe Mickey the Number One Box Office Star of 1941 as voted by the exhibitors. Running time, 102 minutes. Played December 14-15.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

LIFE BEGINS FOR ANDY HARDY: Lewis Stone, Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Ann Rutherford—Played to good houses both nights. Although comments were it was not as good as the other of the series, yet it had lots of good comments. Played December 29-30.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS FOR ANDY HARDY: Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland—The Hardy series is well liked here and played to good business despite sub-zero weather. Some said they did not care as much for this as previous Hardy pictures, but all said it was good entertainment. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 28-30.—G. W. McLean, State Theatre, Big Timber, Montana. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS FOR ANDY HARDY: Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland—Very fine Hardy picture that failed to do any business due to cold weather. Played January 2-4.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

LIFE BEGINS FOR ANDY HARDY: Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Lewis Stone—This series still holds its own with me but it has stopped building up with each new picture. The pictures seem to be a little too much on the same track and most of the tricks and antics of Andy we've seen. Can't kick on Mickey's work because it never has failed to please. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 28-29.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

LOVE CRAZY: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Good comedy and entertainment. Play it if you have not already done so. William Powell has a good following here and Myrna Loy is tops. Can't go wrong with this one. Running time, 99 minutes. Played December 27.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

LOVE CRAZY: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Average business for this time of year for last part of the week. Pleased patrons who enjoyed the comedy. Running time, 99 minutes. Played December 18-20.—G. W. McLean, State Theatre, Big Timber, Mont. Small town patronage.

MARRIED BACHELOR: Robert Young, Ruth Hussey—Good comedy which was marred due to the fact that the print was damaged along the sound track. Robert Young was good and Ruth Hussey was good also. She looks a lot like Myrna Loy in this picture. Played December 27-29.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

NAVY BLUE AND GOLD (REISSUE): James Stewart, Robert Young—See review on "The Nurse's Secret," Warner Bros.—First National. A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

RINGSIDE MAISIE: Ann Sothorn, George Murphy—This showed up well with its predecessors and gave general satisfaction, gaining momentum the second day to come through with a nice profit. While rated as a comedy it leans more towards sentiment, emotions and drama, with less wisecracks and comedy. Running time, 95 minutes. Played December 31-January 1.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

SHADOW OF THE THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy, Asta—It don't think that this one is up to the former ones. It still did business, but it seemed to lack some of the "ump" that the other had.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Jeannette MacDonald, Brian Aherne, Gene Raymond—Although the younger people disliked it and the older thought it was good, it did fairly good business for a time when college is closed. There was no necessity to make this story again as it was so well done before. The color and music were good and the acting was O. K., but this type of picture drags for most of my bunch. Ran it with "Wild Geese Calling" and think I had a fair turnout mainly because there was nothing else in town to do. Running time, 100 minutes. Played January 2-3.—W. V. Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

THEY MET IN BOMBAY: Clark Gable, Rosalind Russell—This picture failed to pull them in even with Gable. The picture is nothing big, but will get by. Played November 28-30.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Small town patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Joan Crawford, Robert Taylor, Greer Garson—This was a good picture, but was not the picture for Christmas Day. Box office fair. Played December 24-25.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Joan Crawford, Robert Taylor—Nothing good to say about this one, the story is weak and silly. Played December 20-22.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

ALOMA OF THE SOUTH SEAS: Dorothy Lamour, Jon Hall, Lynne Overman—Good picture. Some very spectacular shots, especially the volcano scene at the last. This was a marvel of photographic technique. Hand an orchid to Katherine DeMille for her small part, also Lynn Overman. Lamour was just among those present; she does not seem to have the feel for a dramatic role.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ALOMA OF THE SOUTH SEAS: Dorothy Lamour, Jon Hall—A very sweet piece of merchandise for the distributor and exhibitor alike, the settings in beautiful color, with its shapely brown maidens dancing in the sunlight, situation and dialogue to please the boy friend, all adds up to satisfied customers and large grosses. Give it preferred dates and reap the harvest. Running time, 77 minutes. Played January 4-5.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

AMONG THE LIVING: Albert Dekker, Susan Hayward, Frances Farmer—Good picture which pleased all. Is very well made for a small picture. Play it. I used it on New Year's Eve Prevue. Running time, 69 minutes. Played December 31.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

BORDER VIGILANTES: William Boyd, Russell Hayden, Andy Clyde—Largest Friday in four months. Better than average Saturday. Very good western. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 26-27.—E. L. Arnstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

CAUGHT IN THE DRAFT: Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour—Just what the Dr. ordered, swell picture, swell business, every one satisfied. Played December 23-25.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

CAUGHT IN THE DRAFT: Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour—Good business, picture very popular here and should go over anywhere. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 14-16.—G. W. McLean, State Theatre, Big Timber, Mont. Small town patronage.

FLYING BLIND: Richard Arlen, Jean Parker, Nils Asther, Marie Wilson—If this series is to be kept on, they better put some excitement and action into them. Draggy until the last reel. Played December 19-20.—Daniel Korman, Palace Theatre, Englehart, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

HOLD BACK THE DAWN: Charles Boyer, Olivia de Havilland, Paulette Goddard—This picture was enjoyed by all; some comments that it was the best picture of the year. Played to good house both nights. Played December 31-January 1.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

KISS THE BOYS GOODBYE: Mary Martin, Don Ameche—I saw the picture and I'm just like the rest of the people who saw it. Where did they get the name, if there is anything in a name? I think everybody liked it but they expected something they didn't get. The name was misleading since so many boys are being kissed goodbye now. Still it pleased. Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 31.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

LAS VEGAS NIGHTS: Tommy Dorsey, Bert Wheeler—Not much to this one, a lot of hokum with no story. I thought the trailer was better than the show. Running time, 89 minutes. Played 30-31.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

NEW YORK TOWN: Fred MacMurray, Mary Martin, Robert Preston—Back in the old rut. All dialogue, no action, the laughs that were supposed to be there were missing and the material for the story was as thin as tissue paper. But you take 'em or leave 'em this season. The only saving grace is that if you don't do business, the Government doesn't get the tax. That way, the exhibitor and the Government are both ship-sawed.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

NEW YORK TOWN: Fred MacMurray, Mary Martin, Robert Preston—Good musical comedy, but failed at box office. Somehow, Mary Martin has no drawing power here. Played December 22-23.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

NIGHT OF JANUARY 16TH: Robert Preston, Ellen Drew, Nils Asther—Good picture and good business. Has plenty comedy and is well made. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 30.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

ONE NIGHT IN LISBON: Fred MacMurray, Madeleine Carroll, Patricia Morison—We played this second run to below average business.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario. Can. General patronage.

PARSON OF PANAMINT, THE: Ellen Drew, Chas. Ruggles—Played to below average business, but those who saw it were very enthusiastic about the picture. Good picture but needs strong promotion. Running time, 84 minutes. Played December 13.—G. W. McLean, State Theatre, Big Timber, Mont. Small town patronage.

PARSON OF PANAMINT, THE: Charles Ruggles, Ellen Drew—A first class production of one of Peter B. Kyne's best and most popular stories, below par at the box office and not worth the rental asked for this situation. Running time, 84 minutes. Played December 10-11.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

ROUND-UP, THE: Richard Dix, Patricia Morison—Better than average western that seemed to please. Played December 9-10.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

SECRET OF THE WASTELANDS: William Boyd, Andy Clyde, Brad King—Good western which pleased the Friday-Saturday trade. Running time, 66 minutes. Played January 2-3.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

GAMBLING DAUGHTERS: Cecilia Parker, Roger Pryor—A second-rate picture that for some reason or other did average business. My patrons said it was all right. I don't know, I didn't think so. It would have made a good crime short. The only thing that holds interest is the mysterious boss of the gangsters. Running time, 62 minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau Theatre, Hamtramck, Mich. General patronage.

JUNGLE MAN: Buster Crabbe—Fair picture that suffered in the pre-holiday slump.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

REG'LAR FELLERS: Billy Lee—This seemed to satisfy. We did fair business on a double bill.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

DOWN MEXICO WAY: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Played to good crowds both days. Was almost the same as "South of the Border." Business average. Played December 26-27.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

GAUCHOS OF ELDORADO: The Three Mosquitoes—Fair Western which did average business on Friday and Saturday. Played December 19-20.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

ICE CAPADES: Dorothy Lewis, Jerry Colonna—Good feature which did fair business, considering cold weather. Played December 27-29.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

OH SUSANNA: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Story flimsy, print terrible. Running time, 60 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

SAILORS ON LEAVE: William Lundigan, Shirley Ross—Midnight show New Years Eve to a very nice and appreciative crowd. Business was very good and the show pleased those that stayed up to see it. My first Republic picture for some time and I hope the balance are that good, if so I will be more than satisfied. Running time, 71 minutes. Played December 31.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

SUNSET IN WYOMING: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—Very good entertainment for my patrons. Good songs and plenty of action. Up to the Autry standard. Running time, 65 minutes. Played January 3.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

ANNE OF WINDY POPLARS: Anne Shirley, James Ellison—A good feature not to pass up, but definitely only for the lower end of a bill. Running time, 85 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

GIRL, A GUY AND A GOB, A: George Murphy, Lucille Ball, Edmond O'Brien—Very good picture. Business bad due to weather. Played December 10-11.—E. F. Stahl, Rialto Theatre, Melrose, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

LADY SCARFACE: Dennie O'Keefe, Judith Anderson—Here again is an example of what can be done with a small budget. This is a nice program picture. It has action, story and it holds interest. A group of gangsters headed by a woman. They got the idea from "A Woman's Face." This is a modern story and doesn't conflict with the former. A good "B" picture cast. Running time, 65 minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau Theatre, Hamtramck, Mich. General patronage.

MEXICAN SPITFIRE: Lupe Velez, Leon Errol—A good hilarious comedy. An excellent second for a heavy bill. Running time, 65 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

MEXICAN SPITFIRE OUT WEST: Lupe Velez, Leon Errol, Donald Woods—Real humdinger that did business. Left them rolling in the aisles and it wasn't from New Year's cheer either.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

MY LIFE WITH CAROLINE: Ronald Colman, Anna Lee—Definitely not small town fare. Business dropped to a new low on the second and third days. Running time, 81 minutes. Played December 21-23.—

GAMBLING DAUGHTERS: Cecilia Parker, Roger Pryor—A second-rate picture that for some reason or other did average business. My patrons said it was all right. I don't know, I didn't think so. G. W. McLean, State Theatre, Big Timber, Mont. Small town patronage.

SAINT IN NEW YORK, THE: Louis Hayward, Kay Sutton—A strictly program picture for double billing.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SCATTERGOOD MEET BROADWAY: Guy Kibbee—See review on "Highway West."—Warner Bros.—First National.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

STAGE TO CHINO: George O'Brien, Virginia Vale—A satisfactory week-end western.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

TOM, DICK AND HARRY: Ginger Rogers, George Murphy, Alan Marshal—Making allowances for time of year, war news and so forth, this was a terrific box-office flop. Not one favorable comment; lots of complaints and walk-outs. Running time, 86 minutes. Played December 10-12.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapeau, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

TOM, DICK AND HARRY: Ginger Rogers, George Murphy, Alan Marshal—From all of the reports I hear on this one, it doesn't look so rosy. I've heard some patrons say they didn't like it and that it was silly. They said they were sorry that they wasted their time and money. Well, I've seen it and thought it was all right. I guess some people just don't understand it. I'll admit it isn't Ginger's best, and I can see why, but it's not as bad as I've heard. Well, I'm going to play it next week and I hope business isn't as bad as I've heard. Running time, 86 minutes. Played December 28-30.—Peter Kavel, Campau Theatre, Hamtramck, Mich. General patronage.

VIVACIOUS LADY (REISSUE): Ginger Rogers, James Stewart, James Ellison—Double-billed with "Tall, Dark and Handsome," 20th Century-Fox. Both pictures well liked. Played December 18-20.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapeau, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CHARLEY'S AUNT: Jack Benny, Kay Francis—This has everything to satisfy most movie fans and Jack Benny as the Aunt in pants is as funny as any Aunt I ever saw. Business above normal and my public pleased. It is worth your preferred time and the percentage asked. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 21-22.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN RIO: Sidney Toler, Mary Beth Hughes—Played to a Christmas Eve benefit. The ones who got in free said they were charged too much. Running time, 62 minutes. Played December 24.—E. L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

EVERYTHING HAPPENS AT NIGHT: Sonja Henie, Ray Milland, Robert Cummings—Well liked, but Sonja is a "natural" here, skating being our big opposition. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 29-31.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapeau, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

HE MARRIED HIS WIFE: Joel McCrea, Nancy Kelly—A good second. Will lighten a heavy bill. Fairly good comedy feature. Running time, 83 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

LILLIAN RUSSELL: Alice Faye, Don Ameche, Henry Fonda—Fox wasted a host of big names for a very, very weak story. Don't give us any more of these. Too long for a story as weak as this one.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

MARK OF ZORRO, THE: Tyrone Power, Linda Darnell, Basil Rathbone—Good picture, but perhaps too old. Poor holiday business. Running time, 94 minutes. Played December 25-27.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapeau, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Jane Withers, Ritz Brothers—A good second feature. Suited best for weekend. Running time, 70 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

RETURN OF FRANK JAMES, THE: Henry Fonda, Gene Tierney, Jackie Cooper—Well liked, but, of course, business was off due to Christmas. Running time, 93 minutes. Played December 22-24.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapeau, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

RIDE ON, VAQUERO: Cesar Romero, Mary Beth Hughes—This type picture made to order for us. Business was good. Played December 12-13.—E. F. Stahl, Rialto Theatre, Melrose, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

RIDE ON VAQUERO: Cesar Romero, Mary Beth Hughes—Played as a double bill with "The Masked Rider."—Universal. Played January 2-3.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

ROAD AGENT: Leo Carrillo, Andy Devine, Dick Foran—Average picture for average western that seemed to please our western picture fans. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 27.—G. W. McLean, State Theatre, Big Timber, Mont. Small town patronage.

SUN VALLEY SERENADE: Sonja Henie, John Payne, Glenn Miller and his Orchestra, Milton Berle—Good picture that did excellent business. Far out-grossed "That Night in Rio," "Moon Over Miami" and "Charley's Aunt." Played December 28-29.—E. L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

SUN VALLEY SERENADE: Sonja Henie, John Payne, Glenn Miller and his Orchestra, Milton Berle—Another fine musical from Fox. Sonja Henie, enchanting as ever, gives a flawless performance and is aided by a cast comprised of such headliners as John Payne, Lynn Bari, Milton Berle, Joan Davis, and the Nicholas Brothers. Filmed against the scenic beauty of Sun Valley, the picture flows smoothly along to the bay rhythms of Glenn Miller's Orchestra. Enjoyable from start to finish. Running time, 86 minutes. Played December 27.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

SUN VALLEY SERENADE: Sonja Henie, John Payne, Glenn Miller and his Orchestra, Milton Berle—Some people may like this kind of stuff, but I don't. As yet, I haven't played it and I don't think I will. The ads should read, "Glenn Miller and John Payne in 'S. V. S.' with Sonja Henie." She has improved a lot since her last picture, but what good is it if you don't see much of her in the picture. The skiing scenes were very beautiful. The background shots were even more so. But when you have to sit through four reels of Glenn Miller to see one of Henie, I'll take Disney.—Peter Kavel, Campau Theatre, Hamtramck, Mich. General patronage.

TALL, DARK AND HANDSOME: Cesar Romero, Virginia Gilmore, Charlotte Greenwood, Milton Berle—See review on "Vivacious Lady."—RKO Radio.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapeau, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

THAT NIGHT IN RIO: Alice Faye, Don Ameche, Carmen Miranda—Here is a snappy musical to put your patrons in a happy mood. The ever popular team of Faye and Ameche, plus firebrand Carmen Miranda, again get together and turn in another superlative performance, in a story that is both humorous and clever. Perfect color and a number of hit tunes blend in making this film an outstanding hit which should please all who see it. Running time, 90 minutes. Played January 3.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

TIN PAN ALLEY: Alice Faye, Betty Grable, Jack Oakie, John Payne—Good business, well liked. Played January 1-3.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapeau, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

WILD GESE CALLING: Henry Fonda, Joan Bennett, Warren William—Ran this with "Smilin' Through" to passable business considering the fact that college was closed. Many objected as it didn't follow the book. Nothing particularly good about it but it did move right along and did not drag. Just a programmer with a few good moments. Running time, 78 minutes. Played January 2-3.—W. V. Nevins, III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

WILD GESE CALLING: Henry Fonda, Joan Bennett—Good picture, business fair. Played December 16-18.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

YESTERDAY'S HEROES: Jean Rogers, Robert Sterling, Ted North—A fair program picture for double billing.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

YOUTH WILL BE SERVED: Jane Withers—See review on "Tight Shoes."—Universal.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapeau, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

United Artists

CORSICAN BROTHERS: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Ruth Warrick, Akim Tamiroff—Real fine entertainment. Should do well in any situation. Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

GREAT DICTATOR, THE: Charles Chaplin, Jack Oakie, Paulette Goddard—A long anticipated picture that didn't do the business we expected.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

GREAT DICTATOR, THE: Charles Chaplin, Jack Oakie, Paulette Goddard—Business somewhat above average, and had the press sheet revealed this story completely, we could have sold many more tickets. The younger folks don't know Chaplin and the older folks were not lured. Running time, 110 minutes. Played December 7-9.—E. F. Stahl, Rialto Theatre, Melrose, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

INTERNATIONAL LADY: George Brent, Ilona Massey, Basil Rathbone—Good enough espionage picture; not much action. Also slow tempo. This Miss Massey has a singing voice, but, as usual, they give her some operatic aria that is just so much noise to our unmusical audience. Why, if they must intersperse a musical number, don't they use something that the average theatre patron can understand and know. I say again that they are falling into all dialogue pictures and not enough action; the same old error they first made when sound came in. The audiences are going to turn thumbs down again if they continue in these one set pictures that depend on dialogue alone.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MAJOR BARBARA: Wendy Hiller, Robert Morley—Phooey—they're still squawking about this one, so many complaints that I'm agreeing with the customers. Run this on your off night, that is, the night you take off. Running time, 122 minutes. Played December 19-20.—H. Goldson, Plaza Theatre, Chicago, Ill. General patronage.

ROAD SHOW: Adolphe Menjou, Carole Landis, Charles Butterworth—Played this just before Christmas and didn't do the business we would have liked to.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

WUTHERING HEIGHTS: Merle Oberon, Laurence Olivier—A good drama feature, but nothing to get excited about. Running time, 103 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

Universal

ARGENTINE NIGHTS: Ritz Brothers—They should be kept in two-reel comedies. Played December 22-24.—Daniel Korman, Palace Theatre, Englehart, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

BACK STREET: Charles Boyer, Margaret Sullivan, Richard Carlson—Acting very good. Would still like to see Boyer in an action role. Comments varied; but majority appeared to enjoy it. Played December 29-31.—Daniel Korman, Palace Theatre, Englehart, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

DANGEROUS GAME, A: Richard Arlen, Andy Devine—See Review on "Great Mr. Nobody."—Warner Bros.—First National.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

HOLD THAT GHOST: Bud Abbott, Lou Costello, Joan Davis, Mischa Auer—Good business, good comments. Running time, 88 minutes. Played December 13-15.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapeau, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

HOLD THAT GHOST: Abbott, Costello, Richard Carlson—Did exceedingly well at the box office and gave satisfaction to all patrons. Consider it as good as the other two with these same box office stars. It is bound to do some business in any situation. Running time, 86 minutes. Played December 26-27.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

IN THE NAVY: Abbott, Costello, Dick Powell—Not as good as "Buck Privates" at the box office, it did a fair business and pleased those that came to see it. Did not reach the guarantee placed upon it, but is worth playing even at their terms. Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 12-13.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

SAN ANTONIO ROSE: Jane Frazee, Robert Paige, Eve Arden—This picture was a good musical and pleased average business. Played December 24.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

SWING IT, SOLDIER: Ken Murray, Frances Langford, Don Wilson—Very good musical. I played it Christmas Day to very good business. Everyone pleased. Running time, 68 minutes. Played December 24-25.—E. L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

TIGHT SHOES: Joan Howard, Binnie Barnes, Brod Crawford—Double billed with "Youth Will Be Served," 20th Century-Fox. Fair program. Typical pre-Christmas business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played December 15-17.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapeau, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS: Irene Dunne, Robert Montgomery—A dud. Starts out like most of the horses I bet on—folds up in the back stretch and ends up an "also ran." And, alas, this is an odds-on favorite—see Universal odds. Running time, 95 minutes. Played December 25-26.—H. Goldson, Plaza Theatre, Chicago, Ill. General patronage.

Warner Bros.-First National

AFFECTIONATELY YOURS: Merle Oberon, Dennis Morgan—This picture went over good, and that's what counts. Played December 2-3.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

BRIDE CAME C.O.D., THE: James Cagney, Bette Davis—This was a good picture and pleased 100 per cent. Davis good in different type role than she has played in past. Played December 5-7.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR (REISSUE): James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—As I've said before, some of these old ones do better than the new ones we are forced to play. Considering that we played this for Christmas we did all right. It has a lot of action and it's what the patrons like. Although it has a lot of airplanes and marines, it does a nice job of entertaining. The kids and action fans go for it big and the rest of 'em like it too. So everybody's happy. Running time, 84 minutes. Played December 24-25.—Peter Kavel, Campau Theatre, Hamtramck, Mich. General patronage.

DIVE BOMBER: Errol Flynn, Fred MacMurray, Ralph Bellamy—Orchids go to Warner Bros., this time for a very fine picture in color. This picture was very timely and the direction and acting was very good. Business was not so good due to rain and cold. Played December 13-15.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

DIVE BOMBER: Errol Flynn, Fred MacMurray—Outstanding aviation picture and will please your patrons and do plenty of business. A little long but not tiresome. Title, cast and story timely. Play it and reap the harvest. Running time, 133 minutes. Played December 28-29.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

DODGE CITY: Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland—A good western crammed with action. Running time, 103 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

GREAT MR. NOBODY: Eddie Albert, Joan Leslie—Double featured with "A Dangerous Game," a Universal offering; both pictures a washout; did not take in film rental. Those that came did not like either picture and told me so. Where a profit was possible I took a loss, something that is not unusual in this business. Running time, 71 minutes. Played December 9.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

HIGHWAY WEST: Brenda Marshall, Olympe Bradna, Arthur Kennedy—Used on a double bill with "Scattergood Meets Broadway" from RKO. Both pictures were suitable for double feature material, that's all. I failed to take in film rental, possibly the near proximity to Christmas cut the attendance to a total loss. Running time, 63 minutes. Played December 23.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

INTERNATIONAL SQUADRON: Ronald Reagan, Olympe Bradna, James Stephenson—Right in the groove for extra business right now and will give complete satisfaction. Business excellent, cast and production magnificent. Give it a chance and you cannot go wrong. Running time, 87 minutes. Played December 24-25.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

INTERNATIONAL SQUADRON: Ronald Reagan, Olympe Bradna—A very fine picture of its type. Up to the minute story of the war in Europe. Played December 19-21.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

LAW OF THE TROPICS: Jeffrey Lynn, Constance Bennett—Played this on Bank Night, and was well taken. I didn't expect very much, but proved to be a good show.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

MALTESE FALCON, THE: Humphrey Bogart, Mary Astor, Gladys George—Fair picture which failed to draw film rental. Title is meaningless. Picture too long and talky. Bogart miscast; my patrons want him as a crook. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 31-January 1.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

MANPOWER: George Raft, Edward G. Robinson, Marlene Dietrich—This was a great show, lots of good cracks that the crowd ate up. Give us more of this type. Played December 12-14.—Otto W. Chapek, New Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Small town and rural patronage.

MEET JOHN DOE: Cary Cooper, Barbara Stanwyck—Very good picture but not the type to draw any extra business in my section. All that saw it enjoyed it very much but I had plenty of extra seats with each showing. Running time, 123 minutes. Played December 7.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

NAVY BLUES: Ann Sheridan, Jack Oakie, Martha Raye, Jack Haley—A disappointing musical that didn't go over.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

NAVY BLUES: Jack Oakie, Ann Sheridan—Nice picture with nice business. I'll do it every time with these stars and especially with this setting. Oakie has followers and Sheridan has plenty with me. Several good gags that were well received. Running time, 108 minutes. Played December 21.—Felix H. Tisdale, Ga-Ana Theatre, Georgiana, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

NURSE'S SECRET, THE: Lee Patrick, Regis Toomey—As the secondary fare on a double bill with "Navy Blue and Gold," reissued by Metro, which deserves the credit for fair returns at the box office, this picture needs plenty of supporting fare to bring in shekels and definitely will not stand alone. Running time, 65 minutes. Played December 16.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

OKLAHOMA KID, THE: James Cagney, Humphrey Bogart—Played this on Friday and Saturday and did good business. Picture full of action and just the kind for the Saturday crowd. Played December 12-13.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

OUT OF THE FOG: Ida Lupino, John Garfield—One of the year's lowest grossers. Opened to a new low on Friday and continued through Saturday. I am still in the fog trying to figure why this picture was designated in the percentage group; it is not that kind of a picture. I doubt very much whether more suitable playing time would have saved it. Running time, 86 minutes. Played December 19-20.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

RETURN OF DR. X, THE: Humphrey Bogart, Rosemary Lane, Wayne Morris—I think I am through with any kind of late show. This was a grand picture but only a handful saw it. Played December 31.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

STEEL AGAINST THE SKY: Lloyd Nolan, Alexis Smith—This was, I would consider, below par for a program picture and would not stand alone.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

THREE SONS O' GUNS: Wayne Morris, Tom Brown, Marjorie Rambeau—Produced and sold as a double bill affair, I teamed it with "Tillie the Toiler" and came up with a profit. It is not worth what they are asking for it and any of the other companies would have sold it for less money. Credit for what business done goes to Tillie. Running time, 64 minutes. Played December 30.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

TIL WE MEET AGAIN: Merle Oberon, George Brent, Pat O'Brien—A wonderful picture. Wish Warners would make more of this type of features. Running time, 100 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

WINGS OF THE NAVY: George Brent, Olivia de Havilland—A fairly good aviation feature. Timely for now. Running time, 90 minutes.—G. S. Caporal, Yale Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. General patronage.

Short Features Columbia

CITY WITHIN A CITY, A: Panoramics—Perfect photography, combined with unusual shots of great Radio City, blend in making this a most interesting film. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

JUNGLE ARCHER, THE: World of Sports—Nerve tingling! The camera goes along with Tex Stone on a hunting trip into the jungles of Mexico and records the hazardous sport of big hunting with bow and arrow. Mrs. Stone proves herself a keen shot, too. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

GOING BYE BYE: Laurel and Hardy—Although these are somewhat old, they still pack a lot of entertainment.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

HELPING HANDS: Our Gang Comedies—Our Gang always pleases the children and this one in particular.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

HOBBIES: Passing Parade—Entertaining reel describing different hobbies people have. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

MEN OF STEEL: Musical Comedies—Just terrible how they could go out in the city of Hollywood and pick up a junk bunch like this and then sell it for entertainment. Worst I ever played in twenty-five years of business. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

MRS. LADYBUG: Technicolor Cartoons—These are very good short subjects in the cartoon line. Running time, 8 minutes.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

ROBOT WRECKS: Our Gang Comedies—Average Our Gang that pleased.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

VIVA MEXICO: Miniatures—This Miniature, narrated by James FitzPatrick, is a little above average. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Paramount

NATURE'S NURSERY: Paragraphics—Excellent. This series is all good. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

NIX ON HYPNOTRICKS: Popeye Cartoon—Very good, but not worth extra dough. What short subject is? Running time, 8 minutes.—E. L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

PEST PILOT: Popeye the Sailor—Good Popeye cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapeau, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

RED, WHITE AND BLUE HAWAII: Paragraphics—Very good short, especially at this time with the interest in Pearl Harbor. Running time, 10 minutes.—C. A. Smith, Regent Theatre, Chapeau, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

RHYTHM IN THE RANKS: Madcap Models—Another Puppet Toon in gay color from George Pal. Had many favorable comments on this new style of cartoon. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SNEAK, SNOOP AND SNITCH: Animated Antics—As bad as any I've ever seen. Running time, 8 minutes.—E. L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

story of a jockey and how he lives. It has in ten minutes what a feature has in eighty. It's a condensed version and loses no interest in its telling. Running time, 10 minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau Theatre, Hamtranc, Mich. General patronage.

MARCH OF TIME SERIES: Very fine pick of the product for the adult trade. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

MARCH OF TIME, NO. 2: "Norway in Revolt"—These subjects always do good here and this one is no exception. It's good and draws extra interest. The subject is timely and informative. Although this one is about half studio work, it tells a very good story. For extra business, I don't think there is anything better than these two-reelers. Running time, 20 minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau Theatre, Hamtranc, Mich. General patronage.

MR. MOUSE TAKES A TRIP: Walt Disney Cartoons—This one doesn't have much story, but it's good. Disney always is. Good color, good animation and good humor. Running time, 7 minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau Theatre, Hamtranc, Mich. General patronage.

MUSICAL BANDIT, THE: Ray Whitley—More comedy than usual. Music fair. Whitley still no actor. Running time, 17 minutes.—E. F. Stahl, Rialto Theatre, Melrose, N. M. Rural and small town patronage.

SNOW EAGLES: Sportsopes—Here is a subject that fits right into this time of the year. There are some very nice shots of Sun Valley and for those who ski some very useful information. For the general patrons it is a very good short, worth extra time on any screen. Running time, 9 minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau Theatre, Hamtranc, Mich. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BABY SEAL, THE: Terrytoons—This was a different cartoon because it had the seal in it and the children liked it very much.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

FOX AND THE RABBIT (REISSUE): Lantz Colored Cartoons—Good cartoon which pleased the children.—Miss Cleo Manry, Buena Vista Theatre, Buena Vista, Ga. Small town patronage.

IS EVERYBODY HAPPY: Ted Lewis and His Orchestra—This is about the worst two reeler I have run. Why doesn't Lewis give up? The music is poor and his moaning is awful. A customer said after hearing him, "If he's in such misery, why don't they shoot him?" Running time, 20 minutes.—E. L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

STRANGER THAN FICTION SERIES: Always interesting. These shorts are popular here because of the vast variety of subjects covered. An added attraction to any program. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. A. RHAPSODY IN RIVETS: Merrie Melodies Cartoons—This high hat stuff with picture drawn to fit Brahms Second Hungarian Rhapsody as played by a symphony orchestra. However, it will amuse. Musicians and students should enjoy every minute of it. Running time, 7 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SOCKEROO: Maxie Rosenbloom—Our audience got a lot of laughs from this one. Slapsie Maxie Rosenbloom as a college student sure made a hit and everyone enjoyed this comedy. ## Miscellaneous

BOMBER: Office of Emergency Management—Every time I book a gratis or defense reel, I always say: "Well, there goes some more time wasted." But this time I was wrong. Here is a short subject that you can be proud to run. It's dramatic. It tells a good story. It has very good photography and everyone enjoyed it, even though it was all about war. It's different. Running time, 11 minutes.—Peter Kavel, Campau Theatre, Hamtranc, Mich. General patronage.

BOMBER: Office of Emergency Management—Very good subject. Word of mouth advertising brought us several customers. This no-cast subject should play every theatre. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. F. Stahl, Rialto Theatre, Melrose, N. M. Small town and rural patronage.

Stage Grossed Half Million in Six Months

The legitimate theatre in Philadelphia goes into the second half of the 1941-42 season in better shape, both financially and in continued prosperity, than ever before in the last decade. As of the weekend, representing 17 attractions at three regular operating theatres, including the single week of the Mask and Wig show at the dark Erlanger Theatre, and representing 32 playing weeks, the mid-season total gross has reached more than a half million dollars. An impressive $527,300 taken in at the box-office is a $175,200 increase over the first half of the 1940-41 season, when the mid-season gross of $352,100 was heralded as most unusual for the legitimate theatre here—all of competitive interest to Philadelphia film exhibitors.

Moreover, when the 1941 year began, the theatre was by no means riding as high as it is with the starting of 1942. Last year, bookings for the two houses, Forrest and Locust St. theatres, were on a catch-as-catch-can basis. This season, with the Shubert interests returning the Walnut St. Theatre to the legitimate fold, all three Shubert houses are already set with bookings well into February. As a result, the impressive $994,500 grossed by the legitimate theatre here for the entire 1940-41 season, is expected to be exceeded by far by the time the curtain is rung down on the 1941-42 season. Since the theatre will increasingly play an important role in providing escape from wartime realities, and the purchases of luxury items curtailed by priorities, it is felt that such monies will be directed to the theatre box-office. Some observers seem to feel that the 1941-42 season will bring a total gross of almost $1,500,000.

Indicative of the trend is the record advance sale of $68,000 recorded for "Hellzapoppin'" at the Forrest Theatre before the curtain was raised on Christmas day, necessitating the extension of an original three-week booking to five weeks. And for its first nine performances, "Hellzapoppin'" established still another all-time record in grossing $38,192.

Increase Donations In Federation Drive

David Bernstein, co-chairman of the amusement division of the Federation for the support of Jewish Philanthropic Societies of New York and Brooklyn, revealed over the week end that many contributors have made larger contributions this year than in previous years in order to help make up the $1,750,000 additional needed to meet the increased cost of maintaining the institutions which the Federation helps support.

Barney Balaban, president of Paramount, and Major Albert Warner, vice president and treasurer of Warner Brothers, are co-chairmen with Mr. Bernstein of the amusement division.

Savini Returns

R. M. Savini, president of Astor Pictures, has returned to New York from a trip to the middle west, and reports a "boom" business, especially in the Kansas City area, where a number of new theatres have been erected.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

*An international association of showmen meeting weekly
in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress*

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor

GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

Looking At It From This Corner

THEATREMEN need not depend solely upon their enthusiasm, their obligation to a cause to sustain today's war background of showmanship. New season product is also to be reckoned in backing up boxoffice aggressiveness. Reports from various sectors indicate hearty customer response. Obviously, the audience is to be had for the buying of entertainment. The manager's main job continues to be the selling of it.

* * *

GLAD tidings now arrive to point up the weight of that last sentence. Some weeks back, these pages featured an account of ingenious and consistent activities by Manager Earle H. Bailey, of the Harris, in Warren, Ohio, on the circuit's annual Managers' Month contest. In all, a comprehensive job of promotion, the Bailey campaigns were further endorsed by John H. Harris, general manager, in awarding to Earle the contest's first prize.

* * *

PARAMOUNT bows in with 1942's first distributor-theatre exploitation contest wherein prizes of defense bonds are offered to Loewmen in the metropolitan area achieving the best records on a group of new Paramount releases. As a result, much fine showmanship may be looked for, especially since the material will also be eligible for the Quigley Awards. Through long practice, the manager's ear is keenly attuned to the sound of the extra bucks. Contests give off the kind of a tinkle to which he readily listens.

* * *

THOUGHT-FOOD for members to chew upon is conveyed via a communication from J. Harry Abbott, dwelling upon the consistent policy of generous display advertising for the Grant, in Georgetown, Ohio. "I can't see a show-selling value in the way most small-town ads are laid out," Harry comments. "People are getting so well educated, the theatre manager must really hustle to keep ahead of them these days."

* * *

FAR be it from this corner to tell a man what kind of a woman to marry, what kind of a car to buy, or how to keep his pass situation under control. But three recently reported campaigns are built around offers of a heluva lot of passes on regulation exploitations. Managers, not particularly concerned with the number of ducats they turn loose, might tighten up to go along with the national defense conservation drive to save waste paper.

The Quigley Grand Awards Judging for 1941 has been set for Tuesday, January 27, upon which date the judges, representing distribution, advertising and exhibition, will convene to vote upon the entries for the Silver and Bronze Grand Awards. The ceremonies will be marked by a luncheon to the Committee, tendered by Martin Quigley.

Entries to be judged will be selected from among those of theatremen scoring highest during the four Quarters of 1941, in the Quarter-Master Plaque, Medal and Citation classifications. Results in the last Quarter of 1941 are now being determined and will be announced in next week's issue.

* * *

PLACED in circulation months before this nation went to war, and illustrated on a following page, the importance of the Fox Midwest institutional ad series now takes on a new significance in building public morale. It occurs to Senn Lawlor, circuit ad head, "that if the industry as a whole should engage in this type of week-by-week selling of the greatest medium extant for the communication of American principles and ideals, not blatantly, but rather humbly, such a campaign would do untold good".

* * *

NUMEROUS Quigley Awards endorsements have been set down in the last issues and in this one. It is to be noted, and happily, that many of these expressions include praises as sound for the Round Table as a sterling medium of boxoffice promotion. This would bear out the fundamental purpose of this department—to act as a clearing house for ticket-selling ideas. Enthusiastically, the members assert that the Quigley Awards sell tickets.

As Chairman of the Entertainment Committee of the local "Mountain of Toys" sponsored by the Daily News, Ray Powell, manager of the Warner Theatre in West Chester, Pa., above center, proudly displays part of the aggregation collected at the theatre.

Animation formed background of Sam Gilman's front for "Tarzan's Secret Treasure" at Loew's in Harrisburg. Heads, arms and mouths of monkey figures atop boxoffice moved to accompaniment of jungle noises.

Cleveland's part in the defense movement as a key airplane manufacturing city was illustrated in Dave Bachner's timely float for "Keep 'Em Flying" at Warner's Hippodrome

ROUND TABLE IN PICTURES

Credited by Chris Christos as the most valuable "selling" display at the Lincoln, Chicago, is this 7-foot calendar, attractions noted by color cutouts from HERALD trade ads and posters, stapled to white background. Month, days, dates are in bright red.

Featured in one of the leading Broadway restaurant windows was the display on "The Man Who Came to Dinner", showing currently at the New York Strand. Star heads featured center of setpiece.

LATE EXPLOITATION FLASHES

WHEELER TIES HOPPER SHORTS TO LOCAL NEWSPAPER COLUMN

For his initial 1942 contribution, Ray Wheeler describes a recent cooperation with his local paper having to do with the new "Hedda Hopper Hollywood" shorts, playing at the Granada, South Bend, Ind. The paper recently took on the regular Hopper column service, so Wheeler proposed a tie-in wherein the daily would carry quarter-page co-ops, plugging the Hopper shorts at the theatre, plus the rest of the programs, and all "for free".

This quarter-page is had with every new subject in the series shown at the Granada. Ray permitted to write his own copy, which of course features the column as well. He receives this in exchange for a one-frame trailer mentioning the new newspaper service plus the name of the daily.

LIVINGSTON GIVES AWAY "RYE" FOR THE NEW YEAR'S EVE SHOW

In advance of his New Year's Eve show, at Century's Farragut, Brooklyn, Manager Murry Livingston had a man outside distributing small envelopes marked: "News to you for New Year's Eve". The man was dressed in straw hat, earmuffs, cane, lapel flower, summer white shoes, blue eyeglasses, but wore no theatre sign, his make-up proving the magnet. The envelopes contained messages addressed to "My Dear Patron", detailing all the big doings, plus the fact that a "bottle of rye" would be given to every adult attending.

Livingston kept to his promise, the customers receiving small medicine bottles, imprinted and filled with rye seeds. Label noted it was a souvenir from the theatre, the catch-line being: "It's pure rye".

PINCUS TIES "BLACKOUT" TO AIR RAID PRECAUTIONS

Hooking his date on "Pacific Blackout" at the Utah, Salt Lake City, to the official air raid instructions by the OCD, Charlie Pincus got out a black-and-white throw-away, 7 by 14 inches, carrying the detailed precautions adopted nationally. Eye-catcher head read: "Hot from the Headlines. The greatest entertainment scoop that ever blasted you out of your seat," etc.

Following the theatre credits came this: "The thrills in 'Pacific Blackout' are the real thing now. Official instructions on what to do in an air raid are as follows".

PLUGS REVIEW BOARD CHOICE TO SELL "CITIZEN KANE"

Playing "Citizen Kane" at the subsequent-run Lincoln, Chicago, Manager Chris Christos built his date on the heels of the recent selection of the picture by the National Board of Review. To circulate the fact widely and to use something out of the ordinary, Christos promoted miniature Western Union telegram blanks and envelopes, message emphasizing the

Annual RKO Fordham Football Rally Packs House, Gets Wide Publicity

How football events, which often take customers away from the theatre, can be turned into boxoffice and garner nationwide publicity was recently illustrated in the celebration, at the RKO Fordham, of the Fordham University football victory at the Sugar Bowl. Featured at the rally was a 1,200-foot reel by Pathe News made up of the game's highlights, advance and follow-up shots. On hand were the team, coaches, university heads, civic and community notables, the entire proceedings put on by Sol Schwartz, circuit division manager, assisted by Manager Irving Gold, John Cassidy and Ray Malone of Harry Mandel's home-office publicity staff.

Activities started some time back on the occasion of the fifth annual Fordham University Night at the theatre. Guests included the pigskin squad, student body, cheer leaders, university band, coaches and prominent citizens. Then the ball really started rolling on the night of the Fordham Victory Dinner, held on the campus, on December 3rd, where coverage was arranged with Pathe News. This event was attended by university heads, public officials and "name" sports writers, including Grantland Rice. The Pathe cameras picked up from here, taking scenes of the squad packing for the trip to New Orleans, boarding the train, activities en route and other shots, climaxed by highlights of the game and following celebrations.

On their return home, the Rams were given a big welcome, topped by the rally at the theatre, colorfully decorated in honor of the team. Speeches were made by Borough President Lyons, representing Mayor LaGuardia, university athletic heads, Coach Jim Crowley and others. After their showing, the special pictures were presented to the university by RKO officials. The house was packed with fans and students who followed the program and songs led by cheer leaders and the university band on the stage, in all making for one of the most memorable nights in the community.

Publicity, local and out-of-town, was vast. The New York papers followed-through, some with layouts of the proceedings, the theatre included in all the credits. The celebration, now a community event of importance, has also been found to add to the theatre's prestige throughout the metropolitan area.

Board's choice and dates. In addition, Chris had colored "flash" cards distributed by the cashiers in advance, spotting the selection under the heading, "Special News Flash".

TISDALE INVITES PATRONS TO TAKE PART IN QUIZ

As a builder for Friday nights at the Ga-Ana, Georgiana, Ala., Manager Felix H. Tisdale is successfully producing a stage quiz show in which patrons participate for prizes donated by merchants. When patron buys ticket, he is queried on his willingness to go up on the stage. If accepted, Tisdale writes patron's name on card, then draws 10 cards. Names drawn are called up and select questions from one box. Those answering correctly select slips from another box carrying names of the prizes. Those who miss get guest tickets for the next quiz show.

After first question round, an elimination is held with questions asked until one patron remains to receive the cash prize of defense stamps. Guest tickets are also given for accepted questions, most of which are required to deal with coming pictures advertised in papers and trailers. The Round Tabler notes that this is causing his customers to pay more attention to his ads.

STAGE STAR APPEARS IN PERSON FOR GLASS

Continuing his tieups with Broadway stage shows to exploit the attractions at Fabian's Paramount, Staten Island, Manager Elihu Glass reports the success of a personal appearance at the theatre of Joseph Schildkraut, now starring in "Clash By Night", to build interest in Glass' date on the M-G-M short, "Telltale Heart", in which Schildkraut also is featured. Since the action of the play takes place on Staten Island, Glass was able to sell Billy Rose, the producer, on the advantages of the appearance to increase interest in the stage drama among Island theatregoers.

The unusual nature of the promotion caused M-G-M to allow the theatreman the first booking of the short in the area, after its showing at the New York Astor on the same program with "Chocolate Soldier", which was duly noted in the Staten Island press along with other generous publicity on the hookup. The Schildkraut appearance took the form of an interview with Glass in which the star answered questions on the play and short, spoke on the difference in stage and screen acting. Elihu also points with pride to the fact that the New York papers also carried stories on the appearance, one of the "first-times" for theatres in his area.

F&M-men Stress "York" Contests

Widespread community interest in "Seigneur York" dates at neighborhood Fanchon & Marco St. Louis theatres was aroused in colorful promotions by the theatremen through newspaper contests and other exploitations, reported by Les Kaufman, divisional ad head, and represented by a bannered U. S. Army cannon display out front at the Shady Oak, by Manager Ray Parker, who placed an usher in uniform alongside carrying rifle for added atmosphere. Machine guns, rifles, gas masks were borrowed for lobby display and a similar showing obtained for one of the sector's most prominent windows.

Parker's newspaper contest offered guest tickets in a co-op tiein, wherein awards were made to readers assembling names of American heroes from the various ads, then listing the names telling what each was famous for. Outstanding publicity was a double-truck photo layout on the story.

At the Mikado, Manager Joe Goldstein hooked the American Legion to his promotion through an unusual two-column ad, paid for by the Legion, endorsing the picture and urging public attendance. The organization also sponsored a presentation to the community's outstanding American, staged at the theatre. Direct mail was also employed by the Legion to sell the date to members.

Legion Buys Bond on Stage

Goldstein's contest was centered around a co-op page, a key word in italics set in each ad, and prizes given to those clipping all the italicized words to make a sentence reading: "I am proud to be an American." Many windows were had, the Round Tabler receiving further aid from the Legion on display in receiving permission to banner army tanks located on the post's ground. The Legion paraded to the theatre on opening night, where a purchase of a $500 defense bond by the organization was consummated on the stage, the Postmaster of St. Louis being present to make the actual sale.

Contest stuff at the Hi-Pointe and West End was effected with the community sheet, guest tickets offered for readers making the most words out of the title and the two theatres. Promoted heralds were distributed over the area, and theatre banners hung outside so as to be visible from five adjoining streets, the banners spotlighted at night. Announcements made at Better Council Film meetings also aided.

Mayoral Endorsement in Lobby

Endorsement of the picture by the St. Louis Mayor was made into a 40 by 60 blowup by Manager Marvin Stiver at the Shenandoah and added to atmospherically with a machine-gun display. Miniature scene exhibit using soldiers figures gathered attention, as did the personnel wearing overseas lettered caps. Ushers called further attention to the date ahead with miniature cutout letters of the title worn against their shirtfronts, and lit up to flash the date. This was done with flashlights behind the gelatine covered letters. Stiver used an attractor for the front—a silhouetted soldier figure behind frosted glass, lit via flasher alternating red, white and blue color lamps.

SOME FOX MIDWEST "INSTITUTIONALS"

"Gee, Dad, It's Just Like The Movies!"

Many youngsters on their first vacation trip this summer found that the movies had given them a preview of this great free land of ours! Keep going to the movies, youngsters, to learn and to be entertained.

I Learned It at the Movies

Teachers know the value of visual education...and while the chief purpose of the movies is to entertain, a lot of knowledge that sticks is mixed in—science, travel, history, art, literature and current news of the world at large.

THANKS FOR THE TANKS

You'd be surprised how many tanks these movie tax pennies are buying! Every time you go to a show you are helping the Defense Program, besides getting your money's worth of fun.

The Army Demands Movies

Every camp and fort has one or more movie theatres...the recreational directors know that effortless relaxation is necessary to army health and morale...It is just as necessary to civilian welfare... You need it... Relax, see a movie tonight!

BEFORE the war started, Fox Midwest theatres began using a series of two-column newspaper "institutionals" throughout the territory, based on the importance of the motion picture as an educational and morale-building factor in a nation preparing for war. Of the series of 50 prepared by Senn Lawlor, division ad head, the above are representative, with others of topical nature placed according to season or current developments.

"Amateurs" Steady Holiday Business

Starting in the middle of November and continuing for five weeks, a series of amateur shows put on at the Commercial Theatre, in Chicago, by J. W. Shaffer, publicist, and W. D. Galligan, manager, in conjunction with local jeweler and one of the dailies did much to maintain December grosses. Shows were put on Saturday evenings on the theatre stage and broadcast over Station WJOB. Weekly prizes were given to winners during the four preliminary shows and grand prizes for the best amateurs in the finals. Applause was judged by an automatic electric applause meter. Finalists were also auditioned over station WCFL for an added prize of a week's engagement at the downtown Oriental.

Jeweler paid all costs, the newspaper contributing daily publicity and publishing entry blanks which, after being filled in, were to be brought to the jewelry store. In addition, the paper also came in with large display ads to boost further interest. Other seasonal activities included a New Year's eve midnight show, which the theatremen plugged far in advance, premiere publicity concentrating on trailers and lobby posters. In addition to the screen programs, special stage attractions were listed, noise makers and other appropriate material distributed to the crowded house.

Term Pass Offered First 1942 Baby

Much also was made of a 1942 promotion with a term pass offered to the parents of the first baby born in the sector during the year. This was noted in special newspaper advertising and along with the pass other gifts were also promoted for the proud parents. During December further slack was taken up by an arrangement wherein the house was rented to a local steel corporation for five days with specially prepared film presented for the factory employees. The picture, a commercial, told the story of the company's work in national defense, sequences including manufacture of military material and other company matters having to do with national defense. Leading industrial, professional and businessmen in the area were guests at the opening show to give the tiein a newspaper sendoff.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Atmospheric Lobby Used By Bickerstaff on "Yank"

For his publicity on "Yank in the R.A.F." at the L. & J. Palace, in Athens, Ga., Frank Bickerstaff had his artist cut out a one sheet and then paint pictures of an airport using small toy planes in front of the hangar. To create interest in this, Frank booked the picture for the homecoming of the Georgia team which had played Dartmouth. Publicity director of the University was contacted for photographs of the team and these together with scene stills were used on the field which the artist had drawn.

To create further interest, Bick sold the editor of local daily on running a seven column spread which features Recreation of Dunkirk Inferno. Due to the present world conditions, editor was anxious to cooperate and the spread was run two days in advance of opening.

Art Exhibitions Aid Fox Grosses

Co-sponsored by the county art association and the Fox West Coast California, San Bernardino, Cal., to observe National Art Week, was an exhibition of paintings by local amateurs, credited by Manager Charles Long with definitely building the grosses. Carried over a period of weeks, the exhibit was changed every five weeks to keep alive critical and public interest.

This was done also to stimulate a vote contest held in conjunction wherein the public was invited to select for special awards the pictures most fancied. Balloting was held in different divisions, water color and oil, and for the grand award, the results made known from the stage on the last night of the exhibition. Added patronage was drawn from art centers along the Coast and the consistent publicity obtained from the county press.

At the circuit's Chinese, in Hollywood, Manager Spyros Cardas also made much of a recent art display, composed of intriguing water colors from the brush of a famed Chinese artist, now visiting in California and showing the paintings on behalf of the China war fund. The exhibit was hung in the foyer and widely publicized in the local press by George Watters, circuit exploiter.

Art groups, amateur and professional, were informed of the showings and as a result of the intensive campaign the theatre received more inquiries about the display than any other previous presentation at the theatre. Since the exhibit was inside the theatre, Cardas credits it with boosting the grosses considerably plus an extra generous sum realized for the war relief.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Street Ballys Aid Palmquist's Dates

Two ushers, one pulling the other along Duluth streets in a small cart, were employed by Don Palmquist, at the Strand, for his "When Ladies Meet" campaign. The one pulling the cart carried signs reading: "I lost a bet" and "When Ladies Meet" is terrific!"; and the other, "I won the bet" and "When Ladies Meet" is a great picture!"

For his "Lady Be Good" promotion, Palmquist had a man walking through the streets with a sign reading: "Strand Theatre unfair to other theatres in Duluth because it is showing the best picture, etc."

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

"York" Week Proclaimed By Mayor for Graefe

Contacting head of the American Legion in his town for a special "Sergeant York" week, Herbert Graefe, at the Wisconsin, Wisconsin Rapids, secured cooperation of them and the Mayor, who issued a proclamation. Recruiting sergeant also aided, banners hung across streets reading: "Enlist during Sergeant York Week." Opening day Legion members, boy and girl scouts and Veterans of Foreign Wars paraded through center of town and to theatre, where a retreat ceremony was held, entire program being broadcast, and newspapers came through with stories and art work.

Next week's Round Table will include results in the last Quarter of 1941, for which the selections of Quarter-Master Plaques, Medals and Citations are now being studied. Shortly after, on Tuesday, January 27th, the Grand Awards Judging Committee will convene to vote upon the winners of the Silver and Bronze Grand Awards for the year, from among the top finishers in the four Quarters of 1941.

FIND AWARDS STIMULATE GROSSES

LEO G. JUSTIN

*Walter Reade Theatres
New York*

Will be very happy to help carry on the good work of the Quigley Awards by serving as one of the Judging Committee for 1942.

I have always felt that these awards serve more than the purpose of stimulating men in the field to greater activity, but has also been the means to securing possible future executives to carry on the work of operating groups of theatres.

ARNOLD STOLTZ

*Manager, Warner's Avon

There is no doubt that the Quigley Awards do a great job for the entire picture industry but what it does for the individual theatre manager in addition to properly directing his thinking is to make him realize that he is really a part and parcel of that industry and gives him a dignity and respect for both himself and his job.

From your weekly meetings of the Round Table you learn that showmanship is like other pleasant things; it becomes a habit and the more you sell the shows you play, the more you realize the need to sell each show every week and you find out that a good campaign leaves you with a "lift" that beats any drink yet concocted.

WILLIAM K. SAXTON

City Manager, Loew's Theatres Baltimore, Md.

Quigley Awards not only keep first-runs pepped up in exploiting product, but they have created a competitive showmanship among subsequent-run managers, a thing that was never heard of before only in rare instances.

J. R. MAC EACHRON

*Manager, Malco Paramount
Jackson, Tenn.*

As the year closes, I wish to express my appreciation for being permitted to compete in the Quigley Awards. This is the finest "insurance" I know of for all theatre managers. Insurance? Just that, for when a manager is active, and he must be to compete, he is insuring his job.

I wouldn't take anything for the Awards I have been fortunate in winning and my efforts have not been without pleasing results, financially.

ROY O. PRYTZ

Duluth, Minn.*

Immediately upon receipt of my two Quarter Master Citations, I had them framed and on display in prominent lobby positions. This in addition to stories in dailies caused considerable comment, but I believe the greatest advantage was the personal feeling of achievement and the sincere congratulations of my superiors that caused me to work even harder on later campaigns which showed very definite financial benefits.

Working for an Independent, I am fortunate in receiving top money and every possible consideration at all times, but feel that should I ever have occasion to seek a new berth, my Citations and campaign material will pay darn good dividends.

HARRY ROSE

*Manager, Loew's Globe
Bridgeport, Conn.*

To me, the winning of any of the awards is recognition of a job well done, something in the way of competition to strive for and attain, also knowing that once having obtained one award, with a little extra effort and thought, one may secure a higher medal or plaque. To date have received a Quarter-Master Citation, but I won't be satisfied until I win a higher award, having this in mind with every campaign or stunt.

I believe it enhances your prestige in the eyes of fellow showmen, with better salary and promotion a natural after effect.

EDGAR GOTH

*Director Advertising and Publicity
Staten Island Fabian Theatres*

The recognition, both in the Home Office and in the field, resulting from the Quigley Awards, has been a definite incentive toward healthy competitive, live-wire and ingenious showmanship among the men in the Staten Island group of Fabian theatres.

PETE EGAN

*Manager, F. P. Canadian Palace
Calgary, Alta., Canada*

I have been striving for the past three years for a Quigley Silver or Bronze, have won over 17 Quigley Quarter-Master Citations and will continue to keep trying as I believe it's a great incentive for any manager to go on and do bigger and better.

DAN S. TERRELL

*Publicity Manager
Loew's Washington Theatres*

It's always a pleasure to report that your excellent department in the HERALD is a help in at least two ways: by keeping us posted on what the other fellow is doing and by giving a recognition to our own efforts which gratifies us—and gives us an added incentive to keep plugging away, looking for new publicity possibilities.

The Quigley Awards represent a tangible evidence of work well done, and I'm sure any showman would be proud to be included in the listings. I hope to be in there, fighting harder than ever in 1942.

GEORGE E. FRENCH

BILL MORTON

*Manager and Publicity Director, respectively, RKO Albee
Providence, R. I.*

To say that the three years we have participated in the Manager's Round Table have been well spent puts it mildly. It's the sort of incentive that keeps one in there punching.

It's very interesting to us in this first run house, playing pictures often prior to general release, to be able to compare what we believed was the best method of exploiting a picture in our city—as compared with others. Of course the awards one receives shows that there was something different in the campaign.

The Manager's Round Table in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD has proven itself the only place where one could find a complete round-up of exploitation material on a picture for an acid comparison.

HAIL ROUND TABLE AS IDEA MEDIUM

ED FITZPATRICK

Manager, Loew's Poli
Waterbury, Conn.

We all get quite a kick out of trying to get somewhere in the Awards trying to have the judges decide that we are able to promote space, make tie-ups and do general publicity that will react for the benefit of the theatre.

Many good ideas come out that while the exact stunt may not be worked here we are able to twist it around and work it to fit the local situation, that is the first section that everyone in the theatre turns to when it comes in.

DAVID BACHNER

Advertising Department
Warner Cleveland Theatres

Are Cleveland papers tough to crack? . . . are local merchants uncooperative? . . . is our exploitation ahead or behind other towns? Comparing experiences of theatre men in the pages of the Managers' Round Table, readily answers these and many other related questions. Your service stimulates the imagination by providing a multitude of ideas, either new or with fresh slants.

"DOC" TWEDT

Manager, Lido
Manly, Iowa

I most certainly believe that the Quigley Awards stimulate showmanship. They are an inspiration to every theatre manager that is constantly seeking ways to increase his box-office receipts. Not only that, but being published and commented upon by you in the Motion Picture Herald there is that exchange of promotions, ideas and gags. More power to you in inaugurating the ninth year of the Quigley Awards.

LOU S. HART

Manager, Schine's Hippodrome
Gloversville, N. Y.

I have always felt that the Quigley Awards are a manifestation of an interest by the executive branches of our great industry in their manpower.

All too infrequently are the men in the theatres—the firing line of the motion picture industry—given public credit for their constant efforts in the theatres of the nation. The Quigley Awards make this all possible. I'm sure I voice the sentiments of the great majority of theatre men when I say "Good work—keep it up."

BILL ELDER

Manager, Loew's Theatre
Indianapolis, Ind.

This year as in the past we look forward with great interest in competing for the Quigley Awards. Our sincere thanks for this fine medium of exchanging ideas.

HAROLD H. THOMAS

Manager, Malco Fulton
Fulton, Ky.

I derive a keen pleasure from competing with fellow managers in the field of exploitation.

It gives one a very great degree of satisfaction to know that his campaigns receive the approval of such competent judges as the Quigley Awards committee supplies.

FRANCIS DEERING

Manager, Loew's Theatre
Houston, Tex.

Through the years the Quigley Awards represent the only consistent means of recognition for motion picture promotion activities.

Fly-by-night contests come and go and are soon forgotten, but the Quigley Awards are an incentive for year round activity and the steady flow of promotional benefits for the Motion Picture industry.

We sincerely trust that 1942, in spite of War, Hell and high water, will be a banner year for you and the Managers' Round Table.

HERMAN ADDISON

Manager, Schine's Paramount
Glens Falls, N. Y.

The Awards speak for themselves. Nothing I could say would be more effective than the fact that participating members are naturally active and activity has ever been the basic foundation for the advancement and improvement of the manager who is going places. Expect to find me working for the Plaques again this coming season because they not only look good on the wall, they indicate an effort that has been recognized.

CHARLES ZINN

Manager, Century
Minneapolis, Minn.

I have always received many excellent ideas from the Managers' Round Table section of the Motion Picture Herald. Some of our merchandising plans, after completion, may not have been recognized by the originator, but, he should receive full credit for planting the seed for the thought which is, after all, the most important. Nothing ever grew without a seed.

Because this section has been so helpful, we have tried to reciprocate by sending in some of our merchandising plans with the thought some manager, somewhere may get an idea from it which will be as helpful to him as some of them have been to us.

LESLIE V. CAMPBELL

Manager, Strand
Trail, B. C., Canada

Nothing has given me more personal satisfaction and the urge to step out and do better than the three Quarter Master Citations I have received this year, and the thought that my efforts were judged by real showmen.

I don't think there is any better way to praise the Motion Picture Herald and its Quigley Awards Competition, and point out the boxoffice value derived therefrom, than to say, my Bosses stress the point of taking part.

MAURICE DRUKER

Manager, Loew's State
Memphis, Tenn.

Always trying to stimulate the box-office, knowing that other showmen are competing adds zest to our own promotions. Even though the enhancement of our prestige isn't conspicuous, we feel certain by hitting the ball continuously recognition must come. Your competitive award policy keeps that thought alive.

FURTHER AWARDS ENDORSEMENT

ALBERT E. SINDLINGER

*Director, Advertising and Publicity
The March of Time*

I was glad to hear that you are continuing the Quigley Awards for 1942 and will be very happy to serve on your judging committee.

I know full well the value of the Quigley Awards to theatre managers from personal experiences, as you know. The efforts that managers put forth in preparing the campaigns for submission to the committee does stimulate business to a great degree, and too, the Quigley Awards give managers the opportunity for national recognition which is so difficult, especially for a manager of a suburban theatre or in a small town.

That to me is most important because manpower and recognition of talent in 1942 is going to be an even greater problem.

SEYMOUR MORRIS

*Director of Publicity
Schine Circuit*

Personally I would like to see all of our managers participate in the Quigley Awards Competition. It is through media like these that a manager can compare his efforts with those of others and take an inventory of what kind of a job he is doing. We have to realize that in order to get ideas in this business, we must give them, and the Quigley Awards offer an exchange of thoughts that is vitally important to the life blood of this industry.

ARNOLD N. GATES

*Manager, Loew's Park
Cleveland, Ohio*

The Quigley Awards should by now be considered an important part of the business. They are an established incentive to theatremen everywhere. Their value from every point of consideration is unquestioned.

JACK E. LYKES

Manager, Loew's Valentine Toledo, Ohio

The Quigley Awards are an inspiration to the men in the field of theatre management.

FRANK MURPHY

Syracuse, N. Y.*

It is our opinion that the Quigley Awards are a never ending stimulus to box office showmanship, not only with the prestige which goes with the winning, but also for the ready exchange of exploitable ideas in each issue of the Herald.

ROBERT BEREZIN

*Manager, Elgin
Ottawa, Ont., Canada*

Awards certainly do stimulate boxoffice showmanship. They make a fellow think just that much more about putting over a big campaign on a picture.

Regarding winning of a Quarter-Master Plaque, Medal or Citation, I believe that winning raises your prestige with your bosses and the future takes care of itself as to promotion, salary raise, etc. But you have to keep on working and winning Awards to show that you can keep up the good work.

CHARLES REED JONES,

Director, Advertising, Publicity Republic Pictures Corp.

Of course I will be glad to co-operate with you in judging the Quigley Awards for 1942.

There isn't any question in my mind that the Quigley Awards serve a very definite and important purpose. Your plan of bringing this important recognition to exploitation men in the field has made countless numbers of them do far better jobs than before in their efforts to gain such recognition.

And, of course, every intelligent exploitation effort means increased business at the box-office, and so, I do not think it is out of order to say that the Quigley Awards have contributed to better theatre business.

CLAYTON S. CORNELL

*Manager, Schine's State
Tupper Lake, N. Y.*

Great incentive to beat your own past efforts and the other fellows as well.

Such competition keeps one active and on their toes, with an ear to the ground for new ideas.

JOE FEULNER

*Manager, Des Plaines
Des Plaines, Ill.*

A sense of "importance" to our industry, and an inner feeling of well-being by the manager for the recognition he receives—these are only two by-products of the increased box office grosses that the Quigley Awards stimulate.

Sincerely hope that this year's contributions from exhibitors to the Round Table will be the most successful in the history of this important motion picture promotion department.

CHUCK SHANNON

Manager, Cathaum State College, Pa.

The Quigley Awards, without a shadow of doubt, offer an excellent medium to every showman to improve his situation, both from the standpoint of Box-Office Stimulation and personal prestige. It has done just that for me!

Thus, the inauguration of the ninth consecutive, successful birthday of the Quigley Awards, certainly speak volumes.

WILL HARPER

Manager, Empress Kelowna, B C.

Regarding the promotion or salary rises or bonuses coming from my having won citations in your valuable paper, I must say I have benefited considerably personally in the knowledge I have tried to do my job well and have even been mentioned. All I ask and work for is the conscientious satisfaction of striving to do my best. If I can satisfy my conscience, then all else will be satisfied.

JACK GRANARA

Manager, Keith Memorial Boston, Mass.

The winning of a Quigley Award definitely gives a man in the field the inspiration and enthusiasm to continue in high gear. I believe it makes one feel that his efforts and accomplishments are recognized in no small measure.

EXPLOITATION BRIEFS FROM A-FIELD

Street bally that proved effective for Roy Helson at the Indiana, in East Chicago, Ind., for "The Bride Came C.O.D." was girl dressed in bridal attire who toured city in bannered car. Public address system on car plugged picture, while car would stop at intersections and "bride" distributed heralds. For "In the Navy," cutout beaver board boat on rollers was propelled around area covering all schools at breaks. Lobby display featured naval posters.

Concentrating on school children, Allan Easson at the Oakwood, in Toronto distributed imprinted blotters on "Caught in the Draft" and "The Reluctant Dragon." In addition, these were available at banks, stores, offices, etc. Tinted heralds were distributed in addition.

Eye arresting was the front of the Kenosha Theatre, Kenosha, Wis., ahead of "Moon Over Miami," when Francis B. Schlax planted a life-size cutout of Betty Grable over his marquee. Girls in abbreviated costumes toured the city in bannered car, carrying title imprinted grips, visiting stores, night clubs, etc.

With considerable interest manifested in the series "Football This Week," Hal Thomas at the Malco Fulton, in Fulton, Ky., secured atmospheric window display consisting of grass covered floor representing a football field with goal posts, etc. On the back drop were posters, playdates, school pennants, megaphones, etc.

Neat publicity breaks were accorded "Chocolate Soldier" through the efforts of Carl Rogers at Loew's Granada, in Cleveland, the theatremen arranging for the presentation of a Nelson Eddy trophy to high school team winning football game held on Thanksgiving Day. Papers came through with stories and cut of Rogers presenting the prize.

Dressed in the same type of uniform worn by Nelson Eddy in "The Chocolate Soldier," a "mechanical" man toured the streets of Altoona, Pa., during the campaign for the film put over by Dave Murphy, State.

A stunt that attracted a great deal of attention was the Santa Claus gag used by Louis Guidetti, State, Charleroi, Pa., for his "Babes on Broadway" campaign. He had a Santa on the streets several days after Christmas with a sign on his back reading: "I just had to stay around to see 'Babes on Broadway.'"

Reaching students in almost every local school, Clare Southworth, Bentley, Monongahela, Pa., arranged for announcements about her "Kathleen" playdate at the daily junior and senior high school assemblies.

A tie-up with Life Savers, arranged with the company's main office, permitted Robert Neilson, State, Johnstown, Pa., to distribute several thousand packages, each carrying "Babes on Broadway" copy.

ABELSON IMPRINTS DATES ON DOILIES

As a refreshing switch from the imprinted paper napkin advertising, Art Abelson reports a new slant on this restaurant tiein by using the paper lunch plate doilies instead for dates at the Lake, in Devil's Lake, N. D. Thus, when diners are seated, the first thing they see on the doilies before them is the theatre advertising. In exchange, Abelson divides the space with the restaurant with tiein food copy.

Street bally that attracted the anticipated attention was fellow costumed as W. C. Fields who covered downtown streets of Syracuse ahead of Dick Feldman's date on "Never Give a Sucker an Even Break." Lad distributed cards reading: "Just discovered the greatest tonic in the world. It's the picture to see," etc., these were printed up in prescription form. Covering the walk under the marquee copy was written in colored crayon: "You're a sucker if you don't see . . ."

To sell "Birth of the Blues" at the Ritz Theatre, in McGehee, Ark., C. B. King had boys distribute programs in surrounding towns in a house-to-house canvass. Scene mat of Bing Crosby and Mary Martin was given good space in the local daily and numerous window displays landed.

For the Australian-made picture "40,000 Horsemen" at the RKO Temple, in Rochester, Lou Mayer held a special screening for newspaper critics, editors of foreign papers, etc., which brought favorable reviews. Several different radio announcements were spotted, and papers came through with scene mats and stories.

Despite the difficulties of theatre promotion in wartime Australia, a well-rounded job was done by L. J. Smith, acting manager of the Wintergarden Theatre, in Ipswich, for his date on "North West Mounted Police." The Round Tabler led off with teaser announcements twice daily over radio stations two weeks ahead, trailers; house-to-house and school distribution of heralds and lobby displays. Numerous windows were promoted and fleet of trucks carried banners advertising the date.

A 50-voice chorus in front of the theatre, floodlights and green flares and girls in Welsh costumes were used for atmosphere by Round Tabler Willard Matthews for the pre-release showing of "How Green Was My Valley" at the Comerford Theatre in Scranton, Pa. The showing was sponsored by the Cambrian Society of Lackawanna County with both local radio stations broadcasting the opening and the arrival of guests. Traffic was closed off in the theatre block during the opening.

Concentrating on the schools, D. M. Dillenbeck, ahead of "It Started With Eve" at the Rialto Theatre, in Bushnell, Ill., distributed a nice red, juicy apple to each teacher in the local schools. Card attached carried copy: "It Started With Eve. From your pet, the Rialto Theatre." Superintendent of Schools cooperated to the extent of calling one child from each class to distribute the apples.

Counter cards plugging Gene Autry records were used in five and dime stores as part of Ed May's advance exploitation on "Down Mexico Way" at the Schine Washington Theatre, in Maysville, Ky. Life size cutouts of the star were used in lobby ahead and out front during run, while attraction cards were mailed to box holders in rural routes and distributed house-to-house in the city.

For two Polish pictures, "Two Thieves at a Wedding" and "Maryanne" at the Strand, in Erie, Pa., M. H. Parker contacted the ministers of the four Polish parishes and secured their cooperation to the extent of having them urge attendance at the picture. Among other things was a radio program two weeks in advance on the Polish Hour over WLEU. Window cards were placed in Polish stores and clubs and trailer run ahead.

Half-page co-op ad was promoted by Bob Fulton of the Des Moines, in Des Moines, ahead of "Birth of the Blues." Banner line read: "Believe me, these buys and 'The Birth of the Blues' are good." Star cuts were spotted throughout the page.

Hundreds of candy kisses, surrounded by appropriate stills from "Smilin' Through," were planted in a local window by R. W. Hornick, Orpheum, Connelville, Pa. Guest tickets were awarded those guessing nearest the exact number of kisses displayed.

A local department store cooperated with J. C. Keefe, Cambria, Johnstown, Pa., by awarding a pup similar to Asta in "Shadow of the Thin Man" to the writer of the best letter on the topic, "What I'd do with a cousin to Asta."

For "The Bride Came C. O. D., Sam Freedman, at the Centre Theatre, in St. Catharines, Ont., had one of his ushers carry a dummy of a woman around town on his shoulder. Fastened to the arms of the dummy, hanging behind the boy was a card appropriately worded with title, stars and playdates. On "The Ape" Sam ran teaser ads in the newspaper three days previous to opening and had dressed in ape costume tour streets.

Atmospheric lobby was installed by S. Yellen ahead of "Dive Bomber" at the De Luxe Theatre, in the Bronx. Round Tabler promoted use of a mounted airplane engine, machine guns, parachute and three model planes from the Rockefeller Centre Museum of Science and Industry.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

Woman of the Year (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Tracy and Hepburn Entertain

Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn entertain without letdown for the 112 minutes of this excursion into the uptodate at the humorous expense of some modern institutions and in the interests of some basic ones, including matrimony. It is a film designed for people who know their way around and what's going on, but it also contains plenty of laughs for all the varieties of customers.

Miss Hepburn portrays with skill and understanding a newspaper woman, columnist and lecturer on world affairs, a character which those who choose to do so can identify as the Dorothy Thompson type.

Mr. Tracy portrays, taking advantage of the technique of understatement, a sports columnist employed by the same newspaper who finds himself, after a battle of wits with the lady, in love with the "woman of the year," ultimately married to her, in spite of a different in opinions as to whether a woman's place is in the home or flitting about the world in quest of the news in the making.

Ring Lardner, Jr., and Michael Kanin, writers of the original screenplay, start out on a sophisticated level and maintain a high pitch of humour throughout save for brief but powerful intervals of drama. It is well toward the end of the picture when they arrive, normally and effectively, at the seriousness of the basic situation, and the conversion of the fame-stricken wife to the home-loving husband's ideals of domestic solidarity is arrived at earnestly and in convincing manner.

Dialogue is of the best and many episodes rich in amusement on their own behalf figure in the continuity. The tone of the picture in whole and a few of the sequences in particular place it in the adult classification both in point of topic and treatment.

Production is by Joseph L. Mankiewicz and direction by George Stevens, both of whom are entitled to a taking of bows.

Bombay Clipper (Universal)

Spy Melodrama

Packed with all the dramatic adventure and intrigue that is usually associated with India and the Far East, "Bombay Clipper" is a swift paced story of foreign spies representing an unnamed country who attempt to steal a diamond treasure valued at $5,000,000 being shipped on the Bombay Clipper from India to England as a token of inter-empire solidarity and good will.

William Gargan competently heads the cast as the glib-tongued foreign correspondent assigned to uncover the reason for the shipment of diamonds, and Irene Hervey portrays his bride regretting the marriage because of her husband's all-absorbing profession despite his many promises to give up his world traveling job and settle down.

Although the picture is somewhat dated since it was completed before war started in the Pacific and most of the film's action is centered around that area, there is much to provide almost any audience who enjoy this type of screen fare with an entertaining and exciting evening in the theatre.

Marshall Grant, associate producer, and Jack Rawlins, director, have kept the narrative unwinding at a steady pace and the dialogue balanced evenly with the amount of action.

We Were Dancing (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Comedy of Marital Errors

Designed primarily for showmen catering to audiences who prefer and enjoy sophisticated comedy, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer offers a film version of Noel Coward's comedy "Tonight at 8:30," which played the Broadway stage during the 1936-37 theatrical season with Mr. Coward and Gertrude Lawrence in the leading roles. The film version, entitled "We Were Dancing," has in its starring positions Norma Shearer and Melvyn Douglas who eke out a successful existence as "professional guests" to the wealthy society seeking royal titles to glamorize their house parties, estates and lodges.

Directed by Robert Z. Leonard, who has become identified with sophisticated comedy, the dialogue and situations sometimes overreaches for sprightliness causing a lull in the progression of the theme while unwinding the complexities of the plot. However, the wider scope possible in transferring such an out-and-out stage piece to the screen is evident by the well taken opportunities for the injection of deeper interior sets and bits of elaborate indoor and outdoor scenery and costumes.

On the screen Miss Shearer and Mr. Douglas, as handsome and attractive as in any previous ventures, handle their roles competently in the characterizations of the "titled" couple which made New York followers of the legitimate stage laugh for many successive weeks. In supporting portrayals are Gail Patrick as the forgotten love of Mr. Douglas who succeeds in breaking up his happy married life with Miss Shearer, and Lee Bowman as the wealthy and successful divorce lawyer who is literally left at the altar when his bride-to-be flees with her new found suitor. Marjorie Main, as the judge in the divorce suit which develops, lends many moments of comedy in her limited part, while Alan Mowbray, Florence Bates and others extract the utmost from their parts.

Throughout the picture there is an undertone of society sophistication in purveying the lives and adventures of the two "guests" which keeps the production in the adult bracket. The dialogue and situations, however are not quite as outspoken as the numerous so-called sophisticated comedies which are now in release.

Previewed at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer projection room in New York. The screening was attended by representatives of the trade papers who had little comment to make on the picture as a whole, but who found a few moments of enjoyment in the presentation.—G. S.

Jail House Blues

(Universal)
Comedy about Criminals

A novelty among penitentiary pictures and among comedies, this adventure in humour makes comedians of its criminals and treats of racketeering for purposes of laughter. It furnishes an hour of different and, in the main, diverting screen material.

The story by Paul Gerard Smith, scripted by himself and Harold Tarshis, is about a convict so engrossed in producing the prison show that he resists pardoning, departing the penitentiary unwillingly, temporarily and with leave to return in time for the show after capturing the escaped convict who was to be his prima donna. While outside he spends some time in putting his racketeering mother's affairs to rights, which is to say to wrongs, and picks up a tenor whose enforced performance in the show gets him a Broadway contract, cements a romance and brings on the quick but appropriate ending.

Nat Pendleton, Robert Paige, Elizabeth Risdon and Warren Hymer are the standouts in a balanced cast.

Production by Ken Goldsmith and direction by Albert S. Rogell combine to extract a maximum of screen results from the budget.

Arizona Terrors

(Republic)
Western

This is a well paced, exciting western and one of the best of this series. Don "Red" Barry is the star and the man who destroys the carefully laid plans of land grant swindlers. Destroying those plans involves hard riding, shooting and fist fights—the usual ingredients of any western. It all adds up the right way.

It is the opening of the twentieth century. An adventurer, posing as a Spanish nobleman, produces a document which purports to show that in 1781, King Charles III of Spain granted his ancestors a certain area comprising one million acres of choice grazing land. The claim is upheld in court and the impostor immediately starts a reign of terror, imposing taxes and evicting those unable to pay. Barry and his side-kick, Al St. John, become "ghost riders," robbing the tax collectors and returning the money to the ranchers. Caught, they are sentenced to die but the sheriff fakes the execution and the "ghost riders" live to expose the fantastic swindle.

George Sherman was associate producer and director.

A Yank On The ## Burma Road

(MGM)
Action and War in China

That eternally popular "Yank," who proved his worth in "A Yank at Oxford" and "A Yank in the R. A. F.," appears again to further advantage in "A Yank on the Burma Road," and since the Burma Road now is of timely significance, the title is unquestionably one of strong box-office possibilities.

The plot revolves around Barry Nelson, a New York taxi driver, who, because he has attained fame for capturing two desperate gangsters, is asked by Chinese charity organizations to supervise the driving of trucks over the Burma Road, which he accepts. At Rangoon he meets Laraine Day, who because she is having visa difficulties, induces him to take her along. He ultimately discovers she is married and is anxious to locate her husband, an aviator suspected of working for the Japanese. After a number of adventures, hazards and contact with the enemy, Nelson gets his trucks through,

Miss Day's husband is killed, and they are both free to resume their romance.

There are a number of good action scenes throughout—in the beginning, with two vicious gangsters attempting a get-away in the subway, the trials and dangers which face the hero in his endeavor to get the trucks over the Burma Road, and a battle with the Japanese, all of which should prove of interest to action lovers.

The original screen play by Gordon Kahn, Hugo Butler and David Lang is up to the minute in its timeliness and calculated to arouse sympathy and patriotism, and director George B. Seitz, responsible for so many of the "Andy Hardy" pictures, has kept the picture moving at a reasonable pace. Samuel Marx was the producer.

With a provocative title, contemporary story, and action with trucks and with the Japanese, our avowed enemy, "A Yank on the Burma Road" has the ingredients of popular appeal.

Saddle Mountain Roundup

(Monogram)
Western Adventure

Spiced throughout with such western songs as "Little Brown Jug," "The Doggone Dogie Got Away," and "That Little Green Valley of Mine," The Range Busters return in another of their vehicles for Monogram and are called upon to solve the murder of an old rancher.

Ray Corrigan and John King are the justice seeking cowboys who also handle the romantic interest in the picture in vieing for the affections of the girl, played by Lita Conway. Max Terhune and his ventriloquist's dummy are the third members of the Range Busters' combination lending the comedy to the production.

Produced by George W. Weeks and directed by S. Roy Luby this episode in the series of adventures for the three is on a par with previous endeavors.

Report from Russia

(Artkino)
Documentary

Hollywood producer Lewis Milestone, and documentarian Joris Ivens, have adroitly edited and cut some 40,000 feet of newsreel clips photographed in Russia since Hitler's attack on June 22nd, and have turned out a 45-minute "Report from Russia," produced under the auspices of Russian War Relief, Inc. When, as and if it is distributed theatrically or non-theatrically, 50 per cent of the proceeds will go to the war relief agency. Distribution rights of the film are held by Artkino Pictures, Inc.

Opening with a quotation from President Roosevelt referring to the "heroic" resistance of the Russians, and a foreword by William Averell Harriman, former U. S. missionary to the Soviet Union, the film tells the story of a nation's battle against the Nazis. It is timely. It is propaganda, of course. War propaganda. But producers Milestone and Ivens, assisted by Elliot Paul who contributed the written commentary, have carefully avoided Communistic propaganda. Walter Huston is the commentator. The musical background is by Dmitri Tiomkin.

Reel after reel, some recognized from previous newsreel clips, rapidly portrays the war and defense efforts of the Russians, at the front, behind the lines, in the air, through guerilla tactics, through the scorched earth policy and the combined activities of farmer and factory hand. As a documentary showing an American ally warring against the common enemy, the film has value. It is doubtful, however, whether the picture would have received the attention of the American film-goer before December 7th.

Seen at the Preview Theatre, New York, before a large audience of press, celebrities, representatives of Russian War Relief, the Army, and other interested groups, whose enthusiastic applause indicated the film was very much to their liking.—J. E. SAMUELSON

Release date, not set. Running time, 45 minutes. General audience classification.

Valley of the Sun

(RKO Radio)

Arizona Western

From the skilled hands of Clarence Budington Kelland, who has given to the screen such fine film fare as "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" and "Arizona," comes "Valley of the Sun," a story about Indians and the West, which ran as a serial in The Saturday Evening Post. It has sufficient adventure, fighting, shooting, Indians on the march, dance and warpath, to meet the requirements of the most demanding action fan, and enough humor and romance to satisfy those not of this category.

The background of the picture is Arizona in 1868, when the Indians and the authorities were clashing. James Craig, who portrays an Indian scout attached to the Army, is the hero and the one who understands and sympathizes with the Indians, and Dean Jagger plays the Indian agent, who is always breaking his promises to the Indians and cheating them. The two men are in perpetual conflict over the Indians and over Lucille Ball, with Jagger finally losing all, including the girl.

Among the films' more exciting moments are a good fist fight between the hero and villain, a struggle for supremacy in a tug-of-war on horses, in arrow-shooting and hatchet-throwing between Craig and "Geronimo," played by Tom Tyler, and a charge by many Indians on the town. Particularly humorous are the attempts made by Craig and his cronies to prevent the fair Lucille from marrying Jagger, one of which consisted of dropping red ants from the ceiling on the bridegroom during the ceremony.

Good histrionic performances are very much in evidence. Lucille Ball, who is more a product of the twentieth century, nevertheless makes a spirited and attractive western heroine, and James Craig and Dean Jagger are good in their respective roles. Honorable mention must go to Sir Cedric Hardwicke as friendly "Lord Warwick," and Peter Whitney as a brute with a kind heart. Billy Gilbert is humorous as usual as a justice of the peace, and oldtimers may be interested in seeing Antonio Moreno once again, playing an Apache chief.

Graham Baker has produced the picture with care and with real Indians, and George Marshall, who has directed such pictures as "Destry Rides Again" and "Texas" has kept the picture moving and interesting throughout. The musical direction by C. Bakaleinikoff and photography by Harry Wild are of a high calibre.

The exhibitor need not be afraid to meet the customers on their way out.

Previewed at the company projection room before an audience of trade press reviewers and others who appeared interested.—I. S.

Joan of Paris

(RKO-Radio)

Adventure in Occupied France

Producer David Hempstead breaks new ground in more than one direction with this contribution to the field of topical fiction.

His picture is the first to deal extensively with conditions in Paris since its occupation and the setting turns out to be a fertile one for fictioneers.

His leads are two newcomers, but he works them like veterans and has surrounded them with seasoned players. Possibly no pair of beginners ever started their careers under more auspicious circumstances than Paul Henreid and Michele Morgan.

Mr. Hempstead's picture, directed by Robert Stevenson, from a script by Charles Bennett and Ellis St. Joseph, drops five RAF fliers into occupied France by parachute, following the crash of their bomber, and depicts the efforts of their leader, a Frenchman, to smuggle them back to Britain by way of Paris. He enlists the cooperation of a priest and the aid of a girl, with whom a romance develops, in establishing contact with British agents in Paris who arrange for the return of the fliers across the channel.

The film creates in its first minutes a tension which is sustained steadily throughout sequences of stealth, violence and intrigue which depict the efforts of the Gestapo to locate and capture the squadron leader's associates. The ending in which the French girl sacrifices her life in order that the fliers may escape, is true to the rules of cause and effect, although tragic.

The production rates high as melodrama and in point of timeliness, and it is assuredly a natural for showmen in those locations where sympathy for the oppressed French and confidence in their ultimate triumph over the invaders continue as fervent as when the picture was started.

Broadway Big Shot

(Producers Releasing Corp.)

Comedy

Excellent comedy, novel plot, competently executed artistic and technical assignments mark "Broadway Big Shot" as one of the top offerings of the Producers Releasing Corp. program. Its chief character is a football playing newspaper reporter who pleads guilty to a felony in order to enter a prison and obtain the true story of a huge embezzlement from one of the convicts. The convict dies the day he arrives and the reporter's publisher and the district attorney, who knowingly sent him there, are unable to obtain him a pardon. Under a modern honor system, advocated by the warden with whose daughter he has fallen in love, the reporter trains a convict football team, averts a prison break and gets the story and pardon. The climax coming with the prison team winning the annual game with the professional eleven owned by his publisher.

Ralph Byrd as the reporter, Virginia Vale as the warden's daughter, William Halligan, Herbert Rawlinson, Tom Herbert, Stubby Kruger and Joe Oakie head the cast.

The original screenplay by Martin Mooney, moves swiftly and is replete with sparkling dialogue. Direction by William Beaudine paces action and humor neatly and effectively. Dick L'Estrange and Charles Wayne were Jed Buell's associate producers, with George R. Batcheller doing an over-all supervisory job.

Previewed at a private projection room in Hollywood to a press and professional audience, wise in the ways of picture making, which was loud in its praises. The picture is the first to carry after the finis insignia a plea to buy defense bonds and stamps.—V. K.

There's a hot time on the old campus at Midwestern U. It's the eve of the big homecoming football game with Michigan. Among the old grads present is Joe Ferguson (Jack Carson), Midwestern's all-time All-American. That doesn't enthrall Professor Turner (Henry Fonda). Joe was once practically engaged to Ellen (Olivia de Havilland), who is now Tommy's wife. But Tommy has other worries. Not a Red, or even a pale pink, Tommy finds himself in the middle of a hot discussion because of a paper he had planned to read to his English class. Meanwhile Ellen and Joe see a good deal of each other. Listening to the radio description of the big game and freely imbibing strong drink, Tommy's male instinct comes to the fore. When Ellen and Joe return from the game, Tommy picks a fight with Joe. The next day, like a wounded soldier, Tommy proudly marches to his classroom to read the disputed paper. It proves to be, as Tommy contended, eloquent and moving, but innocuous so far as expression of political ideals is concerned. Tommy is cheered for his courage and, in the din, Ellen manages to tell him she thinks he is wonderful.

Here is described the stirring fight for existence waged by the Columbia River salmon. Born upstream, the small fish take a long trip down to the Pacific, which will be their home for three years. Nobody knows where they go or what they do, during their ocean stay, but at the end of three years they're back heeding the call of the river. Hundreds of fishermen annually crowd the waters of the Wilamet, just below the Oregon City bridge, eager to test rod and reel against the speed and wariness of the battling prodigals returning home to spawn. After the fish have passed that first barrier, they reach the Bonneville dam where the government has supplied fish ladders. Further upstream the fish come to commercial fishing waters. Finally they reach their destination, where they will spawn and from which newly born salmon will begin the three-year trip all over again.

PERENNIAL ISSUE

TWO militant, emphatic, and no doubt sincere, young men are hotly engaged in calling the motion picture industry a coward because it has a plan, policy and instrument of self-regulation.

These viewers-with-alarm are Mr. Morris L. Ernst, lawyer, and Mr. Garson Kanin, a director, currently a government film consultant in Washington.

They have both done pieces for the first page of the January 7 issue of Variety, a special number. Special numbers need special pieces on special subjects—and "censorship" is a perennial topic. It has conduced to fervour and welkin-ringing ever since Atlantic City decided that "Dolorita in the Passion Dance" was too educational for the peep show film audiences of the Boardwalk in 1894. The Ernst and Kanin pieces read like assignments in the old familiar pattern.

It is because of that familiarity of pattern, and its quality of perennial recrudescence that it appears indicated that once again the subject should be reviewed here. The contenders for what can for the moment be called the Ernst-Kanin position are entirely within their rights as contenders. One must assume that they sail by their lights. There is nothing in the record of either to denote ulterior motive or guile. But one must also take cognizance of professional belligerency, together with viewpoints based on narrow perspectives. Probably not many would be prepared to see them take over the administration of the policies of the motion picture industry.

MR. KANIN'S piece initially concerns itself with entirely political considerations, such as pressures of the German and Japanese embassies, which have not much to do with the real text, and suffice only to indicate that the organized motion picture industry is of sufficient scope and significance to be asked to align itself with the purposes of the nation as interpreted by Washington. But he achieves a junction with Mr. Ernst in the parallel column when he says: "... supported general censorship ... hoped to do some good by regulating what other people should hear and see and think. They hope to check or forbid obscenity, vulgarity, bad taste, immortality. The Public Spirit itself forbids these things, with or without censorship."

One may at this point inquire if that Public Spirit is any better represented by Mr. Kanin than by the devices of self-regulation which the motion picture industry has evolved for itself? Does the Public Spirit have secrets which it whispers into the eager ears of Mr. Kanin, and which are unheard by the combined alertness and sensitivities of the executives of cinemaland?

There is indeed a public spirit, an American standard of decency to which the motion picture industry especially addressed itself with distinct success a decade ago with the founding of the Production Code Administration. It was then listening to an articulate voice of that public spirit.

That precisely is what Mr. Ernst and Mr. Kanin are calling "censorship." It is a handy term of militant prejudice.

Any source of inhibitive control may be called "censorship" without violence to the language. Psychologists in their writing sometimes call the internal decision not to commit rape or murder a censorship. Such decisions achieved by the cautions of internal processes are not, however, commonly to be considered destructively invasive of human liberty. "Keep off the Grass" signs and traffic lights are instruments of censorship, too.

But in the motion picture world the outcry of "censor" is equivalent to "Hey Rube" among the canvassmen of the circus.

Mr. Ernst is a lawyer. His whole career and business is concerned with the codified human experience and rules of conduct embodied in the law. Most of those laws are censorships.

IT IS to be observed that Mr. Ernst, for a citation, goes back to Anthony Comstock, and "some tawdry post cards such as are still sold on the boulevards of the world's capitals." The smutty French post card may be merely tawdry to Mr. Ernst. Some persons of perhaps another perspective consider them obscene, filthy and degrading. The fact that they are "still sold on the boulevards" is a fact but not an argument for them. Tawdry means cheap and tasteless. Mr. Ernst's use of the term is either misuse, or expression of a personal point of view.

In this matter of reference points in measure of social attitudes we have, to be sure, more than a partial explanation of this reoccurring militancy against the norm of American decency. The sophistications, or semi-clinical attitudes of the Kanins and the Ernsts, which they would proclaim as standards and principles of motion picture production, have been arrived at by experiences, educations and assorted influences which are peculiar to the minorities which they represent. If those gentlemen were representative of the audience, or even really acquainted with it there would be rather less of argument.

It is interesting to observe that in all these presentations of this order the authors commonly make but slightest reference to the actual nature and content of disputed material, either by illustration or quotation of the blue lines. Generalization is their device of evasion.

There is simply not much room for argument in any specific case as to whether or not a line or a sequence is indecent.

A considerable indecency has invaded the stage of the metropolitan centers and the printed page—neither of which have the comprehensive mass and family audiences of the screen, and both of which are exposed to the customers only if they go in special quest. But what goes into the motion picture is equivalent to something poured into the public water supply.

MR. ERNST also appears considerably indignant at the Legion of Decency. It would hardly be consistent with his zeal for civil liberties to deny the Catholics the right to maintain a consumers' research bureau for their own purposes. It would seem also less than fair to shout

War Preparations!

STEPS for the protection of motion picture theatre audiences in blackouts and air raids and even in the event of a direct hit were outlined this week at a series of conferences in Washington between officials of the Office of Civilian Defense and representatives of exhibition, scheduled to conclude with a meeting Friday at which a permanent national advisory committee and technicians were to be named to carry on the work.

The theatre protection work was initiated at a conference at the OCD Monday at which Major General L. D. Gasser outlined generally the organization in the theatre, the equipment, training of personnel and procedure to be followed during blackouts and air raids and in the event a theatre suffers a direct hit from a raiders' bombs.

With John J. Payette, zone manager of Warner Brothers theatres, named temporary chairman, the theatre representatives held a second meeting Wednesday in the Warner Brothers Washington office, to develop suggestions to be carried back to the OCD's final meeting on Friday.

"coward" at the makers of entertainment wares if they chance to be interested in making them acceptable to that bureau. That would be true even if the standards concerned were arbitrary and special for that portion of the audience.

Examination of the facts leading up to what Mr. Ernst calls censorship and what the industry calls self-regulation, and examination of the products where they have deviated from the Production Code, will however, reveal that the order evolved and established in the last ten years has been attuned to the American idea. Meanwhile, any person is within his rights in making pictures ignoring that way if he so chooses. That does not, meanwhile, imply enfranchisement of his policy or picture.

Just in passing it may be observed, again, that most of all this fuss and contention in the glorious cause of "liberty" and in behalf of the "art" has the curious pattern of concerning itself with the bedroom and the antics of sex. A lot of that art and liberty is more suitable for the boudoir than Macy's window or the screen.

And that is no pressure group notion—further, it will not destroy the Republic.

QP Awards on Tuesday

THE QUIGLEY AWARDS for showmanship, selected from the best promotions of the year and their promoters elected by the ranking executives of the industry, will be determined on Tuesday, at New York's Astor Hotel, following a luncheon at which Martin Quigley will be host.

The Award, an institution established in the Managers' Round Table of MOTION PICTURE HERALD to encourage motion picture showmanship, this year is riding to a new high in all of its eight years, distribution and exhibition executives going expressly for the purpose to the judging hall in the Astor from all over the east and mid-west, from Chicago, Charlotte, St. Louis, Pittsburgh, Providence, the Schines of Gloversville, Albany, and, of course, those in high rank in New York.

Universal Upswing

UNIVERSAL PICTURES' net for the year ended November 1st, after all deductions including taxes, was $2,673,249, an increase of $282,477 over the preceding year, according to J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the board, in New York on Wednesday.

Net income from operations, after all charges, except taxes, amounted to $4,396,499 as compared to $2,861,472 in 1940. Mr. Cowdin pointed out that although gross income rose to $30,283,523 from $27,677,627 in 1940, the company set aside taxes of $2,630,426 last year, more than double the $1,210,648 in the previous fiscal year.

Current working assets, excluding blocked sterling, amounted to $14,139,817, with current liabilities of $3,651,592. In the previous year, assets were $11,065,337, liabilities $4,241,774.

Universal's domestic revenues last year totaled $19,008,495, compared with $17,554,261 in 1940. Foreign business brought $11,275,028 as against $10,123,366 in 1940. Gross revenue in Great Britain of £1,499,907, marked a gain of 14.8 per cent over 1940, and 250 per cent above 1937.

Plays They're Buying

STORY and play scouts of major home offices this week said that since America's entry into the war, their search on Broadway for film material had veered sharply towards comedies and musicals and themes with a war or patriotic slant. Motion picture producers in Hollywood are doing likewise.

Although no set policy has been formulated by studios, play editors agree that future purchases of Broadway shows will depend largely upon the entertainment-morale value of the scripts. Little, if any, attention will be given to "heavy" or social-problem-realistic plays, it was said.

Paramount and Columbia are reported in the bidding race for "Junior Miss," one of the season's new hits. "Let's Face It," the musical starring Danny Kaye, is another show stirring interest among film play scouts. Noel Coward's "Blithe Spirit," it is said, had been bid by a few film companies but playwright-actor-composer-producer Coward is reported to be "not interested." He is considering producing the film himself in England, it was learned.

Mars to Rio

ORSON WELLES, he of the Mercury Theatre and RKO ("Citizen Kane") is now turning his cinema talents towards Latin American goodwill.

Hollywood, at mid-week, reported the inside about how Mr. Welles has agreed, with the U. S. Government's blessing, to make a million-dollar picture in Brazil. Richard Wilson, Mr. Welles' business agent headed for New York at midweek to conclude final details of a contract with John Hay Whitney's motion picture section of the Nelson Rockefeller Office of Inter-American Affairs. A Mercury Theatre attorney in New York confirmed the discussions with the U. S. films agency.

The picture will take precedence over other Welles commitments to RKO. It will be distributed commercially in the U. S. by RKO and it is reported that the Government is underwriting any losses sustained by shifts in the Welles production schedule.

President Vargas of Brazil is reported to have sent personal approval of the project to Hollywood. The Brazilian Minister of Information also is said to have endorsed the project.

The picture is described as another Wellesian departure from established technique with four separate stories against a Brazilian background; 95 per cent of the picture will be photographed in Brazil. The sections will include a short story, "Bonita," "Four Men on a Raft" a South American tale and material based on the life of Simon Bolivar and the Rio de Janeiro Fiesta.

Justice Report

THE Department of Justice at Washington was expected at mid-week to issue a long report reviewing the industry's operations under the consent decree which settled the Government's anti-trust action against the distributors in the New York anti-trust case. The report was written by Robert L. Wright, assistant United States attorney general in charge of the film anti-trust division for Thurman Arnold. At press-time it was heard from the capital that the report would make "certain recommendations" for industry procedure under the decree.

Adams Express Buying

ADAMS EXPRESS, now an investment trust but once the giant haulage company which wrestled with railroads and the American Railway Express Company to control American shipping, this week loomed large as an owner of motion picture stocks. In the final six months of 1941, an annual report, issued Tuesday, showed, Adams Express increased its holdings in Paramount Pictures from 5,400 to 37,380 shares of common stock. On January 1st, the trust also held 10,400 shares of 20th Century-Fox common as against 13,100 shares on June 30, 1941.

The Adams portfolio also holds large quantities of railroad, automotive, chemical, munition, elevator, mail order, drug and other stocks, with the 37,380 shares in Paramount ranking second in size among the 22 issues of 22 companies; 267,800 shares of American International tops.

Uncle Wants an Oscar

UNCLE SAM wants an Oscar. Following the adoption by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences of a new annual award classification for documentary films the U. S. Office of Emergency Management, at Washington, has entered one of its productions in the Hollywood voting. "Bomber," ten-minute reel produced by the film unit of OEM, a part of the information division headed by Robert Horton, is the U. S. Government's bid for an Academy statuette.

The picture, which describes the manufacture of a bomber, was based on a script written by the unit staff. Carl Sandburg, American poet, who wrote and recited the commentary, received the sole screen credit. The picture was photographed by Carl Pryer and Floyd Crosby, both members of Hollywood's American Society of Cinematographers.

In Training Again

EX-PUGILIST and Shakespeare student, U. S. Navy Lieutenant-Commander James J. (Gene) Tunney who was quoted last week as believing that "boxing gloves, skipping rope and athletic activities" are better morale builders for servicemen than "movies and ice cream" and other pleasures, the while also holding the chairmanship of American Distillers (MOTION PICTURE HERALD, January 17th page 9) has decided to concentrate on fisticuffs and calisthenics for the Navy. The Wall Street Journal on Wednesday reported that Mr. Tunney had resigned as chairman of the board of the American Distilling Company. He also quit directorships of the Greenfield Tap and Die Company, and the Morris Plan Industrial Bank.

Few Cancellations

MINNESOTA exhibitors have not been cancelling 20 per cent of films they buy en masse from distributors, as provided under the state's anti-decree law. Such was the implication Tuesday, in testimony during the trial in St. Paul, of Twentieth Century Fox, Paramount, and RKO, for violating that state law by selling blocks of five. W. H. Workman, MGM Minneapolis branch manager, testified Tuesday that the rate of cancellation under the state law (which allows 20 per cent) had been running only from 11 to 13 per cent.

Mr. Workman said selling was much harder under the decree, testifying that the short contracts for blocks of five were more difficult to negotiate than contracts for full blocks.

At midweek, 17 Minnesota exhibitors had been subpoenaed to appear for the state in an effort to refute defense claims that the law affects exhibition and distribution alike, and to get into the record the state's contention that the law has benefited independent exhibitors.

The distributors are selling according to the law, having obtained relief from the decree in New York Federal Court. Originally they had been faced with selling only in blocks of five, provided by the decree, but breaking the state law, or offering all of their pictures, the law's requirement, and violating the decree.

Percentage Pain

BEN WASHER, representative for Samuel Goldwyn, in New York, on Wednesday formally announced that because the Sparks Circuit refused to book Goldwyn's "The Little Foxes," on a percentage basis, Mr. Goldwyn and RKO were playing "The Little Foxes" in seven situations in Florida in opposition to Sparks.

In 14 Florida cities where there are no opposition houses to Sparks, Mr. Goldwyn has taken large newspaper advertisements, explaining to moviegoers that "Little Foxes" will not be seen in their theatre and why it will not.

The advertisements also call attention to the engagement in the nearest situation. Cities in which the advertisements have been placed are Sanford, New Smyrna, Orlando, Deland, Palm Beach, Lake Worth, St. Augustine, Clearwater, Bradenton, Sarasota, Winter Haven and Lakeland.

The ad has been refused by only one paper, the West Palm Beach Post and Times, which reported a policy of not accepting advertisements from one advertiser in criticism of another advertiser.

Other distributors have in recent years sold away to competitors of Sparks, dominant exhibition source in Florida, also because of inability to strike satisfactory rental arrangements on special pictures.

Afterward, persons who attended one or more of the closed meetings he held were full of praise for the Coordinator and endorsements of his purpose. They are proceeding about their business with conspicuous confidence born of what they heard but cannot reveal. Here are Y. # PEACE FOR 2 YEARS BETWEEN HOLLYWOOD AND LABOR

MONTHS of troubled negotiating ended Wednesday in New York, amid the flare of flashbulbs and the floods of newsreel cameramen, as signatures were affixed by producers and labor union representatives to a two-year contract between the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and the studios; a contract which according to Richard F. Walsh, IATSE president, and Pat Casey, producers' labor agent, will give:

"A complete and lasting labor peace to the motion picture producing industry."

The ten Alliance studio locals with nearly 10,000 workers comprise makeup artists, projectionists, wardrobe, props, grips, and sound workers, lamp operators, cameramen, and laborers. The wage increases in the contracts vary according to category but average 10 per cent.

The current negotiations had been on 16 days. They occurred in the New York offices of Pat Casey, succeeding previous conferences on the Coast and before then in New York.

The workers' increased wage scales are retroactive to July, 1941. They follow a 10 per cent general increase granted the seven American Federation international unions in the studio basic labor agreement, last Fall.

Mr. Walsh recommended the back pay be given workers in Defense Bonds or Stamps and the locals are to vote on this.

Mr. Walsh and Mr. Casey pointed out that the negotiations were unique. Each local negotiated its contract separately, but in the presence of agents from the others, and of international officers of the IATSE, who, having granted the locals' autonomy, were merely advisory.

Although some meetings lasted late into night, they were never acrimonious, it was stressed.

Harmony Stressed

"In all my experience in labor union activities there has never been a meeting exactly like this one," said Mr. Walsh. "Never before have I seen two groups of representatives, supposedly on opposite sides of the fence, who made such a sincere effort to learn and understand the problems of each other. As a result of that fine feeling on both sides, we made progress and reached agreements in the multitude of details involved in 16 days that otherwise might have taken months and probably never would have been so completely covered.

"The best way to describe the achievements of this historic labor conference is to tell you the slogan" proposed by one of the labor delegates and approved by all. He said, as the contracts were drawn up: 'Now, we'll go to work with this slogan in mind: Bring it in a day ahead of schedule.'

"He referred to the making of movies and

AFL-CIO PEACE SEEN, FOR WAR

Prospects for peace between the long-warring American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations appeared nearer this week, with officials of both unions mulling the possibility of conferences to settle differences. The initiative came from John L. Lewis, founder of the CIO, and head of the United Mine Workers, and was received cordially by William Green, AFL president, who pointed out, however, "our latest appeal to the CIO was made December 16th." A hitch in progress of the peace developed Monday when Phillip Murray, CIO president, said conferences would occur only after conclusion of negotiations between the CIO and the "little" steel companies. He also criticized Mr. Lewis' action, inferring such action should come from the CIO president's office. However, observers termed the new development personal, and not likely to affect a labor peace seen dictated by the probable length of the war.

the saving of time in their production. That is a grand attitude when you remember these men work on an hourly scale. We are happy over the results of our meetings with the producers and look forward to a long period of peace and harmony."

Mr. Casey said: "This was a labor conference that was a pleasure. It should have been recorded on sound track as a model for all labor negotiations. Here, I believe, is a grand demonstration of what the proper union leadership can accomplish. Out of the harmony established, the better working conditions, hours and wages agreed upon, should come better motion pictures and happier, satisfied employees. The producers, too, have proposed a slogan: 'These workers are our partners in the making of entertainment for the public—partners in every sense of the word.'"

The labor representatives attending the conferences included: Joseph P. O'Donnell and A. J. Mike Moran, Local 728, Lamp Operators; J. F. Swartz, Local 165, Projectionists; Herebert Aller, Burnett Guffey, Gilbert Warrenton, Gus Peterson, Local 659, Cameramen; Wm. L. Edwards, Local 705, Wardrobe; B. C. Duval, Local 44, Props; E. E. Westmore, Local 706, Makeup Artists; W. C. Barrett, Local 80, Grips; Harold Smith, Local 695, Sound; Zeal Fairbanks, Local 727, Laborers.

The producer representatives were: Pat

Casey, Chairman; Fred Pelton, Secretary; Dave Garber and John O'Connor, Universal Pictures; Sidney Kent, Fred Meyers and W. C. Michaels, Twentieth Century-Fox Corp.; Keith Glennon, Samuel Goldwyn Studio; George Schaefer, Major Leslie Thompson and Reginald Armour, RKO; Nicholas M. Schenck, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Arthur Schwartz and Wm. Hopkins, Columbia Pictures; Barney Balaban and Charles Boren, Paramount Pictures; and Carrol Sax and J. W. Hazen, Warner Bros.

Circella-Dean Trial Postponed

The extortion trial of Nicholas Circella, alias Nick Dean, and of Louis Kaufman, was postponed Monday, to February 2nd, in New York Federal Court.

The two IATSE figures, the first a former Chicago agent of Willie Bioff and George Browne, and the second the business agent of the Newark local, are under indictment by a Federal Grand Jury in New York, for extortion of $1,000,000 from the majors. Browne and Bioff, now serving jail terms because they were convicted of similar extortion under another indictment, are also named in the Circella-Kaufman document as co-conspirators.

The postponement occurred when the court was informed no trial justice was available.

Screen Publicists Guild, New York, last week reelected all officers except second vice-president, Jonas Rosenfeld, Jr. Reelected officers are Joseph Gould, president; Lawrence Lipskin, first vice-president; Stephen Freeland, secretary; Charles Wright, treasurer. Arthur Jeffrey defeated Mr. Rosenfeld.

The New York State Mediation Board having intervened in the closed shop contract negotiations between the Guild and the majors' New York home offices, it was to meet Thursday with representatives of those offices. Protracted negotiations were broken recently when the majors allegedly repudiated an agreement in principle, and the Guild reverted to original demands.

Organization Drives On

The Screen Office and Professional Employees Guild, Local 109, of the CIO, continues organization of "white collar" workers in the majors' home offices. Last week, it petitioned the National Labor Relations Board for certification as the proper bargaining agency for such workers in the RKO Radio Pictures office.

The Building Service Employees international union has chartered, in New York, for "front of the house" workers, the Motion Picture Theatre Managers, Assistants, Cashiers and Doormen's union, Local 266.

A franchise to book acts under sanction of the American Guild of Variety Artists has been issued to the newly-incorporated Ohio Nite Club Productions, Inc., at Columbus, of which Rollin Shaffer, of the Palm Garden Club is president and chairman of the board, and William Pancake, of the Roxy Club and operator of the Knickerbocker theatre, treasurer.

STUDIOS TOLD "STAY ON JOB;" THEATRES PRESS WAR PLANS

HOLLYWOOD'S chief service for the duration of the war is "to stay right here on the job making pictures" Lowell Mellett, Coordinator of Government Films told industry leaders at Hollywood last week in his first conference in the production center.

Air raid and blackout safeguards for motion picture theatre audiences received official consideration by the Office of Civilian Defense this week. Washington theatre operators and technicians met with the OCD at midweek to outline some of the problems which theatre protection involves. A further meeting was scheduled for Friday and a national advisory committee of theatre men will probably be designated by the OCD, as it has done with other industries. Details are on Page 8.

Mr. Mellett, who was directed by President Roosevelt to unify government film plans and production and to advise the motion picture industry on ways of national service flew to Hollywood to meet representatives of the Producers Association, Guild officials and members of the Hollywood Victory Committee.

No Film Censorship

He reiterated earlier statements that the government planned no interference with theatrical production. Censorship he said, recalling President Roosevelt's letter of appointment, is in no sense contemplated. Rather his office will advise the industry on government views of the international situation as they relate to film production.

"Unless the Army, Navy or some other government agency calls upon you for a specific task your greatest war service will be to stay right here on the job in Hollywood making pictures" he said. "We are hoping that most of you, and your fellow workers, will stay right here in Hollywood and keep on doing what you are doing because your motion pictures are a vital contribution to the total defense effort."

Mr. Mellett paid tribute to Hollywood for productions which foresaw the aggression of fascism against democracy and helped to make the nation more aware of the values of American freedom.

In New York an industry committee of foreign department experts, appointed by Lieutenant Colonel Darryl F. Zanuck, is also studying films exported from the United States to friendly nations. Irving Mass of Twentieth Century-Fox is chairman, assisted by Albert Deane, Paramount; Charles Goldsmith, MGM, and Karl McDonald, Warners.

After the general meeting Mr. Mellett conferred with studio heads for a more detailed discussion of industry-government relations in war time. Francis Harmon, executive director of the motion picture War Activities committee and Dr. Leo Rosten accompanied Mr. Mellett to Hollywood by plane.

A Hollywood office will be set up by the Coordinator, it was indicated, to advise the industry. It will be a clearing house for information on government film activities.

Dr. Rosten was reported to be the most likely choice as Coast representative of the

CHINESE FILM STAR KILLED IN BATTLE

Butterfly Wu, called the "movie queen" of China, was killed by shrapnel during the siege of Hong Kong, according to Associated Press reports last week from Chungking. Miss Wu was married to Eugene Penn, a Chinese agent for a German commercial firm. Reported to make a record Chinese salary of $300 a month, she had financed some of her productions.

In 1931, when Japan took Manchuria, Miss Wu lost favor with her fans because she was seen in the company of Japanese officials. She quickly came back to popular acclaim, however, and in 1935, made a tour of Russia at the invitation of the Soviet Government, and later visited most of Europe's capitals.

Coordinator of Government Films. To mid-week no appointment had been made however.

Vincent A. Kleinfeld was appointed general counsel last week to Mr. Mellett. Mr. Kleinfeld was formerly in the solicitor's office of the Farm Security Administration. Prior to that he served in connection with several legal actions concerning early Government pictures, among them "The River." The new counsel is 36 years old, a graduate of Columbia Law School and resident of New York.

Theatres Prepare for Blackouts or Raids

The country's theatre operators continue to push plans for action in event of blackouts, alerts or actual air raids.

Generally, it is recognized, New York's exhibitor leaders, operating houses of largest capacity, in a vulnerable city, must "get there first" with emergency plans.

Among exhibitors prominently responsible for the preparedness, and who represented the city's theatre owners in primary conferences with the police, the Army, and civilian defense authorities, were Arthur Mayer, Rialto Theatre; Charles Moskowitz, Loew's circuit; Robert Weitman, Paramount Theatre; and Harry Brandt, Brandt circuit. Additionally, Mr. Weitman prepared detailed plans which were models for his company's many other houses, and for theatres of other chains.

Two rival Connecticut exhibitor units, the MPTO, and the Allied, met Wednesday in New Haven, to discuss new police air raid regulations, and also the measures suggested by the Civilian Defense regional office, and by the State Council of Defense.

The state police regulations provide, among many things, that persons seeking shelter during a blackout "shall have right of entry" to theatres. They also force theatres to run instructional trailers upon police or defense council request.

Managers of Comerford Circuit theatres have received detailed instructions for air raid behavior, in a late issue of their house organ, the "Comerford Reporter." These instructions have been relayed to each employee.

Four divisional meetings of the managers were held in the past week to set preliminary plans for air raid regulations. Forty men from the Wilkes-Barre and its suburban towns under the direction of District Managers John Comerford and Tom Killeen met in the Sterling theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., to see the March of Time film, "When an Air Raid Strikes," and hear explanatory talks by John J. O'Leary, general manager; Charles A. Ryan, head of the construction and maintenance department; John Nolan, film buyer, and Tom Comerford.

Managers Discuss Precautions

Managers in the Scranton and suburban districts of Byron Linn and Gerard Adams met in Scranton, Pa.; while men in the Lebanon and Hazleton districts of Edward Simonis and Sam Friedman met in Sunbury, Pa., and those under Tom Walsh and Tom Carey in the Binghamton, N. Y., region met in Binghamton. The officials addressed all meetings.

Charles Raymond, Loew Cleveland theatre division manager and chairman of the defense committee in charge of theatres in the Greater Cleveland area, has named committee members: G. W. Erdmann, secretary of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association; Ernest Schwartz, CMPEA president; Nat Wolf, Warner zone manager; Leo Greenberger of The Community Circuit; John D. Kalafat and Abe Kramer, Associated Circuit; Howard Reif of Scoville, Essick and Reif Circuit, and M. B. Horwitz, Washington Circuit. Each committee member will be assigned a group of theatres whose managers will meet for special instruction from the local police force. The committee has asked the Speakers' Bureau for 2-minute talks in the theatres to instruct the public in defense and to ask for their cooperation.

The Pittsburgh City Council has been studying an ordinance to black out marquees after midnight. The measure of course includes all other display lighting.

Oregon exhibitors have received from their state's Civilian Defense Council a complete manual containing uniform theatre air raid precautions.

It was compiled for the Council by Captain E. A. Ranes, Portland Fire Bureau; H. E. Sobottka, of the Hamrick-Evergreen Theatres circuit; William B. McCurdy, of the J. J. Parker Theatres, and O. J. Miller, of the Independent Theatre Owners of Oregon.

Procedure Explained

Many exhibitors from the state, and from the southern part of Washington state met last week at the Benson Hotel, Portland, to receive the manuals in person. Messrs. Miller, Sobottka and McCurdy were in charge of the meeting, which impressed the exhibitors that they were to stress that "the theatre is the safest place in a blackout." They have support for this from the civilian defense officials.

Baltimore theatres are prepared for a forthcoming blackout test under civil defense.

San Francisco theatres have gone through more than six blackouts. No lights are allowed after sundown.

Other Coast cities have similar regulations. All are considering evacuation plans, and adequate traffic control. The evacuation plans envision population shifts possibly to Utah, Nevada and Arizona.

San Francisco's leading legitimate theatres, the Geary and Curran, have evolved a "blackout policy" to be invoked in event of an early evening air raid alarm. The curtain will remain down until a half-hour after the all-clear signal, allowing ample time for patrons to reach the theatres leisurely. Ticket holders unable to attend the performance due to blackouts will have their money refunded, if tickets are presented within 48 hours.

Air raid precautions for theatres, formulated in Philadelphia following a recent meeting of exhibitor leaders, have been put in booklet form and are being distributed to theatres in the territory. It is expected that air raid drills will be held shortly in all houses to acquaint the personnel with their duties.

Defense Film Shown In Springfield

The first semi-private preview of March of Time's subject "When Air Raids Strike" was screened Monday, at the Arcade Theatre in Springfield, for 400 district air raid wardens of that city, Holyoke and Chicopee, in addition to the mayors, police, fire and other civic officials of the area, who attended. Nathan E. Goldstein, president of Western Massachusetts Theatres, Inc., and Samuel Goldstein, in charge of the circuit's defense activities, arranged the preview.

In New York, at the request of the Police Department, the March of Time showed "When Air Raids Strike" last Friday night at Hunter College auditorium, to more than 1,400 air raid wardens. Similar screenings are scheduled throughout the country by local theatre managers in cooperation with civilian defense organizations.

Lester Pollock, Jay Golden and Bud Silverman, Rochester exhibitors, have been named to the city's defense council.

John Hamrick, city manager of Hamrick-Evergreen Theatres, Inc., in Seattle, was appointed coordinator of defense savings activities for theatres in his state, it was announced last week by Saul Haas, Washington state administrator of defense savings.

Industry Groups Meet in New York

Last Friday, in New York's Paramount Building, a meeting of the theatre division of the War Activities Committee-Motion Picture Industry, was held for general discussion of theatre participation in war and defense activities.

Those who attended included Joseph Bernhard, Leonard Golden, Si Fabian, Harry Brandt, H. A. Cole, C. W. Koerner, C. C. Moskowitz, Spyros Skouras and Sam E. Morris.

The second meeting of the motion picture emergency defense conference, called by the Screen Publicists Guild of New York, was held last Wednesday night at the Hotel Edison. Basic program for action, designed for united participation of local industry groups in the war effort, was adopted. The conference will work on both a local and national scale, co-operating with the Office of Civilian Defense and the War Activities Committee of the industry. Joseph Gould, SPG president, was chairman of the meeting.

Under the auspices of the League of New York theatres, an emergency council of New York's legitimate theatre, comprising representatives from every branch, including craft and performer unions, theatre managers, dramatists, box office treasurers and musicians, is being organized for the duration of the war. Purpose of the council is to consider problems of the legitimate stage as they are affected by the war. A similar council was formed in England at the outbreak of war, by theatre interests. James F.

Reilly, executive secretary of the League, called the initial meeting together proposing the council, at which, he said, members of all theatre unions, crafts and guilds are represented.

Screen Stars In Camp Shows

A resolution recommending waiving of union dues for all members of the Four A's—Associated Actors and Artists of America—who are engaged in USO-Camp Shows' productions was passed, it was announced on Monday in New York by Frank Gillmore, international president. More than 400 performers are currently touring 225 Army camps and Naval stations for Camp Shows, Inc.

Judy Garland, screen star and singer, and Dave Rose, her husband, began a 10-day tour this week of midwestern camps, when they appeared at Fort Custer, Mich., on Tuesday and Wednesday. This is the first of eight similar personal appearance tours organized by the film division of USO to bring Hollywood stars into army camps. Although film stars have appeared in camps before on special occasions, according to USO, this will be the first time personal appearances will be sustained and routed through each corps area as part of the national entertainment program. From Fort Custer, Miss Garland is scheduled to appear with Mr. Rose at Fort Knox, Ky.; Jefferson Barracks, Missouri; Camp Robinson, Arkansas, and Camp Wolters, Texas, this week and up to and including January 31st.

Mitzi Green, screen, stage and radio star, meanwhile, began a personal appearance tour on Tuesday which will take her to Virginia army encampments, with her first stop at Fort Belvoir, Va. Her itinerary calls for appearances at Fort Eustis, Fort Story, Camp Pendleton, Norfolk N.A.S., and Camp Lee, all in Virginia, this week, next and up to February 3d.

Dr. A. H. Giannini, southern district chairman of USO, appointed Vic Shapiro, Hollywood publicity agency, last week, to handle all public relations publicity work for USO in Southern California. Charles Koren of the Shapiro staff, was assigned to the USO-Los Angeles headquarters.

USO-Camp Shows is extending its entertainment program to include Iceland, according to an announcement issued in New York Tuesday. Eight top-ranking vaudeville stars are being gathered under USO auspices to go to Iceland and entertain American troops stationed there, it was learned. The group will be directed by Eddie Dowling, Camp Shows head, and will be gone for two months.

Copper Saving Plan Advanced by Union

Local 143 of the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees of St. Louis adopted a plan for copper conservation last week, it was announced. The St. Louis projectionists are stripping copper plating off the butt ends of used copper plated projector carbons and are saving all copper drippings which accumulate in the lamp house. Copper thus salvaged is being turned over to local salvage organizations or sold to regular metal scrap dealers. Other IATSE locals may adopt a similar plan, it was learned. The National Carbon Company, in announcing the idea, said, "This program is one which should have the attention of the industry," and commended Local 143 for its action.

A force of 40 men completely equipped for firefighting work has been organized at the Warner Bros. home office, it was announced last week, and will be stationed on the roof of the Warner building in New York during all air raid alerts. Sheepskin coats, steel helmets, sand buckets and other equipment for fighting fires have been furnished to the squad. Special instructions in handling fire, incendiary and other types of bombs that may be used by enemy aircraft is being given to the men.

Complete precautionary measures worked out shortly after the war started include an emergency hospital on a "safe" floor of the building, stretcher units, cots for wounded and medical supplies. Air raid wardens and record custodians have been appointed and are holding practice drills weekly. An alarm system has been installed throughout the building, with a test made of the entire system every day at noon, in addition to practice raid drills.

Selling War Bonds Defense Stamps

Dorothy Lamour, Paramount star now working with the U. S. Treasury Department in selling defense bonds and stamps, was guest speaker at a special defense meeting of the Paramount Pep Club on Monday. More than 800 members attended the meeting. Joseph Doughney, club president, presided. Miss Lamour urged members to support the present defense drive to the utmost of their ability. Stanton Griffiths, chairman of the company's executive committee, briefly discussed the pay-roll allotment plan which will be instituted soon by Paramount.

Mr. Griffiths, in addition to his previous bond purchases, bought $20,000 in bonds from Miss Lamour. Barney Balaban and Y. Frank Freeman made bond purchases of the same amount.

Sabu, United Artists star, who completed work in Alexander Korda's Technicolor production of "Jungle Book," arrived in New York from Hollywood on Monday on the first leg of a cross-country tour in behalf of the defense-bond-stamp campaign. It is expected that the young star will visit more than 30 cities throughout the country on his itinerary.

Crescent Amusement Company announced in Nashville, Tenn., last week that rallies would be held weekly in the circuit's theatres to bolster sale of defense bonds and stamps. On rally nights, admission to Crescent houses is a 25-cent stamp. Circuit employes are donating their services and the circuit donates the films and use of its theatres, on that evening. Community groups are arranging the speaking part of the defense programs and are directing raffling of bonds on the special nights.

The Roxy theatre in New Britain, Conn., announced this week that it inaugurated a 10-cent defense stamp giveaway one night a week.

In Baltimore, on Monday, the local Variety Club announced its pledge to sell $200,000 in defense bonds. The Twin City Variety Club of Minneapolis acted to devote $1,200 from its treasury to the purchase of defense bonds, bought in the name of the club.

Censor Curbs Radio Quiz, Request Programs

Radio quiz programs, man in the street interviews and request programs are banned under the wartime broadcasting regulations issued last Friday by Byron Price, U. S. director of war censorship. All impromptu interviews and other ad lib programs where participants cannot be investigated or carefully selected are forbidden, to prevent "enemy agents" using them to transmit information.

Theatres in several cities have cancelled broadcasts from stages or lobbies. "What's Your Opinion," originating from the Telenews theatre, Chicago, over WJJD and WIND; "Radio's Voice" and "Chicago at Night," interview programs from the Chicago Theatre, are among the quiz programs which have suspended.

RADIO CENSORSHIP SET UP

Several radio stations are working on plans to record interview programs and broadcast them a month or more later. Mail requests for musical numbers may also be held up for unspecified times.

Network programs are also undergoing changes with many cancellations by automotive advertisers and others who are switching to war production. The Ford "Sunday Evening Hour" over CBS ends March 1st after 411 consecutive weeks. Chrysler Motors has cut Major Bowe's "Amateur Hour" from 60 to 30 minutes, and Helen Hayes' Lipton Tea Program will withdraw February 1st. Other cancellations are reported pending.

A war censorship of broadcasting far more rigid than that applied to newspapers and magazines has been instituted by Mr. Price's office at Washington.

Because, unlike newspapers, magazines and letters, its messages cannot be halted at the borders of the country, broadcasting will have to be considerably more careful than publishers not to make public news which might be of aid to an enemy, and at the same time must guard against being the unwitting tools of a subversive or espionage system.

Chiefly affected by the rules will be news broadcasts, the "ad lib" programs and requests for announcements or musical selections.

Dissemination of news of military value may be of aid to an enemy, it was pointed out; "ad lib" programs lend themselves to possible use, as do announcements and requests, as vehicles for code messages.

The censorship code was promulgated by Mr. Price, with his assistant in charge of radio, J. H. Ryan, following conferences with representatives of the industry and a study of the Canadian censorship regulations brought to Washington by Canadian officials.

Most of the precautions emphasized in the regulations already are being followed by broadcasters voluntarily, Mr. Price said.

No Requests

Broadcasters are asked to accept no telephoned or telegraphed requests for the playing of musical selections and to hold mail requests for an unspecified time before honoring them on the air. Replies to requests should be staggered, and care should be exercised in guarding against honoring a request for the playing of a selection at a specified time.

Similar precautions are to be followed with respect to requests for "lost and found" and other announcements, and such advertisements should be thoroughly rewritten by station staffs. Emergency requests by police or other officials may be honored, and officially authorized announcements for blood donors, lost persons, stolen cars, etc., may be accepted by telephone, but should be checked for confirmation.

Great care is to be exercised in the handling of studio-audience programs. Forums in which the general public is permitted extemporaneous comment, interviews, etc., must be carefully handled.

In these several types of programs, it is stressed, a method should be devised whereby no individual seeking participation can be guaranteed participation. Greatest danger lies where programs are conducted with a small group—10 to 25 persons—and less danger is seen where participants are selected from larger groups, such as theatre audiences ("Dr. I. Q." programs).

Broadcasters were advised that they would receive additional instructions from time to time, as found necessary, and were invited to feel free to submit any material of which they are doubtful to the censorship officials.

The usual station logs and records are to be kept, but it was requested that full transcripts,

FILMS HELP IN BATAVIA

Motion pictures "are helping to maintain public morale" in Java, and box office grosses "are as good as can be expected under wartime restrictions," according to a cable Sydney J. Albright, United Artists' representative in Batavia sent to Walter Gould, foreign manager for the company, last week. Mr. Albright reported that the entire Javanese population was devoting itself to all-out defense measures and that the "battle of business" was being carried on simultaneously with "the business of battle."

either written or recorded, be kept of all foreign language programs, and that precautions be taken to prevent deviations from script by foreign language announcers and performers.

"Sensible" and "reasonable" were terms heard this week as radio executives assayed the new censorship rulings. They added little difficulty would be found in observing Mr. Price's admonitions, because the stations themselves had observed them ever since the war's outbreak, and some before then.

The rules "reveal sound judgment and a practical knowledge," Alfred J. McCosker, chairman of the Mutual chain's board, said.

They "will have a salutary effect, especially among some of the smaller stations," according to Clarence Menser, NBC program manager.

They are both "reasonable and intelligent," the Columbia Broadcasting System said officially.

Mr. McCosker added that "none of our quiz or audience participation programs originate from remote locations such as airports, railroad terminals, or other public gathering places."

See Slashing of Radio Production

The Office of Production Management hinted from Washington last week that it might shortly order curtailment of production of radio receivers for civilian use; but it denied it would ban production entirely.

Bond Geddes, executive vice-president of the Radio Manufacturers Association, predicted a curtailment of 30 per cent in the first three months of this year. He added the Association did not know of any plans for "rationing" of production, and that the Government probably would allow manufacture of replacement parts.

It is estimated 57,000,000 receivers are in use now. There are also large stocks in stores and warehouses. Therefore, OPM officials noted that curtailment of production would not bring in hardship.

The radio industry expects to receive one billion dollars in war orders soon, in addition to those it has. Its normal business is $500,000,000 per year.

Canada will halt manufacture of civilian receivers January 31st. The order came from the country's Munitions and Supply Department. Some sets will be allowed for civilians under special permit from Supplies Controller Alan H. Williamson.

There is a shortage of radio engineers trained in broadcasting. The Federal Communications Commission may therefore relax its requirements for such engineers. So forecast James C. Fly, FCC chairman, in Washington Monday.

He added that the shortage had occurred since the Army and Navy stepped up demands for such men, and also since the FCC, increasing monitoring, employed more.

Radio Linked to Films In New War Bureau

Governmental radio activities last week were brought under the coordination plan recently set up for Governmental film activities with designation by President Roosevelt of the radio division of the Office of Facts and Figures as the central clearing agency for Administration broadcasting.

William B. Lewis, formerly vice president of Columbia Broadcasting System, in charge of programs, was named as coordinator, with Douglas Meservey, formerly assistant to the vice president in charge of programs of the National Broadcasting Company, as his assistant. They will work from Washington.

In a letter to Archibald MacLeish, director of OFF, from Presidential Secretary Stephen Early, the new coordinator's responsibility would be "to give guidance to Government departments and agencies and to the radio industry as a whole concerning inquiries originating within the Government and received by the Government from the broadcasting companies and stations, and to handle certain Government programs on the networks within the United States."

To this end, Mr. MacLeish was requested to advise all departments and agencies, particularly the Office of Censorship, the Federal Communications Commission, the Coordinator of Information, "as well as the national networks and the national defense committee of the National Association of Broadcasters," of his new assignment.

"It is not intended that the functions of the radio division, OFF, shall in any way conflict with the short-wave or foreign broadcasting work now being carried on by the Office of the Coordinator of Information or by the Office of Mr. Nelson Rockefeller," Early explained. "It is recognized, however, that certain programs arranged by the radio division, OFF, may, from time to time, be broadcast to the world at large and it is suggested that the radio division, OFF, on all such occasions, consult with and arrange broadcasts of this nature in cooperation with the officials of Mr. Rockefeller's office and those in Colonel Donovan's office in order to avoid conflict and possible overlapping of radio programs."

Navy School at B. & K. Station

Lieutenant William C. Eddy, U.S.N. Retired, and director of the Balaban & Katz television station W9XBK in Chicago, will be the director of the new Navy School in ultra high frequency radio which will provide the United States with a "new weapon for war." The announcement came on Tuesday from Lt. R. C. McKee, U.S.N.R., of the Chicago office of the Navy Public Relations Department.

The school, which will be the only one of its kind in the world, will be situated on the top floor of the State-Lake Building where extensive alterations for class rooms and the installation of new equipment is now under way. Office space, equipment and the instruction staff will be furnished to the Government without cost by W9XBK and Balaban & Katz.

Lt. Eddy, who will head the staff and continue his duties at W9XBK, is recognized as one of the top-ranking experts in the field of high frequency exploration.

DAYLIGHT TIME SEEN HELP IN BLACKOUTS; NOT OTHERWISE

CONTROVERSY over national daylight saving time, legislation for which has been established by Congress for the second time in 25 years, is an old story to exhibitors in the United States, as a New York theatre man pointed out on Monday. The Lea Bill, which provides for putting the clock ahead one hour throughout the nation, was signed by President Roosevelt on Tuesday and will become effective at 2:00 A. M. Monday, Feb. 9th. The bill stipulates year-round daylight time to continue until six months after the end of the war.

Exhibitor opinion as to the effects of daylight saving time on the nation's box offices is divided. Opposition is voiced by some theatremen who believe that extension of the day's sunlight hours by one hour will keep people outdoors and away from theatres. In 1917, when Congress enacted the first daylight legislation, exhibitors voiced opposition principally because there were hundreds of open-air theatres, or "air-dromes," which depended upon patronage during dark hours and the extra daylight hour cut into evening shows. This, however, no longer prevails.

Presumably daylight saving time today will be a help to theatre managers along the Pacific and Atlantic coasts where blackouts may severely hit, if not ruin business, as in the case of the recent blackouts along the West Coast in the week following the outbreak of the war with the Axis.

In areas where defense production is going full-speed-ahead on a 24-hour basis with three working shifts, theatres will undoubtedly benefit from the new legislation because the extra hour will give additional opportunity to defense workers to make afternoon shows before checking in for night shifts. During the air raids and blackouts in England, theatremen found that daylight saving time helped to bring people into film houses earlier so that they could get home before alert signals for air raids were given.

Speculate on Effect

In general, U. S. exhibitors are weighing the advantages and disadvantages of daylight saving time as it will affect theatres. Harry Goldberg, of the theatre division of Warner Bros. said on Monday, "We are not making any guesses." He pointed out that Warner's didn't know to what extent the new legislation would affect theatres and added, "business generally falls off in the summer time anyway." A spokesman for another major home office with large theatre interests said he believed exhibitors would recognize that the Lea bill was another "defense measure" in the war effort and that daylight saving time "undoubtedly would help to conserve the nation's power."

Representative Clarence F. Lea, of California, father of the bill, disclosed last week that the Administration hoped to save 736,282,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity each year, enough power to produce, for example, 70,000,000 pounds of much-needed aluminum for planes. Congressman Lea also said the peak consumption of power in the U. S. was caused by factories and offices between 5:00 and 7:00 P. M., and that extension of day-

DANGER SHORTAGE OF RAW FILM CANS

A critical shortage of containers for the shipment of raw film is threatened.

Steel which is needed for the defense program is required for the production of these film cans. No practical substitute for the type of containers now in use has been found. Film manufacturers must therefore recover the cans now in use so there will be no let-down in the shipments of raw to film studio and laboratory.

All persons in the industry who have anything to do with receiving and handling raw film cans are urged to see to it that the cans received are immediately returned to the manufacturer so that they may be re-used.

light by one hour would cut down the consumption.

In 1917, when Congress passed the first daylight saving time bill which was enacted on March 31st, 1918, wide opposition by exhibitors was reported.

The files show that exhibitors and others in the picture business opposed the law on the ground that it cut one evening show. They declared people would not go to theatres until dark.

The measure was said to have caused a considerable loss of revenue. In many instances, they were forced to curtail, or cut entirely their last show.

Many operators screened fewer films; instead of beginning the first show at 7:30 and the second at 9:00, each running an hour and a half, they began the first show at 8:30 and the second at 9:30, each running an hour. Another scheme was to run one show a night, two hours or better in length and charge higher admission than formerly.

South Affected

While the industry of the entire country was affected by the change, exhibitors in the South felt it most. Throughout a good part of the South, in the summer, under standard time, the sun does not set until about 8:00 P. M., and it doesn't get real dark until nearly 9:00. Under advanced time, sunset is at 9:00 and it still is fairly light for half or three-quarters of an hour more.

Opposition to daylight time was further linked with that voiced by the farmers in 1917, they reported that daylight saving caused a financial loss to Oregon exhibitors, particularly those in towns in farming districts. Southern Oregon exhibitors, who previously opened their houses at 7:00 P. M., had to delay opening until 8:00. Exhibitors maintained that rural folk work by the sun and go to bed by the clock which cuts show time down an hour.

In 1918, Canadian exhibitors were affected similarly by daylight saving legislation, as passed by the Canadian Government. Western Canadian exhibitors pointed out that changing the clock meant practically daylight until 10:30 P. M. nightly.

Benjamin Franklin, according to the Encyclopedia Britannica, is credited with being the first man to originate the idea for daylight saving time, on the theory that putting the clock ahead would give people more "leisure time."

One of the first campaigners for daylight saving in modern times was William Willett, an English builder who published a pamphlet called "Waste of Daylight," in 1907, and for years devoted a one-man campaign for putting the clock ahead 80 minutes in the spring and summer.

Daylight saving on a national basis was introduced in England and Europe in 1915, the second year of World War I, as a method of conserving fuel for lighting and heating.

In the United States, no public interest was developed until after the outbreak of the first World War and it was not until 1916 that a nationwide campaign was initiated in its support. Opinion was divided, but in 1917 Congress passed an Act which took effect in 1918, providing that the standard time of the U. S. be advanced one hour on the last Sunday in March and set back one hour on the last Sunday in October. The act was effective from March 31st until October 27, 1918 and again on March 30th, 1919. Strenuous opposition, chiefly from American farmers, caused the Act to be repealed on August 20th, 1919, over President Wilson's veto. Since then, the question has been left to the various state and local authorities with the result that daylight saving legislation has been sporadic and intermittent.

Daylight Time in Britain

Since the outbreak of World War II, daylight time has been re-established in Great Britain, in the autumn of 1940. According to the World Almanac, over 35,000,000 people observe summer daylight time in the United States, 250,000,000 throughout the world. State-wide use of daylight saving in summer has been adopted in New Jersey and Rhode Island; in Maine and New Hampshire, daylight time was legalized. Greater New York, including all of Long Island and Westchester County and the state of Connecticut also observe the time as do Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago and other cities and towns.

In Canada, in September, 1940, just before daylight time was to revert to standard time, the Dominion Government by Order-in-Council under the War Measures Act, ordered those municipalities in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec to continue daylight saving indefinitely.

Other countries also observing saving time are Cuba, Egypt, Estonia, unoccupied France, Germany, occupied France, the Netherlands, Belgium, Denmark, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Mexico, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, and Shanghai and Central China.

CLEARANCE AWARD WINNER ASKS MORE AND GETS IT

AN EXHIBITOR, appealing an arbitration award in his favor on the grounds that it was insufficient, won a further cut from the Appeal Board this week. In their sixteenth decision the Board members amended the award granted the Liberty theatre, Plainfield, N. J. and ordered that the clearance of two out of the three intervening theatres be reduced from 21 to 14 days.

Joseph Siccardi, president of the Andora Amusement Company filed the clearance complaint last March against the five consenting distributors and the Strand, Paramount and Oxford theatres, operated in Plainfield by the Walter Reade circuit. James A. O'Gorman, arbitrator, cut the 30 day margin to 21 days in September. Mr. Siccardi appealed, asserting that the award did not sufficiently reduce the margin and did not take into account the different characters of the three intervening theatres.

The Appeal Board upheld the 21 days margin for the Strand, first run house which plays single feature "A" pictures on a weekly change basis. The Paramount and Oxford theatres, subsequent, double feature houses had their margins over the Liberty cut from 21 to 14 days.

Board Statement

The Appeal Board, in describing the single feature, one week run policy of the Strand declared, "The high character of the theatre and its general method of single feature operation entitles it to substantial protection by way of clearance over a subsequent run theatre. Twenty-one days' clearance is ample protection."

Although the Strand runs single features, a policy of showing the incoming picture at a "preview" on the night before the weekly changeover "In reality makes the theatre a double feature theatre for one night a week" the board ruled.

The double feature policies of the Paramount and Oxford, lower admission prices, shorter runs and give aways and "auctions" at the Oxford prevent them from enjoying clearance over the Liberty equal to the Strand the Appeal Board ruled.

"If a clearance of 21 days in favor of the Strand over the Liberty is reasonable the clearance of the Paramount and Oxford over the Liberty should certainly be shorter. It should be not exceed 14 days," the board wrote.

Decisions in the Esquire (New York No. 2) and Main and Parsons theatre appeals (Cincinnati cases No. 2 and 3) were cited by the Appeal Board to show that 14 days is a reasonable clearance among theatres "where the competitive features are comparable" to those in Plainfield.

Pittsburgh

The first decision on a specific run demand dismissed the complaint of David Green, operator of the Beacon theatre, Pittsburgh, on Friday. Samuel W. Pringle, Pittsburgh attorney who heard the case, ruled that the complainant failed to establish that he had been refused day and date with Warner's Squirrel Hill theatre because the latter house was a circuit theatre.

Refusal of the five consenting distributors to grant the run requested by Mr. Green was not arbitrary, Mr. Pringle said, but based on the fact that the Squirrel Hill was "a definitely better" theatre. Mr. Pringle cited new equipment, operating policies and other factors in support of the award. The Beacon, with 600 seats, is smaller than the Squirrel Hill. Costs were divided equally.

The Beacon complaint was filed in May, 1941, as a clearance action. When the jurisdiction of the arbitrator in this case under section VIII of the consent decree was questioned the complaint was continued by agreement until it could be heard in December as a Specific Run action. Section X of the decree, covering Specific Run, became operative on September 1st. It requires that refusal to license persist for at least three months.

Des Moines

The Des Moines, Iowa, tribunal of the motion picture arbitration system received its first case last week after it had been open for almost a year. Three complaints were filed on some run and clearance by Burlington and Charles City, Ia., exhibitors. Seattle is the only tribunal without a case.

In the first action Jack Kuach, operator of the Gem theatre, Charles City, Ia., asked some run. He charged that Paramount has refused to sell pictures to his house, a 500 seat theatre. The Charles, also 500 seats, the only other theatre in Charles City, was cited as an interested party.

The second and third complaints at Des Moines were filed simultaneously by Lee and William Tiermeier, owners of the Avon theatre, in Burlington, Iowa. Case two, combining clearance and some run, names the Capitol theatre, first run house operated by the Central States circuit, and charges that, by splitting its first run, the Capitol forces an unfair clearance of 180 days for the second run Avon. Warner Brothers is the defendant distributor. Citing specific pictures the complaint charged that the Capitol played Warner's "Smiling Ghosts" on October 30th and then, several weeks later, brought the picture back on a split booking for a new engagement.

In Case three the Avon complains that RKO similarly split a booking of "Look Who's Laughing" at the Palace theatre, Burlington.

Philadelphia

Philadelphia's arbitration board docketed Case No. 17 on Monday when the Plains theatre, Plains, Pa., operated by J. Engle, filed a clearance demand against Loew's, Paramount, and Warner Brothers. The theatre asks that the seven day clearance granted the Parsons theatre in Parsons, Pa., be eliminated. Both theatres are in the Scranton-Wilkes-Barre mining area.

Chicago

In Chicago's 11th case, Thomas C. McConnell, arbitrator, on Tuesday ruled that the seven-day clearance the Westmont theatre, Westmont, Ill., enjoyed over Ray Jarman's Don theatre, Downer's Grove, Ill., was unreasonable. The maximum clearance given the Westmont by RKO and 20th Century-Fox over the Don "shall not be in excess of 24 hours," he ordered.

The Alcyon Theatre, Highland Park, Ill., case (No. 9) resumed on January 14th and was adjourned until January 20th. Drennan J. Slater dismissed the case Wednesday. He said clearance granted was not unreasonable.

In the Oriental Theatre case (No. 6), stipulations have been agreed upon by the parties to extend the time for the filing of reply briefs to January 22nd. RKO and MGM attorneys have withdrawn motions to dismiss the case on the question of the arbitrator's jurisdiction, but RKO has not withdrawn its motion to dismiss under Section 17.

Chicago's 12th case, clearance action of the Annetta theatre, has been continued until January 29th. At that time James Sprowl, arbitrator, will rule on a motion to dismiss made by Aaron Stein, attorney for intervenors.

Kansas City

In the second case before the Kansas City arbitration tribunal, a clearance demand by the Dickinson theatre, Mission, Kan., all parties have filed a stipulation extending the time for the filing of an award from January 12th to February 2d.

Paul L. Fitzpatrick, General Motors executive, and the first non-lawyer to write a motion picture arbitration decision, has joined the American Arbitration Association at New York as an executive vice president.

Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, president of the AAA, announced that Mr. Fitzpatrick had taken a year's leave of absence from his post as director of policy and sales development of the Motors Holding Division of General Motors to aid arbitration.

Mr. Fitzpatrick, who arbitrated New York's Case No. 13, a clearance demand by the Playhouse, in Raritan, N. J., was the first layman to deliver a film arbitration decision. The Appeal Board, upholding the reduction in clearance ordered by Mr. Fitzpatrick, praised the lucidity and directness of his award.

A leader in the automotive field since 1915, Mr. Fitzpatrick is credited in that trade with working out one of the first methods of automobile installment purchases.

Mr. Fitzpatrick will center his attention at the AAA on the Association's inter-American and defense arbitration work.

The American Arbitration Association is preparing a case book to summarize the first year of motion picture arbitration and the disposition of all cases entered before the tribunals. Dr. Wesley A. Sturges, Sterling Professor of Law at Yale, will write an introductory analysis. The text of all awards, decisions and appeal actions will be printed.

PRC Starts Series of Four Regional Parleys

The first of four regional conventions scheduled by Producers Releasing Corporation during the next four weeks, will be held in New York Saturday and Sunday, to be followed by others in Little Rock, January 31st and February 1st; Chicago, February 7th and 8th, and Los Angeles February 14th and 15th.

Sales representatives of managers of branches in the respective territories of each city will attend the sessions at which expanded production and distribution plans will be discussed.

Arnstein To Address Group

Daniel Arnstein, appointed by President Roosevelt as the U. S. Commissioner for the Burma Road, will be the guest speaker at the defense meeting of the Cinema Lodge of B'nai B'rith in New York on January 28th, at the Hotel Edison, Arthur Israel, president of the lodge, has announced.

N. Y. UNITY MEETING SWINGS INTO ACTION, HARMONY

WEDNESDAY began the first phase of the motion picture industry's new attempt at "unity," declared by all its branches a necessity now in war, and more than ever after the war.

Into the Warwick Hotel, on New York's 54th Street, flocked representatives of every sector of the country, at 2:30 P.M., called there, and to attention by Jack Kirsch, president of the Illinois Allied and temporary chairman of those present Wednesday. The committee is known as the Motion Picture Industry Conference Committee.

Evolved at the Chicago "unity" meeting, under the sponsorship of the National Allied States Association, the group includes five Allied members, five from the MPTOA, five from independent exhibitor organizations, and one representative each from the film companies. Sub-committees were named to act on each of the five points of action approved at the Chicago meeting. Those sub-committees reported Wednesday to the full Committee on the results of first meetings, and on meetings to come.

The five points upon which they are acting, and which are to give the film industry harmony within and a solid front to outside, hostile interests, are: action and policy on taxation; action and policy on the protection of the industry's good name; institutional advertising and other good-will activities; securing of priority ratings; and adjustment of disputed industry practices.

Rodgers Chairman

Concrete action came forthwith out of the group. Thirty men representing all branches of the trade except the producer—and they were represented through distributor agents—sat down at a long "u" table Wednesday afternoon, elected a permanent chairman, William F. Rodgers, general sales manager of MGM to replace Mr. Jack Kirsch; were to determine methods of financing, and permanent offices; and heard specific proposals for action on the "five points" of unity and harmony.

Spyros Skouras, elected permanent chairman by his subcommittee to coordinate policy and action for the film industry on taxation (Point One), presented the recommendations of his group: that it watch national tax legislation; that it determine which legislation affects the industry; that it suggest appropriate action to be taken by the industry; that machinery to guide legislators so they do not formulate taxes disruptive to the industry, be established. The taxation subcommittee also suggested the personnel of all branches of the industry in Washington be made available to it; that all the industry's legal talent be similarly available; and that permanent committees in each exchange territory be named locally, and if necessary by the MPICC—such committees on taxation to comprise representatives of independent, and affiliated, exhibition, and of the distributors.

It was understood the taxation national subcommittee would consider 1942 taxation, for the present; and to expedite its action,

MINNESOTA LAW STILL ASSAILED

The Minnesota anti-consent decree law so hampered United Artists it almost closed its Minneapolis exchange, Ralph Cramblet, its exchange manager there testified in Ramsey County Court, St. Paul, late last week, thus continuing the parade of testimony by distribution executives, designed to show the law unworkable, and unconstitutional. Having obtained relief from the decree in New York Federal Court, the distributors are now observing the Minnesota law, selling their entire season's product, and allowing cancellation of 20 per cent. Although UA is not in the decree, its representatives have been called by Twentieth Century-Fox, Paramount, and RKO, defending themselves against a charge of violating the law by selling films in blocks of five and ten.

the local committees, it was reported, were to be chosen within two weeks.

George J. Schaefer presented the report of the subcommittee on coordination of policy and action to protect the good name of the industry. Recommendations were that, cognizant of its potentialities and responsibilities, the industry will subordinate its immediate interests for the public good; that all persons in the film business bear in mind their responsibility to protect its reputation, and that all sectors of the business have in mind the interests of it as a whole; that the industry formally pledge itself to assist public movements and promote the best interests of the nation; that the subcommittee conduct a "campaign of information" to the public, through the subcommittee on Point Three (institutional advertising and good-will activities); that the proper machinery be set up to adjust differences within the industry to avoid public exposure of those differences; that the several branches of the industry cooperate with the subcommittee; that the Committee as a whole be recognized as a medium for the furtherance of the subcommittee's purposes; and that the Committee delegate authority for proper steps by the subcommittee in pursuit of its trust.

The subcommittee on Point Three (institutional advertising and good-will activities) reported through Leonard Goldenson, head of the Paramount theatre circuit, in the absence because of illness of chairman Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity for MGM, thus: that an appropriation be made for research into the industry's general conduct of business, with the immediate purpose to ascertain who are the persons who do not attend films regularly, what mediums may reach them, what the cost will be, how practical the mediums may be, and other pertinent facts. Also recommended: that exhibitors cooperate with the subcommittee by giving information to the research group about factors in pictures not doing well; and that this information be given to an independent tribunal to consult by all branches of the industry.

Waste Prevention Stressed

As Point Four a priorities subcommittee's report was given by Si Fabian, New Jersey circuit operator, for Joseph Bernhard of Warners, subcommittee chairman, who was absent. The report reviewed developments before and since the appointment of A. Julian Brylawski as consultant to the Government on priorities and the motion picture business. It emphasized need for economy and prevention of waste in virtually all materials in the industry.

In connection with the taxation report by Mr. Skouras it was suggested that his committee have a full-time paid staff and a central office, and that tax data on the industry be collected from all sources.

Financing of the Committee's activities was discussed Wednesday night and Thursday morning. On Thursday, too, the MPICC was to provide for Mr. Rodgers an executive secretary; and then was to argue methods of dealing with intra-industry disputes—Point Five, deemed the business of the whole Committee.

All Exhibitor Units Present

Present were Robert Poole, Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatres Owners; Robert White, same organization; William Crockett, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia; Harry Brandt, Independent Theatre Owners Association, New York; Edward Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Max Cohen, head of the New York MPTO unit; Ned Depinet, general sales manager, RKO; William F. Rodgers, general sales manager, MGM; Spyros Skouras, National Theatres chief; Harry Thomas, Monogram; Elmer Rhoden, Fox Midwest; Fred Wehrenberg, president of the St. Louis MPTO; I. Howard Levinson, Warners legal staff; M. A. Rosenberg, director, Western Pennsylvania Allied; Martin Smith, president of the Ohio ITO; Tom Connors, executive assistant to Sidney Kent, president of Twentieth Century Fox; James R. Grainger, president of Republic; Henderson M. Richey, director of exhibitor relations for MGM; Leo Brecher, New York theatre operator; Sam Morris, Warners; Joseph Vogel, Loew circuit; Roy Harrold, Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana; Harry Kalmine, Warners; Abe Montague, general sales manager, Columbia; Felix Jenkins, general counsel, Twentieth Century Fox; Leonard Goldenson, Paramount theatres head.

Two large factors of the industry did not appear at the meeting: Universal and United Artists. Their executives, while approving the purposes of the meeting, and similarly those of the previous Chicago meeting, stressed that the companies were to be prosecuted in the New York Federal Court on the Government's still pending anti-trust charges; and therefore, the defendants could not risk cooperative action which might be construed as conspiratorial.

Even as industry officials flocked to the Warwick meeting hall, board members of the National Allied States Association, some on the MPICC, also gathered at the hotel. They were to hold their annual meeting the day following the MPICC meeting.

Ask Allied To Study "Ceiling"

The annual meeting of the Allied national directors, scheduled for the day following the MPICC meeting at New York's Hotel Warwick, might have as a "hot potato" for discussion the fight for control of film rentals under the Federal price bill, by Minnesota independent exhibitors, who are also members of the organization's Northwest Allied.

Those independents wired Wendell Willkie last week to represent them against the distributors—a request since rejected—and asked their Congressional representatives to have control of film rentals inserted in the Federal law.

Colonel H. A. Cole, Allied president, said the Minnesota action surprised him. Sidney Samuelson, head of the Eastern Pennsylvania unity, and a director, said the matter might be acted upon by the board.

At Washington, meanwhile, it was noted that previous Congressional action probably made impossible fulfillment of the Minnesota exhibitors' request. Observers in Washington pointed out that the Senate had approved California Senator Sheridan Downey's amendment exempting films, like newspapers, and the radio, from the provisions of the Federal bill.

Mr. Willkie, in receipt of the independent exhibitors' request that he represent them against his former clients, the organized distributors, remarked his unfamiliarity with the Minnesota situation, and wired Northwest Allied that previous commitments prevented him from accepting their offer.

In Minneapolis conferences occurred between the exhibitors' committee which wired Mr. Willkie and Minnesota Congressmen, and Ben Kalmenson, Warners general sales manager, and Neil Agnew, Paramount sales manager. The exhibitors have intimated that if these conferences produce no results, they will ask Governor Harold Stassen to enforce the Minnesota anti-trust law. On Monday they told independent exhibitors the conferences were failing, and they asked the theatre operators' opinions.

Fred Strom, Northwest Allied secretary, said Mr. Kalmenson made "some concessions" but these were not enough to produce agreement. The exhibitors' committee met Monday with J. E. Flynn, MGM central division manager, and on Wednesday, with Mr. Agnew.

Supplementing opposition to the consent decree, among Minnesota exhibitors, 98 per cent of those in Wisconsin, and North and South Dakota, also serviced by the Minneapolis exchange—have voted against the decree's blocks of five selling, and trade-showing provisions, Northwest Allied claimed last week.

Harold Field resigned from the Northwest Allied board last week. He had been chairman of the legislative committee, which drafted, and pushed the state's anti-consent decree bill and law. He was also chairman of the special exhibitors' committee referred to, which had tried to reach agreement about product and rentals, with the distributors, which failed of its purpose, and which last week sought a prominent lawyer and asked Minnesota Congressmen to put film rentals under the Federal price control bill.

MGM St. Louis "Forum", Its Third, Well Attended

More than 170 exhibitors in St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois attended the MGM Exhibitors' Forum in St. Louis Thursday, January 15th, at the Hotel Coronado.

Many of the small-town exhibitors came prepared to register complaints on subjects ranging from newspaper advertising and publicity to admission scales.

After listening attentively to a resume of amusement newspaper advertising by Joseph X. Gooris, representative of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, several out-of-town exhibitors asked why they were unable to rate free space in home town newspapers. One asked advertising representatives of St. Louis metropolitan dailies why their papers didn't publish directories of theatres in rural areas along with St. Louis shows. Another said the best deal he ever received from his local newspaper was a story on page three on the opening of his new $60,000 house.

Stewart Chambers, advertising manager for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, delighted exhibitors by saying surveys showed 67 per cent of newspaper readers read amusement pages compared with 40 per cent the radio columns.

H. M. Richey, MGM director of exhibitor relations, urged exhibitors to help newspapers build circulation, to develop a ready medium to reach the movie-going public.

Other speakers were Edward Salzberg, Bluefield, West Virginia; John E. Flynn, MGM central division manager; Mrs. Besa Short, short subjects manager for the Interstate Circuit of Texas; Fred Wehrenberg, president of the St. Louis MPTOA, William Ferguson, MGM exploitation manager.

On Tuesday of last week, January 13th, MGM had held its second exhibitor forum at the Gayoso Hotel, Memphis, similarly well attended, with the same speakers, mainly.

Wood Urges Exhibitors To Raise Admissions

Because the industry is faced with increased Federal taxes on admissions, film rentals and seats to help meet the sum asked in President Roosevelt's recent budget message, P. J. Wood, secretary of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio in a message to theatre owners advocated an increase in admission prices, particularly at the first run houses, thus enabling the subsequent to revise their scales upward.

Mr. Wood emphasized that admissions were not increased coincident with imposition of the Federal impost which went into effect October 1, but he urged action now "Because every type of commodity has gone up in price, while we are selling our merchandise at practically the same price as a year ago."

Mr. Wood also wrote Edward Kuykendall, MPTOA president, that the latter's recent statements about abolition of acknowledged industry evils were probably written with "tongue in cheek" because, Mr. Wood wrote, "you and I know that, while this grand country of ours is strong enough to eventually win the war, it is not strong enough to cope with the machinations of the leaders of this industry, and make them be good."

The consent decree was assailed categorically by the Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, meeting in Charlotte, North Carolina, Sunday and Monday. The attack was contained in a formal resolution which also listed reasons the decree was onerous, and suggested an alternative to allow theatre owners to buy films the old way.

The organization also elected new officers: Roy Howe, president; A. F. Sams, Jr., first vice-president; Boyd Brown, second vice-president; Mrs. Walter Griffith, secretary and treasurer.

The listed reasons for the decree's condemnation were forced buying in blocks of five films; lack of a cancellation privilege; the delay of purchase until after Tradeshowing, a delay which it was asserted, increases costs to producers, who in turn pass them to exhibitors; interference with theatre bookings, resultant from the delay mentioned; corollary demands for increased admissions.

Chief speaker was Edward Kuykendall, MPTOA president, who asked unity, and stressed its necessity.

The exhibitors helped sell $795,000 of defense bonds, in a public offer at the city's Independence Square, aided by Judy Canova, Republic singing star, and James J. Walker, former mayor of New York.

Harry Brandt, another guest speaker, told the Southern exhibitors the film industry is the most maligned in the country; and that only by unity could it achieve respect.

Among other speakers were Claude Lee, director of exhibitor relations for Paramount, and David Palfreyman, of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

The annual meeting of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, Thursday, was preceded by a buffet luncheon for members, of which speakers were to be Mayor Frank J. Lausche and his secretary, John Lokar. Officers were elected.

Philadelphia Ice Show Grosses $120,000

"Ice Follies of 1942," again asserting its increasing strength at the box-office, closed a 12-day engagement at the Arena in Philadelphia on Tuesday, January 20th, with a gross of approximately $120,000. A strong possibility exists that the ice show will make a feature picture following its cross-continental tour. Herbert Yates and James Granger, of Republic Pictures, met with the show's producers during its Philadelphia run, along with Miss Fanchon, of Fanchon and Marco.

Originally scheduled for 10 days, started January 7th, the ice show held over for two additional days, making it the second longest run on its present tour. Only in Chicago was the stay longer, remaining there for 14 days. During its stay in Philadelphia, the ice show attracted 92,000 persons, with attendance at each show varying from 5,500 to 6,500. The Arena seats 6,000 and tickjets were scaled from $1.14 to $2.85. The local engagement set new figure-skating attendance for Philadelphia.

High Budget Serial Set

Republic Pictures has announced plans to make the highest budgeted serial in the company's history for the 1942-43 season to be entitled "G Men Versus the Black Dragon," an expose of the secret Japanese espionage society. According to an announcement from the studio the production will cost approximately $500,000.

WAR NEWS BRINGS BOOM TO NEWSREEL THEATRES

PUBLIC INTEREST in news accounts of the United States at war is proving a definite boon to the 25 or more all-newsreel theatres operating in the principal cities of the United States.

The increase in attendance at the topical film theatres, however, is still proportionately less than the boom in newspaper circulation and radio listening reported since the Japanese attack on December 7th. Informed newsreel executives estimate the total increase in business directly attributable to the war at between 10 and 15 per cent.

The increase is greatest in the coastal cities of New York, Washington, Boston, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, San Francisco and the Pacific Northwest. In Chicago, Detroit and Texas newsreel operations also report increases.

Newsreel theatre managers report great interest by patrons in pictures filmed under fire and in pictures which show vividly and extensively the action of U. S. forces and defense outposts in the Pacific. As official films from the war zone become available, if and when they are released by Army and Navy censors, managers say business will increase. They also report that public interest in radio reports of the first stages of the war has held business back somewhat, but note a constant increase as the country becomes accustomed to a war routine.

Three Circuits Operating

There are from 25 to 30 newsreel theatres, circuit and independent-owned, operating in the United States. Newsreel Theatres, Inc., operates four houses in New York and one in Newark.

Telenews has theatres in Chicago, Dallas, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland, Seattle, Portland, Ore., Cleveland and Detroit. Trans-Lux operates two newsreel theatres in New York and newsreels in Washington, Philadelphia and Boston.

Newsreel Theatres, Inc., operator of the Embassy and four other newsreel houses in the New York area, was incorporated in February, 1934. W. French Githens, former editor of Fox and Pathe newsreels, is president.

Trans-Lux Daylight Screen Corporation opened its first news theatre in New York in 1930, using a patented rear of screen projection system. Two of the company's four houses in New York City are exhibiting features.

Telenews and Newsreel Theatres, Inc., have recently formed a new subsidiary, Newsreel Productions, Inc., to produce special subjects for their theatres. A series of war comments by Tex McCrary, New York Daily Mirror editorial writer and foreign news analyst, have been distributed through the newsreel circuits for several months. A question and answer release featuring H. V. Kaltenborn, radio news analyst, has just been launched. Questions are solicited from theatre audiences and prizes awarded for those used in future releases. The picture is being sold outside newsreel theatres.

Chicago has two newsreel theatres, both located in the downtown district. The Telenews Theatre, 600 seats, the first in the area, was opened on December 23, 1939, and is operated by the Midwest Newsreels Theatre Corporation, headed by Herbert Scheffel. It is next door to the Chicago Theatre and in the heart of the shopping and theatrical section.

The Today Theatre, 327 seats, opened on March 1, 1941, is owned and managed by Rich-

EMBASSY NEWSREEL OPENED IN 1929

The first all-newsreel theatre of the current type was opened by Fox Movietone News at the Embassy in New York on November 2nd, 1929. Six months prior to this debut, Fox had opened the theatre for newsreel showings primarily to sell news by camera and sound to exhibitors. The November 2nd premiere was the first showing for the public.

ard Beck. It is located nearer the center of the Loop at a busy intersection. Both houses have been successful.

Commenting on his patrons' reaction to war topics, Mr. Beck said: "Our patrons like pictures of actual combat filmed under fire. This is evidenced by the increased business we enjoy when we are able to present such scenes instead of ordinary war clips. Patrons are fed up on the repetitious scenes on National Defense such as launching of new ships, activity in aeroplane factories, speeches by long-winded politicians and such. Nor do they care much for shots of our own army's war maneuvers."

Patrons of the Telenews Theatre have a liking for any topic of headline interest, as transferred to the screen, according to Sylvan Goldfinger, manager of the house. He believes that their interest in topical subjects is just as intense as it is in war topics.

The Tex McCrary commentaries have been popular at this house and it has recently introduced the reels presenting H. V. Kaltenborn, NBC news analyst.

Reaction to the reel has been favorable, it is said.

One in Seattle

Seattle's first newsreel theatre, the Telenews, in its first two months of operation has achieved a decided success in public acceptance and financial gain. Formerly the Capitol theatre, under operation of John Dana's Sterling chain, the Telenews' policy has met with favor, according to reports.

Programs consist of 60-minute showings of newsreels, shorts of educational or world-topic nature, and a generous sprinkling of sports subjects. Attendance is overwhelmingly male, and programs are booked accordingly. Interest in war subjects, reviews, etc., runs high.

Admission prices at the Telenews are 25 cents plus tax, and the house operates from noon until midnight. Complete changes of programs are made once each week.

The new Newsreel Theatre, of the Hamrick-Evergreen Theatres in Portland, Oregon, is off to an auspicious start. The theatre reports that in the past 30 days the public was intensely interested in war topics, especially in the marine engagements showing the U. S. Marines and sailors.

Admission price is maintained at 25 cents for all 11 daily shows. Bills are changed every Friday at 6 P. M. and are advertised in radio and press. A considerable pick-up in daily attendance is noted immediately after the 15th and 1st of each month, following local pay check distributions. Hours of operation are 11:30 A. M. and 10 P. M.

The house has used a giveaway coupon good for 15 cents at the boxoffice as a trial promotional measure. Portland papers are giving considerable amusement page attention to the newsreel bills.

In Minneapolis the Esquire theatre, subsequent run downtown house, formerly operated by Ben Berger, has been taken over by Lawrence E. Cohen, California news theatre operator. The 290-seat house has been renovated and is reportedly meeting of success in the newsreel policy inaugurated last month.

Mr. Cohen, who is a partner in Sacramento and Los Angeles newsreel theatres, is buying the pictures of all five newsreels. Additionally he is programming the March of Time, cartoons, and featurettes. Bills are changed once weekly and an effort is made to cover state and local events. Admission is a flat 25 cents.

The newsreel theatre opened in Houston, Texas, recently is operated jointly by Telenews and the Interstate Circuit. R. J. O'Donnell, president of Interstate, converted a business site in downtown Houston to a news theatre following the success of the news theatre at Dallas opened jointly by Interstate and Telenews in November.

Trans-Lux theatres at Washington, Philadelphia, Boston and New York have featured news broadcasts piped directly to the theatre auditoriums. It is also the practice to read spot news bulletins of an important nature over the theatre sound system. The majority of the newsreel houses have some form of news ticker direct to the theatre. United Press, Press Association (AP subsidiary) and International News Service all have theatre installations, while local tieups are frequently arranged with radio stations.

Utilize News Tickers

Ticker bulletins are said to be excellent attendance aids when posted in front of the newsreel theatres. Latest dispatches are posted inside the lobby.

The first regular tie-up between a Philadelphia movie house and radio station was affected between the Trans-Lux Theatre and KYW. A regular schedule of news provided by the station is flashed on the screen at regular intervals. Since the advent of the war, the Trans-Lux has added H. V. Kaltenborn's questions and answer analysis and Tex McCrary's "Your Ringside Seat" series.

The Philadelphia and Washington theatres operate from 11 A. M. to 11 P. M. and charge 28 and 30-cent admissions, tax included. Both have been open for several years and are said to be highly successful operations.

Newsreel theatres have not attracted much public interest in Canada, it is reported. Only one news theatre, recently opened, is now in operation. This is the Cinema de Paris in Montreal, which previously exhibited nothing but French product. The house was acquired by Consolidated Theatres, Ltd., and opened during the week after Christmas as a news theatre. It carries a large number of Canadian government pictures, British official reels and the product of American newsreel companies.

Previously Famous Players Canadian, and the Odeon circuits have been reported surveying the newsreel field with an eye to opening topical theatres in Toronto, Winnipeg, Quebec, Montreal, Hamilton, Vancouver and other larger cities. To date, however, they have not ventured into the field, reportedly feeling that with price controls and other restrictions the venture would not be self-sustaining despite growing interest in newsreels among theatre patrons generally.

News Theatres Successful In Havana

In 1939 the Rex Cinema, first newsreel house in Havana, Cuba, was opened by A. Vives. The 700-seat house is located in the central shopping district on San Rafael Street and operates continuously from 11 A. M. through the evening.

Business is said to have been excellent since opening and on days when bills change capacity audiences are reported. The one-hour program includes British Olympic, Paramount and Fox Movietone News, March of Time and R. H. C. Cadena Azul's "Royal News," local Cuban release, and American and British short product as well as some Spanish material.

Admission is 20 cents before 6 P. M., 30 cents thereafter. Children pay 15 cents at all times.

In December Mr. Vives took over the operation of the Neptuno theatre in partnership with the Smith circuit and the house now plays the Rex news and short subject program on second run, one week later. A previous attempt by Mr. Vives to operate the Cinecito theatre as a news house did not prove profitable. Admission to the second run house is 10 cents.

Thrice monthly the Rex and Neptune present special programs of combined short subjects at 40 cents admission. These special programs include musical short subjects, March of Time issues and extensive travel material. These shows are heavily advertised and draw a large attendance and an exceptionally high type of patronage.

"The reaction of my patrons to the appearance on the screen of Roosevelt or Churchill or any of the top figures of democracy proves the true democratic feeling of the Cuban people," Mr. Vives declared. He reports that 80 per cent of his regular patronage sees each change of program.

Attendance Up In Canada

Canada's 1,232 theatres in 1940 sat 152,137,277 persons, who paid $37,858,955 in admissions, the Canadian Government said this week in a report on theatre operations. In 1939, 138,497,043 Canadians paid their theatres $34,010,115. Patronage thus increased 10 per cent and revenue 11 per cent.

The report added that 1940 receipts were a near-record. The year 1930 holds the record. Box offices then tallied $38,479,500.

Distributors arnered $11,880,895 in 1940. Seventy-two film exchanges were operating and in 1939 only 67 were open.

The report noted that 37.5 per cent of theatres showed single bills, the ratio being the same as in 1939. Quebec theatres had more double bills than those of other provinces.

The "average" Canadian spent $3.35 for theatre entertainment in 1940; $3.03 in 1939; $3.02 in 1938. But he spent $3.77 in 1930.

Theatres, said the report, were efficient to only 30 per cent, in filling their seats for all performances.

Indiana-Illinois Circuit Acquires Four Theatres

The Indiana-Illinois Theatres circuit, headed by Alex Manta and Jack Rose, have bought a controlling interest in the Simansky & Miller circuit, Chicago, and have assumed operation of the four houses acquired in the deal. Addition of these theatres increases the string to 24 houses.

The theatres acquired in the deal are the Lido, Maywood, Ill., the Forst and Lily theatres, Forest Park, Ill., and the Savoy, Chicago. George Miller, former manager of the Lido, becomes district manager of the four theatres, and has been succeeded by Clyde Armstrong, transferred from the circuit's Hoosier Theatre, Whiting, Ind. Don Johnson, who left the organization several months ago when he was manager of the Lex Theatre, Chicago, to go to the coast, has returned to the company as manager of the Lil Theatre, Forest Park, Ill. Walter Smith remains as manager of the Forest and Irving Barnett continues at the Savoy.

Warners Set New Loan

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., has completed arrangements for a $2,000,000 loan for the purchase of its six per cent debentures due in 1948.

The loan is at 2½ per cent and was made from the New York Trust Company, Guaranty Trust Company, and the Continental Illinois Bank and Trust Company of Chicago. It is payable $1,000,000 on October 1st, 1945, and a similar amount on April 1st, 1946, and is secured by collateral now pledged to the same banks as security for the existing $4,000,000 loans and subject substantially to the same terms and conditions.

Tenders of the 1948 debentures have been invited by the company at prices not exceeding 96 per cent of the face amount up to February 2nd, for acceptance up to February 9th. Sufficient debentures to meet sinking fund requirements through 1944 are in the Warner treasury, it was said, and the debentures to be purchased will be for 1945-46 sinking fund requirements.

Chicago Curtails Bowling

Police Commissioner James P. Allman, of Chicago, has ordered the immediate enforcement of a 31-year old city ordinance, ordering the closing of all bowling alleys in the city between 1 a.m. and 7 a.m. Bowling has enjoyed a phenomenal growth in Chicago in the last three years and tremendous sums have been invested in air-conditioned streamlined bowling establishments with many alleys in competition to theatres. Thousands of persons are accustomed to bowling after midnight, the biggest business normally being done between 1 and 3 a.m.

Columbia Cites 50% Jump in Domestic Sales

Columbia Pictures had an increase in domestic sales of 50 per cent for the six-months just past over the corresponding period last year, A. Montague, general sales manager, announced in New York on Tuesday. The last June to January period was the "greatest by far in the 22-year history of the company," said Mr. Montague.

He also announced that upwards of $50,000 in defense bonds would be distributed to the sales force, in a sales drive covering the first six-months of 1942.

The largest advertising budget for Columbia, representing a 30 per cent increase over any previous year has been set, also "a shooting schedule which includes the largest number of top bracket productions ever placed before cameras by the studio."

"The Invaders," starring Laurence Olivier, Leslie Howard, Raymond Massey and Glynis Johns, it was said, will have road-showing in New York and Los Angeles in February. Columbia announced for early release "The Lady is Willing," starring Marlene Dietrich and Fred MacMurray; "Adventures of Martin Eden," the Jack London classic, with Glenn Ford, Claire Trevor and Evelyn Keyes; "Two Yanks in Trinidad," with Pat O'Brien, Brian Donlevy and Janet Blair, and "Highly Irregular," with Joan Bennett and Franchot Tone.

Scheduled for production during coming months and also included in the advertising program are the George Stevens production, "The Gentlemen Misbehave," co-starring Cary Grant, Jean Arthur and Ronald Colman; "He Kissed The Bride," with Melvyn Douglas and a prominent feminine co-star; "My Sister Eileen," starring Rosalind Russell; "Salute To Tobruk," timely story based on the famous siege of the Libyan stronghold, to be filmed with an all-male cast; an as yet untitled Fred Astaire-Rita Hayworth musical; "Pal Joey," filmization of the Broadway success; "Miss Grant Takes Richmond," "Destroyer Men," a saga of the United States Navy by Lt. Commander Frank Wead; "Burma Road," dealing with the Chinese life-line; "Let The Eagle Scream," topical drama; "The Pioneers," based on the last novel of Courtney Riley Cooper; "The Rumelhearts of Rampler Avenue" and a feature to be based on Elizabeth Dunn's Ladies Home Journal story, "Something Borrowed."

Dorothea McEvoy Joins "Stardom"

Dorothea Lee McEvoy, former staff writer for the New Rochelle, N. Y., Standard Star and other newspapers in the Westchester County Publishers chain, has been appointed editorial associate of Stardom, a new motion picture monthly publication which made its debut January 16th. She is the daughter of Edward L. McEvoy, Universal sales executive.

CANADA TO RUN INDUSTRY THROUGH POST-WAR PERIOD

by W. M. GLADISH in Toronto

Control of the motion picture industry in Canada has been taken over by the Dominion Government, not only for the duration of the war, but indefinitely thereafter.

Official announcement of the application of the price stabilization policy to film rentals by the Canadian Government came Saturday, when James Stewart, of Toronto, administrator of services of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, announced. "Rental of films by exhibitors also comes under the price control regulations". It was on that date, too, that formal public announcement that admissions to all picture theatres had finally been pegged as of the basic period between September 15th and October 11th, 1941.

The film business in Canada actually had little to go on, prior to the official statement, that the motion picture industry had been virtually taken under government control, with the bare exception of an earlier "leak" from an official to the effect that all businesses and services having a retail price ceiling would have a form of stabilization for wholesale prices and that subsidies or tax relief would be provided by the government for manufacturers and importers to offset any profit squeeze. Since then, it has been declared that no benefit or subsidy would be provided for the film distributors who, by the way, import practically all product from the United States or Great Britain.

Industry Feels Abused

The feeling developed in motion picture circles that the trade was once more carrying too much of the burden, just as with the imposing of a Federal 20 per cent. tax on receipts on theatres only last May and the refusal of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board to permit theatres to raise prices for New Year's Eve performances even though they had done so for many years. The stand of the Government was that New Year's Eve did not fall within the index period of September 15—October 11 and, therefore, admission prices could be no higher than those in effect during that time.

Since this ruling the Wartime Prices and Trade Board has ruled that merchants can charge the same prices for seasonal goods which were in effect during the seasons of last year not touched by the basic price period, plus a reasonable increase in price to take care of profit. The theatre owners are not allowed to make any variance in admission scales, except downward if desired, for special occasions.

Notification has also been given that the system of government control is not for the mere duration of war but that it will be continued very indefinitely and until further notice so the "economic chaos" which is to follow the conflict will be avoided insofar as Canada is concerned.

F-P CANADIAN NET IS UP $228,722

Famous Players Canadian Corporation's earnings, after bond interest but before income and excess profits taxes, for the nine months ended October 4, 1941, amounted to $1,898,142, compared with $1,669,420 for the full 12 months of the previous year, and $1,091,706 for 1939.

Despite a sharp jump in income and excess profits taxes for the nine months of 1941 to $1,095,540 against $660,356 for all 1940 and $263,674 for all 1939, the balance of net earnings applicable to the capital stock was $802,602 for the nine months, or at a considerably higher annual rate than the $1,007,064 reported for all 1940 and $828,032 for all 1939.

The nine months' net is equal to $1.86 per share of capital stock outstanding, against $2.34 for all 1940 and $1.92 for all 1939.

Developments are such that the exhibitors are now practically looking to the Government for "orders" for the operation of their business. Recent edicts included the decree that no more large illuminated signs or marquees are to be erected but some leeway has been granted in the granting of permission to equipment firms to use up their stock before April 1 after which there are to be no more installations of Neon or other lighted displays on theatre exteriors.

Air Conditioning Limited

There is also the new trend toward control of air-conditioning units by the announced appointment of an administrator of air conditioning equipment who will control supply and demand for ventilation systems and their improvement or repair. Another administrator has been appointed to govern the installation and maintenance of electrical apparatus and instruments while another has been named to control transactions in electric wiring and cables, fittings, fixtures and wiring materials. There is an administrator for heating and plumbing work. There is the declared intention of the Board to control the use of electric power for the sake of conservation. All of these decisions affect the theatres—and each day brings new devices for restriction.

Apart from the control of business operations as such, the theatres are now deeply concerned with regulations and instructions under the heading of Air Raid Precautions. The permanent extinction of outside theatre lighting from sunset to sunrise is in immediate prospect and theatre representatives have been in touch with government officials on the subject with the hope of arranging a compromise plan for the partial use of sign and entrance lighting, such as during stated hours of the early evening and the removal of a certain percentage of light bulbs so that some attractiveness can be maintained.

There has been considerable confusion in connection with government decrees. One reason for this has been the delay with which announcements have been made available to the theatres. Much of the details of enforcement has been gained through newspaper channels and an indication of red-tape process is to be found here. Government officials have reached some decision with respect to regulations and the rough data have been sent to a press relations office where it is fashioned into news. The official press release must then be returned to the department office concerned where it is studied and edited, after which it is approved by a department head, then returned to the press office for distribution to the publications. This may take some days and, in the meantime, some newspaper learns of the development or a part of the plan and the news is printed. This looks like the official decree but isn't and those in the affected business take action, only to learn of something different days later.

McMullen Administrator

Although it is common knowledge that R. G. McMullen of Toronto has been appointed administrator of theatres and films in the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, the official announcement of his appointment has not yet been published. Much has transpired, however, to stir the theatre men of the Dominion. Mr. McMullen is not a theatre man but he has had some connection with theatre circuit affairs, because he was with a prominent firm of accountants and auditors in Toronto before taking the government post.

With respect to the fixing of film rentals, only the bare announcement has been made officially that the film exchanges are under government control but Administrator McMullen has emphasized privately that conditions of sale during the four-weeks period last autumn will form the barometer in regulating the wholesale end of the film business. That is apparently as far as the regulating of booking contracts has progressed with the possible exception that the different branches of the Canadian industry have been given the privilege of offering advice on contemplated moves in government control.

Canada Orders Lights Out

An order-in-council has put into immediate effect across Canada the extinguishing of outside theatre and other lights under the Defence of Canada Regulations. This affects many of the Dominion's major cities, whose streets are now in compulsory darkness, but whose downtown theatres and business houses, have been allowed to continue curtailed marquee and sign lighting.

Eysell to Direct the Music Hall

GUS S. EYSELL, assistant managing director of the Radio City Music Hall since 1933, on Monday was named president of the Radio City Music Hall Corporation and managing director of both the Music Hall and the Center theatre by the board of directors at a meeting at Rockefeller Center, New York. He succeeds W. G. Van Schmus who died on January 14th.

Barton P. Turnbull, acting president of Rockefeller Center Inc., announced Mr. Eysell's appointment at a gathering of Music Hall executives in the theatre's studio apartment following a meeting of the corporation's directors. Three new members were added to the Music Hall board. They are Lawrence Kirkland and Vanderbilt Webb, members of Rockefeller Center, Inc., and Russell V. Downing, treasurer of the Music Hall.

The Board also elected Merlin H. Aylesworth chairman; Leon Leonidoff, vice-president; Russell V. Downing, treasurer; Rudolph Travers, secretary, and James Gould assistant treasurer.

Mr. Eysell came to the Music Hall as assistant managing director in January 1933, four weeks after the theatre opened. He began his exhibition career while still in high school at Kansas City, working in a neighborhood theatre. After completing school he became treasurer of the Newman theatre, largest in Kansas City.

In 1925 he went to Los Angeles to manage the Million Dollar theatre for Paramount, and two years later shifted to the Metropolitan. In 1930 he became Paramount Theatres' district manager in Houston, San Antonio and Dallas. He came to New York in 1931 as Paramount city manager.

Mr. Eysell went to the Music Hall as Mr. Van Schmus' assistant and soon afterwards also became secretary of the Music Hall corporation. The new managing director, who is 40 years old, is one of the youngest major theatre executives in the country. In addition to his Music Hall duties he has been credited with much of the success of "It Happens On Ice," skating revue at the Center theatre, the Music Hall's Radio City neighbor.

National Decency Legion Classifies Fourteen Films

Of the 14 motion pictures classified by the National Legion of Decency in its listing for the current week, nine were approved for general patronage, four were found to be unobjectionable for adults and one was considered objectionable in part. The pictures and their classifications follow:

Class A-1, Unobjectionable for General Patronage: "Blondie Goes to College," "Cadets on Parade," "Close Call for Ellery Queen," "Dangerously They Live," "Forbidden Trails," "Freckles Comes Home," "Joe Smith, American," "Valley of the Sun" and "Young America." Class A-2, Unobjectionable for Adults: "Four Jacks and a Jill," "A Gentleman at Heart," "Mexican Spitfire at Sea" and "Son of Fury." Class B, Objectionable in Part: "Call Out the Marines."

"GWTW" Re-Run February 13th

William F. Rodgers, Loew's vice-president and general sales manager, announced in New York on Tuesday that a third release of "Gone With the Wind" would be launched by MGM on February 13th and 14th in five cities as "test runs." "GWTW" will open on the 13th in Cleveland, Houston, New Orleans and Cincinnati, and in Buffalo on the 14th.

Mr. Rodgers said the film would be shown in its original full-length version at advanced minimum admission scales which prevailed during its last release, running three continuous performances daily, without reserved seats. The scale is a 40-cent matinee minimum and 55-cent evening minimum, tax included. Mr. Rodgers did not reveal the percentage being asked for the picture, declaring that terms arranged concerned only MGM and exhibitors. The company previously asked 75 per cent.

Freeman to Capitol On Treasury Drive

At the invitation of the Treasury Department, Y. Frank Freeman, Paramount studio head and president of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, went to Washington on Thursday for a conference with Secretary Morgenthau. Purpose of the meeting, it is understood, was to work out details of the plans formulated by the Hollywood Victory Committee, of which Mr. Freeman is a member, to aid in the Department's current campaign for the sale of defense bonds and stamps.

Harrower Named To PRC Post

John Nelson (Jack) Harrower, on Wednesday became Hollywood publicity director for Producers Releasing Corporation, under Joseph O'Sullivan, advertising and publicity chief at the home office in New York. Mr. Harrower left for Hollywood immediately.

More recently with the Hal Horne Organization in New York, Mr. Harrower was for many years a reporter and film reviewer on the New York staff of Film Daily, a correspondent for Film Curb, (the Philadelphia regional), a continuity writer for National Screen trailers and a freelance film press agent.

Warners Cancel "Kane" Showing

"Citizen Kane," scheduled to open at Warners' Boyd theatre in Philadelphia over last week end, was withdrawn by the circuit after newspaper advertising announced the opening and local critics had reviewed the picture. The cancellation, it was said, came from the Warner home office.

Trust Case Defendants Win Delay

The Schine circuit, affiliates, and associate defendants—Universal, United Artists, and Columbia—Tuesday won a delay in the Government's anti-trust trial against them in Buffalo Federal Court. Some while ago, start of the trial had been set for March 3rd. The defense kept hammering at this date with the thesis that it did not allow sufficient preparation. And Willard S. McKay, Schine counsel, told the court he had not been properly informed, and had not been able to argue on setting the date.

Tuesday, the court agreed the defendants needed more time to prepare their case. Federal Judge John Knight set trial for April 29th, remarking:

"It is now apparent that it is practically impossible for either party to be ready for trial at that date."

Postponement of trial means, according to observers, delay in trial by the Government of its anti-trust suit in New York against the "Little Three" majors. The Government has promised it will not try the Buffalo and New York cases simultaneously. Delay of the latter may mean advancement beyond June 1st of the consent decree deadline for tradeshowing and blocks of five selling provisions. The decree provides an escape clause by which the five consenting distributors may be relieved of the observance of those provisions if the Government has not successfully prosecuted the three other companies by June 1st.

Pickwick Seeks Time

A third stipulation for a further ten day extension has been filed in the $5,452,575 Pickwick, Greenwich, Conn., anti-trust suit against the eight major companies by attorneys for the plaintiffs and attorneys for Twentieth Century-Fox. The film company was required by the plaintiffs to answer lengthy interrogatories filed several months ago in the United States district court in New Haven, Conn., and has three times entered into stipulation for the extension of time in which to answer. The suit charges a conspiracy to restrain interstate trade.

Oldfield Returns

Lincoln Theatres Corp., the J. H. Cooper-Paramount partnership in Lincoln, Neb., started 1942 by bringing Barney Oldfield, Journal film editor and columnist, back to the mike at KFOR with his nightly Hollywood chatter show. While he was in the army for a year, his wife handled the show for half the time, and Dean Pohlenz, manager of the Stuart, brought it up to the year-end.

Gable Retiring

From Hollywood Wednesday the North American Newspaper Alliance reported that Clark Gable, husband of the late Carole Lombard planned to retire from the screen and apply for service in the Air Corps.

British Film Acquired

Monogram has acquired "Continental Express," a British film.

VARIETY CLUBS CALL FOR NEW NATIONWIDE GROUP

IN all-out campaigns to line up Variety tents in cities where there are no units and to bring new members into existing tents will be launched by the national officers of the Variety Clubs of America. The drive will start February 1st and continue through February 14th. John H. Harris, national chief barker, and R. J. O'Donnell, assistant national chief barker, will conduct the drive and will tour the country to organize tents in such cities as New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Seattle, Portland, Denver, Salt Lake City and New Haven.

The drive, which has been christened the "Hey Rube" drive, is to hasten a solid front of all persons connected with the film industry so that industry activity in the war effort and charity drives may be better coordinated.

Particular attention will be directed at all exchange staffs and theatre managers, not members at present, to join their local tent and thereby line up with the industry's solid front. This can best be accomplished, not through the medium of individual drives and efforts under a dozen different committees and groups, but through the medium of the National Variety Clubs with its high standing locally and nationally with the impressive background of the work accomplished during the 13 years of its existence.

100 Per Cent Representation

Paul Short, assistant general chairman for the drive, will contact existing tents with plans for activities that will bring their respective memberships to 100 per cent representation of the entire amusement business.

Baseball club owners, nite club operators, roller rink and amusement park managers as well as theatre owners and executives will be eligible for membership. Several plans for special forms of membership that offer drastic reductions from the usual initiation and dues of the clubs are under consideration. The fact is emphasized that the drive is not to raise large funds for the clubs, but to gather the entire amusement business under one banner where it will best be able to meet the demands being made upon it for participation in war emergency drives and other activities calculated to serve the nation.

Preliminary plans call for the appointment of committees in all existing tents who will be charged with the duty of contacting all theatres and other businesses to solicit their membership and support.

Results of the activities of the Variety Club of Texas during 1941, reported by Paul Short, retiring chief barker, disclose that over $250,000, computed in terms of cash value, was contributed by the organization to various local and national charities and drives, with nearly $30,000 in actual cash expended for the benefit of these projects.

Foremost among the Dallas activities was the contribution toward the progress of Variety's boys' camps and to the Freeman Memorial and Eye Conservation Clinic, giving free hospitalization and medical care to children. The camp, termed "second only to Father Flanagan's 'Boys' Town'" gave summer vacations to 700 under-privileged children. The hospital authorities credit Variety for aid in making the facilities available to over 6,000 cases.

Over $100,000 in cash, clothing and equipment was raised for the U. S. O., the British and Greek war relief, Red Cross and Community Chest. Allocations were made to the Y. M. C. A., the local Hope Cottage for abandoned babies, Lighthouse for the Blind, among other charities.

Obligations Fulfilled

When the Short administration took over, outstanding obligations amounting to $35,000 were assumed and paid during the year. The retiring Chief Barker notes that these obligations were met principally through proceeds of the club's seasonal entertainments, golf matches, open house parties, outdoor fun festival, and other diversifications. Defense stamp and bond rallies were held, and in addition to the special weekly club luncheons attended by guest speakers, testimonial luncheons were held for Postmaster General Frank Walker, R. J. O'Donnell, among others.

The Atlanta Variety Club has launched its first major charity project—the building of a recreational area for underprivileged children.

The project will cost $30,000, according to Harry G. Ballance, chief barker, and will consist of a baseball diamond, football field, swimming pool and other recreational facilities. The entire site will cover one city block and will be operated by the club in cooperation with the Salvation Army.

The announcement was made at a meeting which featured the installation of the following officers:

Harry G. Ballance, chief barker; E. E. Whitaker, first assistant chief barker; Willis Davis, second assistant chief barker; Paul Wilson, property master; R. B. Wilby, dough guy and the following directors: Jeff Davis, Dick Ford, Jimmy Harrison, Dave Prince, Sid Reams and William K. Jenkins.

Charlotte Clinic Set

The Charlotte Variety Club has announced final plans for its major charitable activity, the establishment of the Variety Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat clinic to be situated in the basement of the Professional building in that city.

Renovation of the basement quarters and installation of necessary equipment is expected to be completed by February 1st. The clinic will consist of waiting rooms for both white and Negro patients, two eye treatment rooms, and two nose, ear and throat treatment rooms.

The Variety Club will furnish, equip and maintain the clinic.

This branch of the Variety Clubs of America was organized last March.

$1,100,000,000 FILM GROSS IN 1941, SAYS MPPDA

THE PUBLIC paid $1,100,000,000 to 16,951 box-offices in the United States in 1941, a 10 percent increase over 1940, according to the Hays organization.

In its regular annual report on the state of the industry, released in New York on Tuesday, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America said that more than a third of the billion-dollar gross, or $410,000,000 was paid in taxes to federal, state and municipal governments.

The MPPDA report, entitled Film Facts, 1942, surveyed the two-billion-dollar motion picture industry and the facilities it offers a nation at war, on the occasion of the 20th year of operation of the association, representing all major producing companies, and urged for the year ahead a concerted effort by all branches for victory.

In pledging its service of entertainment, the industry offers a variety of product, said the document, citing 546 pictures made in the United States last year.

There's a seat for every 12½ people in the nation.

Both figures represent an increase over 1940, with 67 fewer pictures and 9,000 fewer seats.

Weekly attendance was estimated at 85,000,000, about two-thirds of the population of the country, also an increase over the previous year, said the Hays office.

Average Admission 25c

The average admission paid was 25.2c, of which 80 per cent was taken in between 7:30 and 8:30 in the evening, 45 per cent on the weekend shows.

Exhibition accounts for 94 per cent of the capital investment of the industry. It employs 75 per cent of the workers, pays 50 per cent of the salaries.

In the field of production the investment is relatively small, about 5 per cent, and the number employed is 18 per cent of the entire industry, but the payroll, the large item in production costs, is 43 per cent of the motion picture's yearly salary check.

Distribution involves little more than one per cent of the invested capital, hires 7 per cent of the workers and pays 7 per cent of the salaries.

A breakdown of the estimated investment, employment and payrolls in the three branches follows:

	Investment	Employment	Payroll
Exhibition .....	$1,900,000,000	145,600	$160,000,000
Production .....	125,000,000	33,700	139,000,000
Distribution .....	25,000,000	14,300	23,500,000
Total .....	$2,050,000,000	193,600	$322,500,000

Exhibition retains 65 per cent of the net box-office receipts to cover real property expenses (absorbing the largest share), salaries, publicity, taxes and profit. This represents a reapportionment of the exhibitor's dollar since last year when payroll was named the major expense item.

Four-Year Comparison

A four-year comparison of the number of pictures released by the eight distributing company members of the association shows a marked stability in output. From a peak of 356 features in the 1937-38 season there is a slight but steady drop to 335 last year. The proportion of westerns has declined as well as the number of re-issues. But in these years the difference in the combined release totals of eight companies—Columbia, MGM, Paramount, RKO, 20th Century-Fox, United Artists, Universal and Warner Bros.—is under 35.

While exhibitor responses to MOTION PICTURE HERALD's recent inquiry indicated that double-billing is their chief complaint, 59 per cent of the 16,951 theatres now operating show double features. The practice is most popular in the Northeast where almost three-quarters of the houses have a dual program more or less regularly, and least popular in the South where it is restricted to 25 per cent of the theatres.

The studio's share of the theatre admission is about 25 per cent. In 1941 this amounted to $250,000,000, against a total production cost of $215,600,000, according to the Association's estimate. The major disbursement here is for talent, with sets, direction and stories accounting for more than 10 per cent each.

The 546 features approved last year by the Production Code Administration, a department of MPPDA, were the product of 22 studios and involved 276 arts, industries and professions. More than two-thirds of them were accounted for by the eight companies whose 1937-41 product is analyzed above.

The MPPDA has grown with the industry in the twenty years since a system of self-regulation was adopted and the Association was formed. In 1922, the report pointed out, silent pictures were shown in 15,000 theatres to a weekly attendance of fifty million people and a box-office gross of half a billion dollars.

The membership now includes the following producers and distributors:

Bray Studios, Inc., Columbia Pictures Corporation, Cosmopolitan Corporation, Cecil B. deMille Productions, Inc., Walt Disney Productions, Inc., Eastman Kodak Company, Educational Films Corp. of America, Electrical Research Products Division of Western Electric Co., Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., Hughes Productions, Loew's Incorporated, Paramount Pictures, Inc., Principal Pictures Corp., RCA Manufacturing Company, Inc., Reliance Pictures, Inc., RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Hal Roach Studios, Inc., Selznick International Pictures, Inc., Terrytoons, Inc., Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, United Artists Corporation, Universal Pictures Company, Inc., Vitagraph, Inc., Walter Wanger Productions, Inc., Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

Republic Productions, Inc., joined the group last year.

In addition to features and shorts MPPDA clears advertising material through the Advertising Advisory Council established in 1930, offers a Central Casting agency for extra players, and other facilities for improvement in trade practices, and the promotion of the entertainment and educational service of the film industry.

This year the survey carries, along with the statistical analysis of the industry, an account of the direct help offered the National Government in the emergency. Apart from the $160,000,000 paid last year in federal taxes, the people engaged in all branches of the motion picture business have given facilities and services, including completion of 100 reels of military training films, exhibition of government short films in 12,000 theatres, and the donation of the proceeds from the feature-length "Land of Liberty"—a total of 145,000 so far—to war emergency welfare work.

Contributions from the film colony itself totaled $2,251,373, the greater proportion of it for war relief. This was, of course, in addition to the public appearances, broadcasts and other donations of time and talent for worthy causes.

150,000 Film Workers Line Up for 'Dimes'

Final preparations for the industry's March of Dimes campaign, which will be conducted during the week of January 22nd to 28th, are well in hand with some 150,000 motion picture workers actively engaged, according to C. C. Moskowitz, co-chairman.

Reports have reached headquarters in New York that some 10,000 ushers, projectionists, doormen, cashiers and porters have begun soliciting their friends to fill up President Roosevelt's birthday coin cards.

National Screen and Consolidated Film Laboratories have shipped some 7,500 appeal trailers to theatres as well as buttons, coin cans, wishing wells and usher cans.

At noon Wednesday some 20 bands and thousands of ushers and usherettes from motion picture theatres in the New York area paraded up Broadway. The procession wound up in Times Square, where Mayor F. H. LaGuardia changed the street marker to "Dimes" Square. On the platform at 46th street and Broadway, the amusement industry presented an outdoor show with Ed Sullivan, newspaper columnist as master of ceremonies. Among those who volunteered to appear in the show were Carmen Miranda, Jimmy Dorsey, Benay Venuta, Dick Powell, Olsen and Johnson and many others.

Unions Offer Services

This week, Richard F. Walsh, president of the IATSE, informed the industry "Dimes" committee that members of the union will make no charge for overtime occasioned during the campaign by the showing of the appeal trailer or by collections in the auditoriums. The committee, through Nicholas M. Schenck, chairman, has expressed its appreciation to Mr. Walsh and union members for their cooperation.

A print of the trailer, which features Clark Gable, was screened for President Roosevelt at the White House over the weekend.

Hollywood will send 16 motion picture stars to the President's Birthday Ball in Washington on January 30th, but is refusing requests for the appearances of actors and actresses at similar functions in other cities. The list includes James Stewart, Robert Montgomery, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Edward Arnold, Jean Hersholt, Mickey Rooney, Bette Davis, Joan Crawford, Rosalind Russell, Gene Tierney, Pat O'Brien, Gene Autry, Andy Devine, Judy Canova, Dinah Shore and Bonita Granville.

Over the NBC and Mutual networks a troupe of all star performers will salute President Roosevelt on January 24th. Under the direction of Arch Oboler such personalities as Greta Garbo, Deana Durbin, Charles Chaplin, Mary Martin, Marlene Dietrich, Ronald Colman, Spencer Tracy, Bob Hope, Bing Crosby, Edgar Bergen, Don Ameche, Olivia de Havilland, James Cagney, Thomas Mitchell, Walter Pidgeon, William Powell, Warner Baxter and many others will be presented.

Coin collectors have been placed in all RKO theatres in Cincinnati for contributions to the fund, while the suburban 20th-

Col. Ed Schiller has accepted the appointment as treasurer for the theatre division of the state of California in the campaign, according to an announcement from Charles Skouras, state chairman.

Dr. Jolliffe Named David Sarnoff Aide

Dr. Charles B. Jolliffe has been appointed assistant to the president of the Radio Corporation of America. In making the announcement, David Sarnoff, president of RCA, said Dr. Jolliffe, in addition to his new duties, would continue as chief engineer of the RCA Laboratories.

Dr. Jolliffe was appointed chief engineer of the Federal Radio Commission in 1930 and continued in that capacity when that organization was changed to the Federal Communications Commission in 1934. He resigned from the FCC in 1935 to become engineer in charge of the RCA frequency bureau. He has attended many international radio conferences as delegate of the United States Government. Dr. Jolliffe is a member of several committees of the Defense Communications Board and for more than a year has been working on communication problems with the National Defense Research Committee of the Government office of Scientific Research and Development.

RCA Capital Starts New Blue Network

The new Blue Network, officially "divorced" from the National Broadcasting Company, under orders from the Federal Communications Commission, has received $2,000,000 capital for operation, its president, Mark Woods, announced in Chicago last week. The money comes from the Radio Corporation of America, parent organization for NBC, the Blue, and the Red networks.

Meanwhile, early this week, approximately one fifth of the Blue's affiliated stations had agreed to the new setup, which transfers their contracts from the NBC to the Blue exclusively. The balance have asked time for study.

The Blue Network Company, a Delaware corporation, notified New York State Monday it intended to do business within its borders. The Delaware incorporation notes a capital stock issue of $100,000 in $100 par value shares.

Mr. Woods last week insisted his network would be competitive to the NBC's Red network. He added that more than 30 stations which had not been identified with his network while it was NBC property, had signified interest in joining.

At the outset, the new network operates WENR, Chicago; WJZ, New York; KGP, San Francisco, from them supplying service to affiliates.

Niles Trammell, NBC president, said the Red Network would become the NBC Network.

Last week, FCC chairman James C. Fly offered assistance "in any way possible" to Blue Network affiliates, and asserted the separation of Blue and Red chains would be actual.

IN THE U. S., the unit of currency is the Dollar. Likewise in the Dominican Republic, Puerto Rico and Canada. In England, Eire, Turkey, Australia, New Zealand, the Union of South Africa and elsewhere in the United Kingdom, the currency unit is the Pound.

Belgium's unit is the Belga, Bulgaria's, is the Lev, Denmark, the Krone; Finland, the Markka; France, the Franc, Germany, the Reichsmark; Greece, the Drachma; Hungary, the Pengo; Norway and Iceland, the Krone; Iran, Rial; Italy, Lira; Netherlands, Guilder; Portugal, the Escudo; Rumania, Leu; Spain, Peseta; Sweden, the Krona, and China, the Yuan.

Switzerland has its Franc; Soviet Russia, the Ruble; Yugoslavia, Dinar; Bolivia, the Boliviano; Brazil, Milreis, and Argentine, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Mexico, Paraguay and Uruguay, the Peso.

The monetary unit in Costa Rica is the Colon; Ecuador, the Sucre; Guatemala, Quetzal; Haiti, Gourde; Honduras, Lempira; Nicaragua, Cordoba; Panama, the Balboa; Peru, Sol; Salvador, the Colon and Venezuela, the Bolivar. Japan's is the YEN!

Wide World wires from California that priorities and the war have hit Hollywood in the most unexpected places. George McKay had to have a rubber nose for a clown role. Because of the rubber shortage, there just weren't any. The property department melted three pairs of rubber gloves, then fashioned a "prop" nose.

Another studio ran into a shortage of American flags. It wanted them to decorate several blocks for a scene depicting a Fourth of July celebration. Patriotic citizens had purchased most of the supply thereabouts. The prop department made the flags.

Radio City's Music Hall in New York sure is curtain-minded. It has a vast contour curtain (operated by 13 electric motors), a steam curtain, a rain curtain, snow curtain, scrim curtain, a huge traveling curtain and what have you. And it has a straightaway stage, a sinking stage, a revolving stage and whatever.

Movie cameramen of the Nazi's armies in Russia are cited by their propaganda chiefs as being unable to use their cameras in the current battles with the Soviet's troops because the cameras freeze from the cold. They say it is 60 degrees below zero, Fahrenheit. Maybe. But the Russians reportedly are having no such trouble. Could be that the Nazis don't care for movies of retreating armies?

Alertness of operators at the Mexican Government's radio-telegraphic station at Mexico City, discovered the intent of Japs to sink a Mexican oil tanker, the S.S. Cerro Azul, of 12,000 tons, which is plying in coastwise service along the Mexican Pacific seaboard. The radio operators caught a message in code. Mexican experts found that this message was an order from the Japanese admiralty to Jap submarines near the American coast to sink the tanker.

The Cerro Azul is owned and operated by the Mexican Government and for some time has been taking oil, gasoline and other petroleum products from the Gulf coast fields to distribution centers on the Mexican Pacific coast. She is not one of the Axis steamers that Mexico confiscated last spring, but was bought by the government for $2,000,000 (American dollars) shortly after expropriation of foreign oil companies. The tanker's captain has been ordered to keep close to shore.

When the cash was counted, it was discovered that the man had split a $10 bill and a dollar bill, pasting the front of the dollar bill to the back of the $10 bill.

HOLLYWOOD'S wartime automobile and truck rationing this week had an unusual effect of movieland. It's cutting down the personal appearance tours of cowboy players.

Travelings from small town to small town by automobile because many of the hamlets are out of the beaten paths of other transportation are being curtailed by the cowboy players, some of whom spend four or five months "on the road" between pictures.

Their usual deal is for one night stands at film houses, particularly those playing the pictures in which they appear.

The tire shortage will cause re-routing of all of this type of personal appearance tours, with the possibility that many towns now on the routes may not see the players for the duration, because of lack of transportation facilities other than automotive.

Most directly affected are western players Smiley Burnette, Don Barry and Roy Rogers, each of whom have separate acts for their respective tours, traveling by automobile, truck and trailer, the latter usually carrying the horses.

While under contract to the studio for 52 weeks a year, the players make their appearance deals with studio cooperation, retaining, however, all of what they obtain. Usual charge to a theatre manager is a guarantee plus a percentage of the gross.

Alert radio listeners can detect the operation of a system designed by Hugh A. Cowham, CBS commercial engineer in charge of traffic, to warn technicians at every radio station on the network that special news will follow.

Five minutes before a regularly scheduled broadcast goes off the air, an unobtrusive tone signal is added to the sounds of the program, just a little less loud than the level of the program which the listener is hearing.

Five short dashes mean the news to be heard is more than usually important.

One long tone advises technicians that an urgent announcement will be made at once. Ten seconds after that tone is sounded, whatever is being broadcast is interrupted so that vital information may go out to the country.

NEGROES MOVIE-CONSCIOUS; SUPPORT 430 FILM HOUSES

NEGRO America is movie-conscious.

This 13,000,000-strong segment of the population continues to pour its dimes and quarters into the nation's boxoffices; but, mainly, into those boxoffices dedicated especially to serving it.

Their birth rate matching, and in some sections exceeding, that of the whites, the American blacks have forced a ten per cent increase in the number of all-Negro film theatres, in the past two years alone. Thousands of other houses have mixed audiences.

They have produced a crop of Negro film companies, which, while handicapped in money and other resources, continue to make approximately 12 films per year, for Negroes, and with Negro players.

There follows a picture of the Negro and the motion picture, in the United States; not a history; a survey, rather; notations of Negro production, Negro players, Negro theatres, and the Negro's attitudes.

"All-Negro" Theatres Number 430 in 31 States

There has been a ten percent increase since 1939 in the number of all-Negro theatres in the country; a decrease in the number of picture companies producing films for the country's Negro audience of 13,000,000 and the launching of a new project in Miami, which, if executed along the lines formulated by its creators, may alter or influence the entire course of picture-making for and distributing to Negroes.

In addition to the independent and circuit theatres above the Mason-Dixon Line serving the entertainment needs of the public comprising both white and Negro audiences, there are currently operating 430 all-Negro houses in 31 states, with more than 200 other theatres, all in the south, maintaining balconies and in some instances, "midnight shows" for Negroes.

In 1939, the Department of Commerce reported that 388 all-Negro motion picture theatres in 28 states were in operation, which figure, published in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of July 15th of that year, represented a 67 per cent increase in two years since the previous count had been made, when 232 houses were checked by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. The 1939 total was compiled by the Department of Commerce with the cooperation of the U. S. Census Bureau and the Sack Amusement Enterprises of Dallas, one of the largest distributing firms of Negro films in the country.

Admissions Low

Ninety per cent of all-Negro theatres are owned or managed by white operators. Top admission prices in first-run houses up north are as high as 40 cents and more in some cities, but below the Mason-Dixon Line admissions for first, second and subsequent run theatres range from ten and 15 cents up to 20 and 25, with few houses charging more.

Picture-making exclusively for the Negro, however, has never been a large-scale enterprise. The market has always been a limited one and as a result no capital investment of large

This does not include the number of theatres throughout the South which maintain balconies or separate sections for Negro audiences or operate on a "midnight" show policy. In addition, there are other theatres which function on a two- or three-day-a-week policy. These houses are located in rural sections far removed from urban centers.

sums has ever been brought to this branch of the industry.

Ever since 1919, when Oscar Michaux, Negro producer, made his first all-Negro film for a Negro public, there never have been more than a half dozen firms active in turning out pictures each year. Until recently, Mr. Michaux made at least one film a year, and some years produced as many as three and four. One admirer of his remarked that, "It can be said to Mr. Michaux's benefit that he never was discouraged by the most dismal failure. He consistently kept on making pictures. Nobody knows where he got the money. Much of his production was on a shoe-string basis, but he persevered, and it is undoubtedly true that he helped to create and develop an audience for Negro films."

Producing firms in the field have found their costs greatly increased in recent years due to the fact that salaries of actors and studio technicians were raised to union scales. The average cost of production ten years ago was approximately $6,000; today the figure averages around $17,000, with the average high gross of a film in the $40,000 area.

Currently there are just a handful of companies producing Negro pictures annually. Jack Goldberg, president of International Roadshows, Inc.; Sack Amusements, Inc., principally a distribution firm, also produces pictures; Eddie Green, Negro producer and head of Sepia-Art Pictures; Jed Buell and Associates, and Spencer Williams, who this year wrote, directed, produced and acted in "The Blood of Jesus," which was distributed by Sack, are the remaining producers in the field. Oscar Michaux, it is reported, suspended activities a few years ago, and Million Dollar Productions, operating in Hollywood, until this year, turned out about four films annually. Production for the Negro market, on the whole, has been "sporadic, unplanned," as one distributor termed it. In total, not more than 12 pictures a year have been made for Negro audiences.

Since early September of this year, Jack Goldberg has been in Miami, Florida, heading the Liberty City Motion Picture Studios which is sponsored by the Lincoln Motion Picture Association, a new project launched by Captain James E. Scott. The association is a non-profit, membership organization, "dedicated to helping and encouraging its members and the Negro race generally to seek a worthy place in the development of the art of the motion picture."

Started in 1912

Among the New York figures in the Negro film market, it was generally conceded that Mr. Goldberg "probably knows more about making Negro pictures for Negro audiences than any man in the country." He has been in the entertainment business since 1912 when, as a youngster, he started with Marcus Loew.

Captain Scott, director of Miami's $3,000,000 Negro housing project, is president of the association. At one time he was Assistant Commandant at Tuskegee Institute. He helped to organize the first welfare group in Miami devoted entirely to social welfare for Negroes.

The Association numbers educators, such as Dr. Mary Bethune, president of Bethune-Cookman College, among its directors, and is now seeking $1-a-year memberships which it hopes to utilize as sustaining funds to operate the studio and school. It is reported that the directors are seeking a grant from the Julius Rosenwald Foundation to execute the program.

Mr. Goldberg, who is supervising construction of both the studio and school at present, will produce eight films a year for the association, the first of which will be "America's Tenth Man." He will receive a salary for producing and directing, and also will have charge of distributing the pictures, on the regular percentage basis.

The producer believes "Negro audiences want pictures that have a more realistic approach to their own problems." He thinks it is possible to combine "good entertainment with this kind of film," and he believes that "America's Tenth Man" will point the way. Mr. Goldberg has declared that the Negro people "are tired of the kind of fare they have been given in the past" and that this was "felt at the box office. They won't go into a theatre today even though an all-Negro cast is blazoned on the marquee."

Contrariwise, other distributors have pointed out that "Negro audiences want the gangster, lurid action type of film. The proof is that so-called uplifting pictures never made the grade at the all-Negro box office."

Such films as "Hallelujah" and "The Green Pastures," which were well received in all-Negro theatres throughout the country, according to distributors of Negro pictures, never made "big-time grosses."

According to Alfred N. Sack, general manager of Sack Amusement Enterprises, however, the Spencer Williams film, "The Blood of Jesus," which is the first all-Negro religious feature produced by a Negro for the Negro market, and in content, reputedly different from the "lurid action" film, "the picture has had the most sensational runs everywhere of any picture ever to reach the Negro theatre." Mr. Sack reports that "this has been particularly true in the South where box office records in every instance have been smashed and all precedents in the business upset. The picture has been in distribution for barely six months, but it already has doubled the gross of any other Negro film during the same length of time and has exceeded the final gross of many Negro pictures at the end of their complete runs."

Because of the religious angle to the film, "Blood of Jesus" is reported to have been proclaimed from Negro pulpits all over the South and thousands of Negro church-goers, who do not ordinarily attend the movies have been brought into theatres in great numbers for the showings.

On the controversial subject of better productions for Negro audiences, Lee Andrews, writing in the Pittsburgh Courier, Negro newspaper, advanced a new idea for Hollywood film producers. Mr. Andrews posed the query: "When Hattie McDaniels, Eddie 'Rochester' Anderson, Stepin Fetchit and other actors appear in sequences (in Hollywood productions) they are highly received by the general public. Why, then, do producers feel that they will not be received with equally as much feeling in an all-colored Revue? The producer need not start out by making a full-length picture. If he will go to the expense of making a good 15-minute musical short, he will see that his efforts will be rewarded. Such shorts can be successful financially because they can be played in all-Negro theatres as well as other theatres throughout the country."

Negro Field Prosperous

Mr. Andrews further pointed out, "There is a vast, open and prosperous field in the Negro motion picture industry if only the big producers and financial backers would see it. Thus far, the industry has failed because it has not been properly handled."

In discussing the problems pertaining to Negro film production, Walter White, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said, "I object to Hollywood's picturing the Negro either as a buffoon or a servant. It is true that there are Negro buffoons and Negro servants. I object, however, to Negroes being portrayed in Hollywood pictures only in those roles. Hollywood," he said, "works on the theory that the South wouldn't accept films in which Negroes are treated as human beings. I don't think that's true."

When asked what he thought of the project which Captain Scott is launching, Mr. White remarked that it was a "laudable one" and he hoped it would be successful.

Loren Miller, Negro actor and writer, in an article in Crisis, Negro publication, wrote in January, 1938, "The final decision as to the future of Negro produced films rests with the Negro film fan. It is imperative that he be on the alert. If he is ill-advised and content with cheap films just because they feature Negro actors, that is what he will get. If he registers a desire for worthwhile films at the box office, either the present group of producers or another attuned to his desires will produce pictures that will fulfill the real function of any art; to help him understand the world in which he lives and cope with the problems inherent in living in that world."

The first appearance of the Negro in the entertainment field was in 1796, at which time a Negro was assigned a minor part in Murdock's "Triumph of Love," presented at the Chestnut Street Theatre in Philadelphia. Later, the success in New York and Boston of several comic operas in which the Negro slave was impersonated, ushered in black-face comedy, a caricature of the Negro. The minstrel tradition continued until 1895, when John W. Isham's "Octoroons" and S. H. Dudley's "Smart Set of 1896," started the musical comedy craze featuring Sepia performers. Two famous teams in theatrical circles were formed about 1905: Egbert Austin (Bert) Williams and George W. Walker, and Robert Allen Cole and J. Rosamond Johnson in musical comedy production.

WARNERS SHOOT 3,000TH FILM

The Warner studios had occasion for celebration last week when it began production on its 3,000th motion picture, "The Shadow of Their Wings," an aviation picture in which Ann Sheridan, Ronald Reagan and Dennis Morgan are starred.

The studio's production record goes back to 1918, when it produced the feature, "My Four Years in Germany," based on the story of the war-time ambassador, James W. Gerard. Of the total number of productions, 950, including "The Shadow of Their Wings," have been feature length films, the balance short subjects.

Since that time, Negro actors and actresses have attained top-billing of stars in the theatre and on the screen. The names of Josephine Baker, Florence Mills, Bill Robinson, Paul Robeson, Charles Gilpin, Jules Bledsoe, Hattie McDaniels, Louise Beavers, "Rochester" Anderson, Stepin Fetchit, Clarence Muse, Kenny Washington, Nina Mae McKinney, Richard Harrison, Rex Ingram and Frank Wilson, are well known to stage and screen audiences.

Some of the larger companies operating in the South, serving all-Negro as well as white houses, are the Bijou Amusement Company, Milton Starr, president; the Sack Amusement Company, Alfred N. Sack, president; Wilby-Kincey, affiliated with Paramount circuit, and Lichtman Theatres, A. E. Lichtman, president.

23 Harlem Houses

In New York's Harlem, there are 23 all-Negro houses: Harlem Opera House, Apollo, Renaissance, Odean, Blue Bird, Columbia, De Luxe, RKO's Alhambra, Roosevelt and Regent; Loew's 116th Street and ictoria; the Franklin, Lafayette, Washington, Jewel, Morningside, Chatham, Park West, Sunset, Orient, 125th Street and Lincoln. In Brooklyn, there are 13 theatres: Apollo, Capitol, Regent, Howard, Subway, Tompkins, Art, Brevoort, Kismet, New United, Peerless, State and Summer. In the Bronx, only two, the Willis and Bronx. Jamaica has one house, the Plaza.

There are 11 all-Negro theatres in Philadelphia: the Dixie, Nixon Grand, Royal, Pearl, Joy, Douglas, Strand, New Garden, Standard, Rex and Globe. Chicago has 17: the Apollo, Terrace, Globe, Grand, Louis, Joy, Irving, Metropolitan, Imperial, NRA, Owl, Park, Public, Regal, States, Indiana and Willard. Newark has eight: the National, Gen, Essex, Lenox, Station, Court, Garden and Monticello.

Mexican Film Bank Set Up

by LUIS BECERRA CELIS
in Mexico City

Mexican picture production, distribution and exhibition has new hope for the future in the promise of satisfactory and sustained financing assured by the Cinematographic Bank organized under Federal Government auspices and the personal interest of President Manuel Avila Camacho, the industry and bankers. This organization is the fruit of six years of work by prominent picture industrialists, and to some extent, by film labor. The bank is expected to start about February 15 with a subscribed capital of $510,000.

Much of this capital was supplied by the National Bank of Mexico, an important private bank, headquarters of which are in Paris, France, and which for some time has been granting loans to producers and studios; and the Financiera Nacional, a fiscal institution of the Federal Government. The film bank will back selected producers, distributors and exhibitors and some studios. Also it will aid distribution in the United States and the principal Latin American countries.

The Cinematographic Bank is headed by Lic. Antonio Espinosa de los Monteros, president, and Lic. Carlos Carriedo Galvan, general manager. Among its directors are Jesus Grovas, a former Paramount manager here, now president of Jesus Grovas & Co., producers; Mauricio de la Serna, producer and manager of the Cine Teatro Alameda; Ing. Alberto J. Pani, ex-Minister of Finance and ambassador to Spain; Ricardo Pani, his son, who operates CLASA, the largest studios in Mexico; Agustin Legorreta, Jr., whose father is the managing director of the National Bank; and Federico Jimenez O'Farrill, an executive of the Financiera Nacional.

Two Historical Films Set

Two pictures of great potential interest are being prepared for early production here. Miguel Contreras Torres, coproducer with Jesus Grovas & Co. of "Simon Bolivar," life story of the liberator of Venezuela, announces that he is to put into production on January 19th "Caballerias de la Emperatriz" ("Knights of the Empress"), the story of the Empress Carlota, wife of Maximilian, Miliza Korjus, the Polish operatic soprano, known for her work in the "Grand Waltz," is to have the name lead. She will be supported by Julian Soler and Medea de Novar. Max A. Roemer has written the music.

The second picture will be the story of Hernan Cortes, Spanish conquerer of Mexico, as its theme. It will be started in February for Filmex, S. A., by Chano Urueta and will feature an authentic background of the Aztec empire of 1521.

Contreras Torres and Grovas announce the debut of "Bolivar" here about the end of February in the Government-owned Palace of Fine Arts, which includes the National Theatre. A simultaneous premiere is being arranged for Bogota, Colombia. "Bolivar" is 25 reels and will be exhibited, like "GWTW," with an intermission.

Brains

Backing

and

Ballyhoo

The launching of a great picture becomes an industry event. The magic name of Charlie Chaplin will soon shine from thousands of marquees. But before "The Gold Rush" reaches this wide distribution, it will first play the important key runs of this nation. Frankly, we are going to be very particular in choosing the first few showmen to whom we will entrust the premiere engagements of Charlie Chaplin in "The Gold Rush".

We will hand-pick showmen with reputations of years standing . . . men who have proven many times over their ability to handle big attractions in a big way.

Several of these theatre men merchandised previous Chaplin pictures to record grosses. Others are numbered among the new group of enterprising exhibitors who by their recent achievements have lifted their theatrical showcases head-and-shoulders above their opposition.

In the Klondike one miner's discovery started the Gold Rush. But United Artists is going to launch Charlie Chaplin in "The Gold Rush" with the brains, backing and ballyhoo of the industry's greatest showmen.

THE WORLD'S GREAT LAUGHING PICTURE.

Sears Predicts War Will Boom Film Attendance

by F. L. MORGAN
Chicago Bureau

Motion picture attendance in wartime America will boom as it has in England it was predicted by Gradwell L. Sears, vice-president in charge of distribution for United Artists, between trains in Chicago last weekend, enroute to California.

"At present England is enjoying the biggest picture attendance boom in history," Mr. Sears said. "Every theatre, especially the neighborhood houses, are packed to capacity. You can understand why the neighborhood theatres are getting the trade. They're close to home if anything happens. This unprecedented attendance shows what movies are doing for morale."

Actors Given Leave

Asked what Hollywood was planning and what effect young actors and technicians going into military service had on the motion picture industry Mr. Sears said:

"Every picture that comes out of Hollywood now will be either topical, based on the war and what people are talking about, or it will be completely the opposite. Escapist pictures, so to speak.

"Both types of movies are good for people and both seem to do well at the box office.

"Every picture we make now is printed in 16 mm. size for distribution to army posts, training camps and ships at sea. The government believes movies are good for the country's morale.

"In England they are giving their young actors four months leave to make pictures. The government wants to keep the British film industry going. They want to protect it so that when the war is over, it will still be strong. America will have to be looking that way because the international movie business is getting very competitive.

"The British are turning out some first rate films. Their new service picture called "Ships With Wings" beats anything we've done recently, and Canada is producing a newsreel that compares very well with the "March of Time."

Back to the subject of American pictures, Mr. Sears said the tendency was still toward long pictures and that he hoped some day to issue a film in two volumes, the second volume to follow the first by several months. He said Alexander Korda had a story which couldn't possibly be filmed under five hours, making it longer than "Gone With The Wind."

Asked about production activities of the United Artists, Mr. Sears said "The United Artists Corporation will not produce in direct competition with its present producers" but, he added, "we will assist on independent production through the Walter Wanger company, which we bought for that purpose. Should any star, director or producer feel that they had a sufficiently attractive proposition, one that could be developed into a commercially saleable picture, worthy of United Artists distribution, they would be invited to use the facilities of the Wanger company, which are under the direction of George Bagnall, and we might even be interested enough to buy a financial interest." That, he said, was the only way the United Artists organization could engage or participate in production without competing with its present producers.

DUALS NOT DOOMED, SAYS DAVID ROSE

The possibility that double features will be eliminated in the near future due to war time economy appears to be unlikely on the basis of the war experience to date of the British trade, David Rose, Paramount managing director in Great Britain, indicated last week.

Basing his opinion on British war experience thus far, Mr. Rose said that it might be years before official regulations would be found necessary to curb duals here for reasons of war time conversion.

Mr. Sears said a change in the name of the Carole Lombard-Jack Benny picture was being considered as reports from several sections of the country indicated that the name, "To Be or Not To Be" was not satisfactory to many exhibitors. Several pictures will be screened for Mr. Sears on the coast, among which will be "The Gold Rush," with music and sound and a running narration by Mr. Chaplin himself, and "Heliotrope Harry" an Edward Small production. He will also sit in on conferences in regard to adding more producers to the United Artists list.

Don Lee-RCA Exchange Television Patents

A television patent interchange agreement has been completed between the Don Lee Broadcasting System and Radio Corporation of America, it was announced last Thursday in California by Thomas S. Lee, president of the Don Lee network. The agreement covers patents of inventions of Harry R. Lubeke, director of television of the Lee chain. The patents concern synchronization, scanning, cathode-ray tubes, and transmission of films. In addition to obtaining RCA licenses, the network also received unannounced monetary consideration, according to Mr. Lee. Don Lee will retain ownership of patents and is free to license other organizations in the television field, it was learned.

Smith Named City Manager

Edward A. Smith has been appointed city manager of the Paramount, Arcade and Broadway theatres in Springfield, Mass., it has been announced by Nathan E. Goldstein, president of Western Massachusetts Theatres, Inc. Mr. Smith retains the position of managing director of the Paramount theatre, which he has held for the past two years.

N.Y. Legislature May Consider Circuit Tax

While exhibitors were anticipating the reintroduction this week of a bill which would impose stiff licensing fees on chain stores and theatres, several measures were introduced into the New York state legislature at Albany of importance to the motion picture industry. They were:

Legislation co-sponsored by Senator Phelps Phelps, New York and Assemblyman Frank Emma, Utica, of labor-supported measures reducing to one person the number of employees necessary before an employer paid unemployment insurance. The present minimum is four, accordingly many small exhibitors who operate only nights or part time are not presently subject to unemployment insurance payments. Senator Phelps and Assemblyman Emma also introduced another bill radically reducing the amount of compensation necessarily paid to employees before they could gain unemployment insurance benefits.

Senator Frederic Coudert and Assemblyman MacNeil Mitchell co-sponsored bills exempting from regular and emergency stock transfer taxes sales on securities exchange of less than 100 shares; also the pair sponsored legislation repealing regular and additional emergency taxes on stock transfers, imposing new and smaller taxes ranging from one-tenth of a cent per share for stock sold at less than $1 to five cents a share on stock sold for $100 per share and more.

Senator Phelps Phelps also introduced a bill and a resolution enabling the state to conduct a lottery for war tax purposes and memorializing Congress to pass legislation to conduct a federal lottery for war tax revenue.

Sunday Shows Studied

Mississippi exhibitors expect early introduction into their legislature of a bill to lift the ban on Sunday shows. Whether to ask outright repeal or leave that to local option, is being decided by the bill's proponents.

The state's theatre men also hope to lift the state amusement tax of 20 per cent, which in 1941 yielded approximately $475,000.

Television Promotions

Dr. Ray H. Manson, general manager of the Stromberg-Carlson Television Manufacturing Company, Rochester, N. Y., has announced the promotion of officials of the company, as part of the general expansion of the present organization, to meet the increased tempo of national defense production. George E. Eyer has been made works manager, Sidney R. Curtis has been appointed general superintendent, and Charles E. Angle has been promoted to position of production control manager.

HOW GREAT BRITAIN SELLS THE WAR ON THE SCREEN

Instructional, Propaganda Films Required Screen Material for Exhibitors

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

A report on the pattern of government film propaganda in Great Britain in wartime is contained in the series of reviews received this week from Aubrey Flanagan, MOTION PICTURE HERALD's London correspondent. They indicate how, after two years of war, the British film industry is serving both at home and overseas by the production of propaganda, educational and morale motion pictures.

Through the Ministry of Information, the British Films Council of the Board of Trade, cooperating with branches of the military service in Great Britain, for over a year, has been producing short subjects labeled, in most cases as propaganda, or instruction. They have been required material on all British screens and many have been exported.

The pictures shown in America, including such work as Carol Reed's "A Letter From Home," "Target for Tonight," "London Can Take It" and others have been generally approved by critics. The British war films have been shown here in theatres, privately by organizations such as the British War Relief Society, and through such institutions as the Museum of Modern Art and educational agencies.

Variety of Subjects

The variety of subjects covered by the short films, here reviewed by Mr. Flanagan, is an example of the range of recent releases by the Ministry of Information and the British Council. Educational documentary films and pictures with specific purposes of public instruction are included. There are screen reports on the duties of various branches of military service, with a recruiting purpose; safety warnings; descriptions of war industry; propaganda subjects on the objectives of the war; and animated films on the abstract economics of wartime. The group of reviews just received from London includes also a Soviet film, edited in Britain, and an abstract animation to show the value of salvage. Britain's best film talents have been recruited to show the ends sought by official agencies.

Beginnings of an official film program in the United States were visible, prior to the declaration of war, in the pictures prepared by the Office of Emergency Management and distributed through the Motion Picture Committee Cooperating for National Defense and in the training and technical films produced in Hollywood under the supervision of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. The motion picture division of the Office of Inter-American Affairs has also begun a program of educational and documentary films "depicting the truth about the American Way," for free distribution in South America.

The following British short subjects have been released from October through December.

Air Cadets

(Crown Film Unit-MOI)

A direct and cunning appeal to the adventurous in modern youth, the objective being recruitment for the Air Training Corp, the kindergarten of the RAF. The interest of boys in modern aircraft is aimed at. An attractive picture of games, drill and instruction in the ATC is drawn. Good propaganda and adequate screencraft.

Dangers in the Dark

(Public Relationship Films-MOI)

A persuasive piece of propaganda in favour of watching your step in the blackout. The carelessness of various types of travelers is exposed, and the moral drawn—a little pedantically.

Battle of the Books

(Rotha Films-MOI)

This is a finely conceived and neatly executed essay on the freedom of literature in Britain, its elasticity and its wide appeal as opposed to the regimented condition of Nazi thought. The film is a model of slick camera-work, crisp editing and noble commentary. Sound propaganda and flawless technique are combined without either being obvious.

W.R.N.S.

(Strand Film-MOI)

Again recruiting propaganda, this time for the Women's Royal Naval Service, is aimed at the spirit of adventure which lies in most of us to show that even lowly teleprinter operators can help in fighting a naval battle. There is pleasing gusto about the film, shot as it is in Greenwich Royal Naval College, at a Coastal Station, and on the high seas.

A Few Ounces a Day

(Rotha Productions-MOI)

A most cunning essay in persuasion by means of the Isotype symbols system, a diagrammatic process which, with the aid of an elfin type of musical background, reduces economic theories to the lowest common denominator of audience grasp. The argument is on behalf of salvage and it is entertaining both to see and to hear.

Special Dispatch

(Army Film Unit-MOI)

This is a lighthearted and amusing recreation of the work, and hazards which lie therein, undertaken by the Army's mobile dispatch rider. The film depicts a rush from London to Glasgow in twelve hours, covers the scenery, the efficiency and the human comedy which lie between here and there—and does it without a dull frame.

Song of the Clyde

(British Council)

Designed for propaganda abroad in behalf of Britain and financed with Foreign Office money, this decorative short presents a pictorial treatment of Scotland's most noted river. The propaganda value is not apparent, for the film, which is of high production quality and brilliantly photographed, appeals mainly to the eye, with its rocky waterfalls, its woodland banks and its misty estuaries.

The English Inn

(British Council)

Again ostensibly propaganda, with an official imprimatur the film devotes itself to the decorative. A commentary seeks to underline the picture's inn signs, Tudor timbers, pewter tankards and dart boards, with the suggestion that the village "pub" and the ritzy hotel have a role in British life today.

World Garden

(British Council)

Again Governmental propaganda essays the decorative note with a Technicolor treatment of Kew Gardens, shrine of British horticulture. There, in the midst of the present cataclysmic war, cross-fertilization of bananas is considered and dealt with. The suggestion is that the work done at Kew is of inestimable value, not only to Britain but to the world.

Western Isles

(British Council)

Just exactly what the propaganda aims at in this picture is somewhat obscure. The film, with a pretty use of the colour camera, studies of the crofters making Harris tweed and follows the voyage of a shipwrecked sailor back to his native isle.

RAF—Action

(MOI-British Movietone News)

A Ministry of Information short, made for overseas distribution, epitomizing in terse form the work of the RAF. It is but a morsel as compared with its subject, and only hints at the immensity of work performed by the service. The best passages are shots taken of actual aerial combat, camera gun records of bombers and fighters being blown to pieces, and a glimpse of a British fighter attack on a German convoy. Interesting but not effective enough.

Empires New Armies

(MOI-Pathe)

Far better is this—made by another news-reel organization—with glimpses of the wide range of units and weapons which grace the modern army. Motorcycle corps, tank detachments, anti-aircraft units, hard going over land and water, all are found if briefly in the short. In consequence, it has an exciting quality.

Royal Observer Corps

(MOI-Spectator)

A five-minute propaganda film for general release, revealing the structure and activities of the R.O.C. whose members, ever on the search for aeroplanes, enemy or otherwise, are the "eyes" of the RAF.

Three in a Shell Hole

(MOI-Soviet Film Agency)

A revamped Russian short epitomizes by an incident, the courage of the Red Army's women of the Red Cross. A girl, a Soviet soldier and a Nazi are together in a shell hole; courage, treachery and loyalty are all personified. The treatment is proper and the Red Cross girl's dubbed English voice is very well bred.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

By WILLIAM R. WEAVER
Hollywood Editor

Esteemed Editor:

Hollywood is mourning Carole Lombard as it has mourned no other beloved since Will Rogers.

Like him, she had the common touch, off screen as on.

Like his, her works in behalf of kind and country became known in their fullness only when she had played out the script and left the lot.

Earthy people both, rating wit above glamour and fame an implement of beneficence, they met death in the heights over a land they loved and labored for.

Carole Lombard and Will Rogers glorified in a very special way a Hollywood too often too preoccupied with the art of glorification to know itself and the measure of its usefulness as they did.

Showmen will do well to shop in person for their patriotic pictures (if the topicals may be so grouped) during the next few months.

Those backlogs of product built up by some of the studios in anticipation of selling conditions to be coped with under Consent Decree requirements—and a most sagacious policy it appeared at the time—are proving something less than an unqualified bargain in the face of changed consumer attitude.

Produced to satisfy a taste and state of mind prevalent at time of filming and considered reasonably certain to endure for the necessary period, some of these fictions are running afoul of changes in public mood wrought by those little yellow men who were not going to attack the United States.

One of last week's sorrier screenings was a comedy about Nazi and British agents bidding against each other for purchase of American military secrets. Some minor tinkering had been done by way of bringing the picture up to date, but nothing could be done with the handling of Nazi and British agents as very polite and amusing fellows conducting their competition with courtesy, in cutaway and in no hurry whatever.

In the interim between filming and screening Nazi agents have become, to phrase it circumpectly, something quite other than dandified dialect comedians mumbling drolleries over teacups. And both are believed to be in a very hell of a hurry at any and all times.

On the contrary, another of last week's previewings was of a film, completed before outbreak of the war, which would have been overboard as to heroics and dialogue prior to Pearl Harbor but comes to screen now attuned to the intensities of the moment as if made, script to screen, since December 7th.

It is not practicable to scrap those films in the backlog which will jar the sensibilities of today's people.

It is not practicable to revise very many of them materially.

Product Upswing

Starting of 11 pictures, offset by completion of but 5, sent the total of productions in shooting stage to a thriving 44 at week-end.

There are, inevitably, some clucks in fine feathers coming up.

It's a time, if ever there was one, for knowing before showing.

Inasmuch as no outstanding producer has terminated affiliations this week—and if one of them does so before publication date this doesn't mean him—this is as good a time as any for putting into the record, solely as background information of course, the fact that not all of these abdications by the mighty are precisely what they are made to seem.

An old and elaborately unwritten law of Hollywood is that studios do not discharge producers whose annual incomes approximate or excel their employers'.

It isn't considered cricket for a $5,000-the-week executive to fire a man of his own salary rank for anything so mundane as incompetency, dereliction, failure to provide profitable product, insubordination or any other reason whatsoever and notwithstanding.

It isn't done. It isn't gentlemanly. It isn't sporting. And it most especially isn't a pleasure to explain such a firing to stockholders given to asking why it wasn't done, if it required doing, a couple of million dollars sooner.

A neat technique for handling these matters has been worked out over the years and functions like a Swiss watch.

Custom is for a source, never identified, never the producer's agent, never a studio publicity man, but nevertheless and always somebody whom Louella Parsons will believe to the extent of taking the names of the mighty in hand, to drop the word that So-and-so is leaving such-and-such studio.

Generally, it is made to appear, he feels that his style has been impaired by overwork or by staying too long in one place or by some thing or other without a name on it, wherefore he is going to avail himself of an opportunity to realize at long last a complete exercising of his creative talents.

For the last year or more it's been par for the report to imply or to state bluntly that the producer doing the resigning is negotiating a United Artists release.

A while back it was par to mention RKO-Radio as the imminent beneficiary of the gentleman's services, and just lately there's been a vogue for naming Warners as the chosen affiliate.

The truth of the matter in virtually all cases of the kind is that the resigning producer's masterpieces have been losing the company fantastic amounts of money and steps have been taken to (1) cut his budgets, (2) cut his salary or (3) get rid of him as painlessly as possible but now.

The news story that leaks out through the lay press, is the device evolved for confusing the multitude, preserving the pride of all participants and giving the departing servant a good character. Commonly, it deceives everybody but the half dozen men who could furnish the fellow with equivalent employment and who knew all about the red ink on the books a long while back.

As a formality in the interests of a peace front for the industry, the rumour technique is not without a virtue of a sort, but it's no bonanza for the rumouree—i. e., the studio to which the genius is pledged by the gossip.

The accumulation of rumours connecting everybody out of a job with a United Artists release deal did that organization no good.

Neither did it prosper the prestige of RKO-Radio to be bandied about as the refuge of scrapped Goliaths.

It's the innocent bystander that gets shot —W. R. W.

Studios Send 7 New Features for Promotions

Warners this week pegged field promotions for two new pictures: "Kings Row" and "Captain of the Clouds," 20th Century-Fox set "Song of the Islands," Paramount put on a show at the Capital for "The Fleet's In" and MGM opened three: "The Vanishing Virginian," "Joe Smith, American" and "The Bugle Sounds."

Warners' "Kings Row," starring Ann Sheridan, will bow at the Astor Theatre in New York on February 2nd. Hal B. Wallis, producer of the film and now a unit producer for the company, is planning to be on hand for the premiere, with David Lewis, associate producer. Warner Bros. reports that an extensive advertising, exploitation and publicity campaign including a member of radio tie-ups is now being completed for the opening of their film version of Henry Bellamann's novel. "Kings Row" will play the Astor for an extended run on a popular-price basis. Robert Cummings, Ronald Reagan, Betty Field and Claude Rains are featured.

"Captains of the Clouds," Warners' Technicolor picture about the Canadian Air Force, will open at the Strand in New York on February 12th. Dedicated to the R.C.A.F., a good part of the picture was made in Canada, at a number of Air Force training schools. It is expected that officials from the U. S. and Canadian armed forces will attend the "Captains" opening, which also will premiere the same day in Ottawa, London, Cairo and Melbourne. James Cagney, Dennis Morgan and Brenda Marshall headline the stellar cast. Michael Curtiz directed and Hal B. Wallis was executive producer with William Cagney, associate producer.

The Lincoln Theatre, Miami Beach, is set for the debut of 20th Century-Fox's Technicolor film, "Song of the Islands," starring Betty Grable who is scheduled to go to Miami for the opening. A radio tie-up for the picture has been arranged on the Kate Smith Hour, Friday night, February 6th, with Miss Grable as guest star. The broadcast will take place in Miami.

Paramount was host to official Washington last Friday, at a special showing of Paramount films held in the Interior Department Building in the capitol city. The main feature was a preview of "The Fleet's In," starring Dorothy Lamour and William Holden. In addition, Arthur Menken's "Battle of the Pacific," and a composite Paramount newsreel on the war were shown to the 1,000 guests, representing various government departments, who attended. Edwin L. Weisl, a member of the company's board who, for the past five months has been serving as assistant to Floyd B. Odum, director of the OPM division of contract distribution, was host on behalf of Paramount.

Following a two-day civic celebration including a charity ball and luncheon sponsored by a civic club, MGM's "The Vanishing Virginian," opened on Friday, January 23rd, in Lynchburg, Va. Kathryn Grayson, star of the picture, was expected to arrive from Hollywood for the premiere.

"Joe Smith, American," another MGM film, had a private screening in the Archives Building auditorium in Washington, at which Senator Sheridan Downey of California was host last Friday night, to fellow members of Congress, defense officials and the press.

An appropriate military setting was provided for the debut of MGM's "The Bugle Sounds," at Loew's Theatre in Louisville, Ky., last Wednesday night, with a number of Army and War Department officials attending. Army planes flying above the city; a military parade to the theatre and a broadcast from the lobby of the theatre, over station WINN, added to the festivities.

Contract Report Shows $1,250 Wobber Salary

Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation has concluded a new five-year employment contract with Herman Wobber calling for a weekly salary of $1,250 according to a contract report issued at Washington last week by the Securities and Exchange Commission. The five-year agreement, recently negotiated calls for $12,500 a year expenses.

The contract makes Mr. Wobber western division and western district manager it was reported. Mr. Wobber has indicated recently that he wished to resign from the general managership, of 20th Century-Fox sales and return to San Francisco, his home city.

Warner Named Representative

Harry M. Warner, President of Warner Brothers, has accepted an appointment of the University of Denver as representative of the production branch of the industry on the Advisory Council of the Library of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Loew Suit Filed by Stockholder

In a stockholder's suit filed last week by Marian Gottlieb in the New York supreme court against Loew's and 28 of its officers, alleged excessive payments of bonuses to company officials was claimed to the extent of $14,250,000.

The plaintiff, owner of 100 shares of common, listed five alleged instances of over-payments to the company officials under the agreement which provides for a percentage of the distribution of the profits.

Among the claims is the contention that Loew's $3,500,000 investment in Gaumont British Picture Corp., Ltd., is worthless because of the repercussions of the war and that the company had failed to take this into consideration in fixing the profits of the officials.

The complaint charges a failure to deduct losses caused by foreign regulations which have frozen and blocked monies abroad. Illegal payments totaling $1,100,000 were made to unknown persons and concealed on the company's books, it is also alleged.

Loew's has countered with an application to dismiss the complaint on the ground that it fails to state a cause of action; that many of the charges were decided in a previous consolidated stockholders' suit in which a decision was made in 1939, and that some of the counts of the complaint are barred by the statute of limitations.

ASCAP Loses State Appeal

The American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers last week lost another fight in the almost continual series of court battles over the constitutionality of various state anti-ASCAP laws, and over its position under anti-trust laws.

The United States supreme court dismissed the Society's appeal from the decision of a United States district court in Washington state, that the Society had violated the Sherman anti-trust law.

Under the new dispensation, ASCAP has agreed to comply with the Washington law.

Executives of the Society, and of the state of Florida met at Jacksonville, last week, to devise methods by which the music publishers' association may operate there, in view of an antagonistic state law which has been upheld by court tests.

Court Upholds Appeal

The circuit court of appeals at Cincinnati confirmed the decision of the Federal district court of Detroit in the Kramer theatre case. Under this, the house now under receivership of Edgar E. Kirchner, reverts to the possession of the Kramer family, and circuit owners, Cohn & Sheven, who were removed from operation by court order, lose the theatre.

Deposition Suit Filed

Five consolidated stockholders of Columbia Pictures have filed application in the New York supreme court to take the depositions before trial of ten Columbia executives. Acts of mismanagement and issuance of illegal stock options to officers are charged in the suit.

HERALD PEOPLE

By Staff Photographer

HARRIET YOUNG has been with the Herald editorial staff a year and two months, most of her time having been devoted to acquiring intimate knowledge of the 14,000 biographies in the Motion Picture Almanac.

Her predilection for cooking is to be put to the test in the near future, and marriage may also postpone fulfilment of her ambition—to write a novel—and change her present aversion to rushing, even when she is leaving for Englewood, N. J.

Board Investigates Morgan S. Kaufman

Another aftermath to the two trials of ex-Judge J. Warren Davis and Morgan S. Kaufman in the William Fox conspiracy case came in U. S. District Court in Philadelphia this week when a three-man board appointed by Federal Judge Guy K. Bard, started an investigation of Mr. Kaufman's professional conduct. The examination began in open court at the request of Attorney General Francis Biddle, who on December 5th, asked the court to discipline Mr. Kaufman.

Attorney General Biddle said Mr. Kaufman admitted lending $10,000 to a cousin of former U. S. Circuit Judge Davis at a time when he was counsel for and party to seven cases before Judge Davis.

Judge Bard, who last March received the Grand Jury's indictment of Mr. Kaufman, Judge Davis and William Fox on charges of conspiracy to obstruct justice and defraud the United States, was to have examined Mr. Kaufman himself. However, he said, the pressure of other court duties necessitated his delegating the task. The three special masters have the power to subpoena witnesses and, if necessary, punish them for contempt of court. But they cannot themselves discipline Mr. Kaufman. They will file recommendations with Judge Bard.

The hearing was adjourned abruptly Tuesday, when Mr. Fox, a witness, collapsed. Martin W. Littleton, his attorney, revealed that the former film magnate was "being kept alive with large amounts of insulin."

Bausch & Lomb Company Victor in Damage Suit

A $40,000,000 damage suit whose proceeds were to have been divided equally between the Federal Government and two attorneys who instituted the action was dismissed Thursday, January 16th, by Judge Alfred C. Cox in the Federal court. The defendants named in the suit were Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, Carl Zeiss, Inc., and M. H. Eisenhart, Carl L. Bausch and Theodore B. Drescher, executives of Bausch & Lomb.

The suit was filed by Murray Brensilber and Emanuel Thebner under an old statute providing that individuals may sue persons or corporations who have been charged with defrauding the Government. Judge Cox rejected the complaint after hearing argument by Whitney Seymour, defense attorney, and I. Gainsburg, lawyer for the plaintiffs. The court held that the statute did not apply to cases of the sort contemplated in the Bausch & Lomb action.

Order Termination Of RKO Proceeding

Judge William Bondy in a final decree filed in the United States district court in New York has ordered termination of the reorganization proceedings of RKO and the discharge of the Irving Trust Co. as trustee.

The decree, signed last week, fixed 11 years from its date as the time limit in which creditors may file claims and security holders present or surrender their securities in order to participate in the distribution of new securities under the plan of reorganization approved in 1940.

Court Rules Co-author Shares in Renewals

A copyright renewal of a musical composition obtained by a composer is for the benefit of his co-author as well even though the latter has allowed his rights to lapse, Judge Vincent T. Leibel ruled in the federal court in New York last week.

The court denied judgements sought in three cases by Edward B. Marks Music Co., Inc., against Jerry Vogel Music Company, Inc., in which renewal rights to the songs, "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now," "The Bird on Nellie's Hat" and "December in May," were involved.

Bill Poster Ruled Employee

A bill poster who received a flat payment of $2.50 per week to post bills at a theatre was held to be a theatre employee and therefore entitled to workmen's compensation for injuries sustained when he fell off a ladder. The ruling was made by the New York court of appeals in the case of Hamilton vs. Landau Amusement Corp.

Plagiarism Suit Dismissed

Judge Sidney Symes in the Federal court in New York has dismissed the plagiarism action of Leo Sakardi against Dwight Deere Wiman. The court ruled that Mr. Wiman's musical "I Married an Angel," was not plagiarism.

McFaul Elected Bank Director

Vincent R. McFaul, president of Buffalo Theatres, Inc., Buffalo, N. Y., has been elected a director of the Liberty Bank in that city.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

DURANGO KID, THE: Charles Starrett, Luana Walters—Good western to good business considering weather bad. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 9-10.—John W. Warner, Plaza Theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

FIGHT TO THE FINISH, A: Don Terry, Rosalind Keith—It provided good entertainment as the added feature. Running time, 59 minutes. Played January 5-7.—Mel Jolley, Columbia Theatre, St. Thomas, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

GO WEST, YOUNG LADY: Penny Singleton, Glenn Ford—A natural for Texas. Well liked. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 22-23.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, DeLeon, Texas. Small town patronage.

NAVAL ACADEMY: Freddie Bartholomew, Jimmy Lydon—Better than some of Columbia's specials. Lots of good comments. Running time, 67 minutes. Played December 12.—H. T. Nokes, Ozark Theatre, Ozark, Mo. Rural patronage.

OUR WIFE: Melvyn Douglas, Ruth Hussey—Fairly good, nothing to rave about at boxoffice. Running time, 102 minutes. Played December 3-4.—H. T. Nokes, Ozark Theatre, Ozark, Mo. Rural patronage.

SON OF DAVY CROCKETT: Bill Elliott—Poor western title. Business off. Weather real cold.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Henry Fonda, Barbara Stanwyck—Good picture, well liked. Cold weather hurt crowd. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 1-2.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, DeLeon, Texas. Small town patronage.

YOU'LL NEVER GET RICH: Fred Astaire, Rita Hayworth—This was the only feature we have had from Columbia in two years that did not have to be double-billed. Astaire is anything but popular here but the theme was timely and well received. Running time, 88 minutes. Played, December 28.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

YOU'LL NEVER GET RICH: Fred Astaire, Rita Hayworth, Robert Benchley—Did below average business. Suffered from cold wave. No fault of the picture.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

DESIGN FOR SCANDAL: Rosalind Russell, Walter Pidgeon, Edward Arnold—We ran this for Christmas, not having any advanced dope on it, and we couldn't have asked for a better Christmas picture. Light and gay, plenty of wise cracks, and we had a good crowd, even on Christmas Eve. Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 24-25.—M. L. DuBose, Majestic Theatre, Cotulla, Tex. General patronage.

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE: Spencer Tracy, Ingrid Bergman, Lana Turner—Director Victor Fleming again drags out a picture twice as long as the story can stand. Results are a good picture spoiled by a very practised film-wasting director. Tracy played his part well, but it is his worst picture. Played January 4-6.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

DR. KILDARE'S WEDDING DAY: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Laraine Day—The best of the Kildare's. Wish Metro could have found another way to separate Kildare and "Mary Lamont." Anyway, a grand picture. Well cast and directed. Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 24-25.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

FEMININE TOUCH, THE: Rosalind Russell, Don Ameche, Kay Francis, Van Heflin—This is a good class comedy that was well liked here and quite well attended. The dialogue is very clever. Rosalind Russell is a favorite here. The new Van Heflin will go places. Running time, 97 minutes. Played January 8.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

HONKY TONK: Clark Gable, Lana Turner—This one did not do as well as expected. I don't know just why it missed but there you are. Running time, 103 minutes. Played December 29-31.—Cliff Noble, Simcoe Theatre, Sutton West, Ontario, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

HONKY TONK: Clark Gable, Lana Turner, Claire Trevor—Metro didn't over-ballyhoo this. It's everything they say it is. They came from far and near to see it and were satisfied. Best business we've done since G. W. T. W. Running time, 104 minutes. Played December 21-23.—M. L. DuBose, Majestic Theatre, Cotulla, Tex. General patronage.

LIFE BEGINS FOR ANDY HARDY: Mickey Rooney, Lewis Stone, Judy Garland—This series has always done business for me and this one was no exception. My customers seemed to thoroughly enjoy it. This new girl, Patricia Dane does a swell job and should go a long way. Congratulations are in order for her part in this one. Running time, 102 minutes. Played January 1-3.—Cliff Noble, Simcoe Theatre, Sutton West, Ontario, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

LIFE BEGINS FOR ANDY HARDY: Lewis Stone, Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Ann Rutherford—Good picture, but drawn out too long. Made it rather tiresome for what it had to offer. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 21-23.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

RINGSIDE MAISIE: Ann Sothorn, George Murphy—As usual Maisie gets kicked around plenty and my patrons seem to be getting tired of it. Comment just fair. Running time, 95 minutes. Played December 19, 20.—Cliff Noble, Simcoe Theatre, Sutton West, Ontario, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

THUNDER AFLOAT: Wallace Beery, Chester Morris—Fine action picture. Timely and a real one for Beery and Morris fans. Played January 12-13.—Walter R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Joan Crawford, Robert Taylor, Greer Garson—Good, but this type feature has little drawing power in a small town like mine.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Joan Crawford, Robert Taylor, Greer Garson—Very good sophisticated comedy with an excellent cast that gave general satisfaction to a large and appreciative audience. Thanks to Miss Crawford you have done my situation a world of good in your last two pictures. Come again—you are more than welcome. The others in the cast deserve a lot of praise also. Running time, 102 minutes. Played January 7, 8.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Robert Taylor, Joan Crawford, Greer Garson—Ever so often some one makes a picture in which the glamour boys and girls have an opportunity to show the upper crust how well they can handle the correct fork and the proper broad "A." On such occasions, such as this one, we exhibitors in the tall timber sing that lonesome cowboy refrain "Oh, Why Was I Born." Running time, 105 minutes. Played December 21-22.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Joan Crawford, Robert Taylor, Greer Garson—Some people may consider this a good picture. I am not going to pass opinion on it. All I can say is, after seeing Bob Taylor as "Billy the Kid," I cannot interest myself in this picture.

Hope Metro can find other stories as good as "Billy" for Robert Taylor in the future. Running time, 102 minutes. Played December 28-30.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Red Skelton, Conrad Veidt, Ann Rutherford—A sleeper which threw the theatre into an uproar with its clever comedy. Running time, 78 minutes. Played December 31-January 1.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

WOMAN'S FACE, A: Joan Crawford, Melvyn Douglas—Some liked it, and some walked out on it. Personally I thought it too long. Running time, 106 minutes. Played December 17.—H. T. Nokes, Ozark Theatre, Ozark, Mo. Rural patronage.

Monogram

OLD SWIMMIN' HOLE, THE: Jackie Moran, Marcia Mae Jones—An excellent picture for a double bill. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 13.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Kingsford, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SIGN OF THE WOLF: Michael Whalen, Grace Bradley—Exceptionally well produced and a very good all around entertainment.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wisconsin.

Paramount

ALOMA OF THE SOUTH SEAS: Dorothy Lamour, Jon Hall—Beautiful picture in color; story a little weak. Very well received by most patrons. Business below average due to cold weather. Played January 6-8.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite Okla. Small town patronage.

BIRTH OF THE BLUES: Bing Crosby, Mary Martin—Not the super-duper the salesman sold me. Just a good pleasing picture to average Sunday-Monday business. Running time 80 minutes. Played December 14-15.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, DeLeon, Texas. Small town patronage.

BIRTH OF THE BLUES: Bing Crosby, Mary Martin—Very good musical show but business was poor, due to a cold wave. Running time, 86 minutes. Played January 7-8.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

BUY ME THAT TOWN: Lloyd Nolan, Constance Moore—Very well liked on a double bill. Played just before Christmas so business was not up to par. Lots of comedy to help this along. Not a dull moment in this above average programmer. L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wisconsin.

CAUGHT IN THE DRAFT: Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour—Plenty good and the boxoffice said so. Running time, 82 minutes. Played November 30.—H. T. Nokes, Ozark Theatre, Ozark, Mo. Rural patronage.

FLYING BLIND: Richard Arlen, Jean Parker—Was very favorably received by about an average Saturday night crowd which likes action in their picture fare. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 3.—G. W. McLean, State Theatre, Big Timber, Mont. Small town patronage.

HOLD BACK THE DAWN: Charles Boyer, Olivia de Havilland—Very interesting feature that was played on Bank Night. Second night 50% better than first, so feature evidently pleased them enough so they talked it up.—Al Eliason, Koronis Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

I WANTED WINGS: Ray Milland, William Holden, Wayne Morris, Veronica Lake—Played this second run. Had a cold wave. Business real bad.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

KISS THE BOYS GOODBYE: Don Ameche, Mary Martin—Pleased an average turn-out on "Take a Chance Night" although personally I thought the picture pretty weak. Running time, 83 minutes. Played January 7.—G. W. McLean, State Theatre, Big Timber, Mont. Small town patronage.

LAS VEGAS NIGHTS: Phil Regan, Tommy Dorsey—Our people on the whole, did not care for this picture. This film is neither a good musical or good drama. Would have been more entertaining as a short. Either concentrate on the music or the narrative, because our patrons know how few times the combination has been successful. Running time, 89 minutes. Played January 2, 3.—Simon Galitzki, Coed Theatre, Topeka, Kansas. General patronage.

LIFE WITH HENRY: Jackie Cooper, Leila Ernst, Eddie Bracken, Hedda Hopper—Best Aldrich to date. Did record Saturday business since house has been opened. Play it, by all means.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

PACIFIC BLACKOUT: Robert Preston, Martha O'Driscoll—Average business and a good show, but too much competition the first night. Used in place of a western, and it held its own.—Al Eliassen, Koronis Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

PARSON OF PANAMINT: Charles Ruggles, Ellen Drew—Business suffered from Christmas, bad weather, and blackout jitters. The picture was good and Charles Ruggles turned in a grand piece of work. Running time, 84 minutes. Played December 24-25.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

REACHING FOR THE SUN: Joel McCrea, Ellen Drew, Eddie Bracken, Albert Dekker—We found this one okay. This story with both humor and pathos holds one's interest from start to finish and Joel McCrea, Ellen Drew, Eddie Bracken, Albert Dekker and Billy Gilbert all turn in good performances. A highlight is the thrilling battle fought by the crane operators using their huge mechanical monsters as weapons. A picture worthwhile seeing. Running time, 89 minutes. Played January 10.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS: John Wayne, Betty Field—Most everyone was pleased with this picture. However, there were a few who said it did not follow the book and they found getting interested in the picture somewhat of a problem. The color and acting was excellent but the plot and sequences moved too slow. Something was needed in this film, but I do not consider myself director enough to state specifically what that might be. Book sales helped business. Running time, 98 minutes. Played December 28-30.—Simon Galitzki, Coed Theatre, Topeka, Kansas. General patronage.

SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS: John Wayne, Betty Field—Swell picture in color, which brought some of the old fogies to the theatre. Weather was bitter cold and the picture did not gross like it would have if the weather had been decent. But it saved the exhibitor from having a blackout. Most beautiful settings, excellent direction and a swell job of acting. Several spoke of Betty Field's performance as being very good. Played January 3-5.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

Producers Releasing Corp.

BEASTS OF BERLIN: Roland Drew, Steffi Duna—The picture is exciting in spots and the acting is excellent. All patrons were well pleased with it. Running time, 83 minutes. Played January 5-7.—Mel Jolley, Columbia Theatre, St. Thomas, Ontario, Can. Small town patronage.

MR. CELEBRITY: Buzzy Henry, Doris Day—A strictly program picture. Business off.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Republic

APACHE KID, THE: Don "Red" Barry—Average western which pleased average Friday-Saturday business. Running time, 56 minutes. Played January 9-10.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

BACK IN THE SADDLE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Mary Lee—Not as good as usual Autry. It lacked the usual run of music and comedy others had. Running time, 73 minutes. Played December 19-20.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

ICE, CAPADES: Dorothy Lewis, Jerry Colonna—God picture but poor draw. Running time, 88 minutes. Played December 9.—H. T. Nokes, Ozark Theatre, Ozark, Mo. Rural patronage.

KANSAS CYCLONE, THE: Don "Red" Barry—Good western to average business. Lynn Merrick is good support in this picture. Played, January 2-3. Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

MELODY RANCH: Gene Autry, Jimmy Durante—Republic has made better Autry pictures than this one. So I was gypped on the price on this one. One mistake was leaving Smiley Burnette out. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 27-29.—Ino. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Kingsford, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PUDDINHEAD: Judy Canova—Just a picture. Tried it on a single bill with disappointing results. Running time, 9 reels. Played January 6, 7.—Cliff Noble, Simcoe Theatre, Sutton West, Ontario, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

RIDIN' ON A RAINBOW: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Mary Lee—Played repeat engagement. They still come out to see it. One of the better Autrys.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

TWO CONTRIBUTORS RESUME REPORTS

Two contributors resumed reports to the What the Picture Did For Me Department this week, after an absence of some time. They are:

JNO. S. ERICKSON, Rex Theatre, Kingsford, Iron Mountain, Mich.

M. L. DuBOSE, Majestic Theatre, Cotulla, Texas.

Read the reports from these and other contributors in the adjoining columns.

SAILORS ON LEAVE: William Lundigan, Shirley Ross—Very good program picture. As such, don't hesitate to play it. It went over fine here.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SINGING HILL: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—I put this one in on a tough date and it brought me some nice business. Patrons were well satisfied. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 16, 17.—Cliff Noble, Simcoe Theatre, Sutton West Ontario, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

SIS HOPKINS: Judy Canova, Bob Crosby—They all enjoyed this one, thought it great. For myself, I didn't care much for it. O.K., it pleased all who came. Running time, 98 minutes. Played December 31 January 1-2.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Kingsford, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SUNSET IN WYOMING: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette—The mighty man of westerns didn't do much in this picture. We missed little Mary Lee. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 2-3.—Vic Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Small town patronage.

TUXEDO JUNCTION: Weaver Bros., Elviry—Believe this is the best one, yet, although I think they should stick more to the hill-billy stuff. This is what folks expect to see and if they don't, I am afraid they are going to fizzle out. Running time, 71 minutes. Played December 31, January 1.—Frank E. Rider, Chateau Theatre, Wauneta, Neb. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

CITIZEN KANE: Orson Welles—I wish they would have left this on the shelf. It's one of my lowest grossers since I have been in Groveton. RKO has made another "Hitting A New High." It's a flop if there ever was one. Running time, 119 minutes. Played January 10-12.—Vic Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Tex. Small town patronage.

FATHER TAKES A WIFE: Adolphe Menjou, Gloria Swanson, Desi Arnaz—A real good Bargain Night picture. Running time, 74 minutes. Played December 30.—Vic Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Tex. Small town patronage.

JUNGLE CAVALCADE: Animal feature—Doubled with "Niagara Falls" and made a good show. The "Cavalcade" is worth running. Running time, 77 minutes. Played November 28-29.—H. T. Nokes, Ozark Theatre, Ozark, Mo. Rural patronage.

SCATTERGOOD MEETS BROADWAY: Guy Kibbee, Emma Dunn, Joyce Compton—There is nothing I could say that would make this better. Terrible, is a master of understatement. I should send RKO a bill for running it. The customers were conspicuous by their absence. Played January 7-8.—Eddie L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

SCATTERGOOD PULLS THE STRINGS: Guy Kibbee—This series is going good here, and this one helped along. Kind of stories the rural people like. Running time, 69 minutes.—H. T. Nokes, Ozark Theatre, Ozark, Mo. Rural patronage.

SPELLBINDER, THE: Lee Tracy, Barbara Read, Patric Knowles—Just a program picture that will get by.—Harland Rankin, Park Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SUNNY: Anna Neagle, John Carroll—"Sunny" is a fairly good picture. Drawing power was medium. Running time, 97 minutes. Played December 21-22.—H. T. Nokes, Ozark Theatre, Ozark, Mo. Rural patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BELLE STARR: Gene Tierney, Randolph Scott—Very well liked by a good crowd. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 18-19.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, DeLeon, Texas. Small town patronage.

BELLE STARR: Randolph Scott, Gene Tierney, Dana Andrews—It didn't have the box office punch, but it's a swell picture. It is just another glorified picture. Running time, 87 minutes. Played December 24-25.—Vic Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Tex. Small town patronage.

BLOOD AND SAND: Tyrone Power, Linda Darnell—The picture O.K. and drew very well. Running time, 125 minutes. Played November 23-24.—H. T. Nokes, Ozark Theatre, Ozark, Mo. Rural patronage.

CHARLEY'S AUNT: Jack Benny, Kay Francis—Picture O.K. and everyone was satisfied. Running time, 82 minutes. Played, December 28.—H. T. Nokes, Ozark Theatre, Ozark, Mo. Rural patronage.

CHARLEY'S AUNT: Jack Benny—The English background of the early nineties used here, did not appeal to the ordinary run of the mine patrons. A general disappointment to many, including myself. Allocated in the top group and business certainly did not warrant that classification. At a fair rental might fit into a double bill program.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wisconsin. General patronage.

CHARLEY'S AUNT: Jack Benny, Kay Francis, James Ellison—Personally, did not care for this, but the paying customers really laughed loud and long. Must have been funny to them.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN RIO: Sidney Toler, Mary Beth Hughes—About the average for this type, but they have lost all their drawing power. No interest, poor business on this.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wisconsin.

DANCE HALL: Cesar Romero, Carol Landis—Did well on this. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 16-17.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, DeLeon, Texas. Small town patronage.

DRESSED TO KILL: Lloyd Nolan, Mary Beth Hughes—Nolan is coming to the front. Each succeeding show brings him new followers. This is probably his best to date for "20th Century."—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wisconsin.

DRESSED TO KILL: Lloyd Nolan, Mary Beth Hughes—Used as the lower half of a double bill with "Nine Lives Are Not Enough" for one day, results were pitiful. When this company gets set to make a low bracket picture, it has no equal. Sold to me in the first block of five and not worth remembering. My public could smell this one clear across the street and did not bother about coming closer. Running time, 74 minutes. Played December 6.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

GREAT GUNS: Laurel and Hardy—Good, fast-moving comedy. Good business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 21.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, DeLeon, Texas. Small town patronage.

MAN I MARRIED, THE: Joan Bennett, Francis Lederer—Picked this old baby up to complete contract and it drew top business. Well received by a big crowd. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 30-January 1.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, DeLeon, Texas. Small town patronage.

MOON OVER MIAMI: Don Ameche, Betty Grable—Good picture but cold weather and war kept the patrons away. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 15.—H. T. Nokes, Ozark Theatre, Ozark, Mo. Rural patronage.

RISE AND SHINE: Jack Oakie, George Murphy, Linda Darnell, Walter Brennan—All I can say for this one is that Fox is setting it for percentage, thought more of it than the customers did. Further, it was out of season when played. As for the story, there was none to speak of, the old College try, with Oakie the hero. A restless audience that knows they have been sold again. Oh, to be back again on the old 20 per cent cancellation, and blocks of 40 to 50 pictures, when you could definitely check on what you have coming and get rid of the clucks. I am very much concerned that this block of five will not be terminated at the end of the trial period. I speak only for myself, but I think that the exhibitor is worse off today under this system than at any time of my long experience.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ROMANCE OF THE RIO GRANDE: Cesar Romero—We ran this on New Year's Day and it broke all records for attendance. It also stood up the next two days. Romero as the Cisco Kid is well liked here. Running time, 73 minutes. Played January 1-3.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

ROMANCE OF THE RIO GRANDE: Cesar Romero, Patricia Morison—A very fine picture that should do well anywhere. Suitable for double billing only. Had cold wave that affected us.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SUN VALLEY SERENADE: Sonja Henie, John Payne—Enjoyed by a good crowd. Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 28-29.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, DeLeon, Texas. Small town patronage.

SUN VALLEY SERENADE: Sonja Henie, John Payne—Very refreshing and pleased just about 100%.

The nicest all around entertainment we have had for some time. Icy roads hurt on opening night, but the final gross was considerable above average. Not enough, however, to off-set the poor business on all the others in this first block of Fox's. One winner out of every five is not going to excuse the producers for the four "blanks."—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wisconsin. General patronage.

SWAMP WATER: Walter Brennan, Walter Huston—Very good picture which pleased all. Running time, 88 minutes. Played January 4-5.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

TOBACCO ROAD: Charles Grapewin, Henry Fonda—A big disappointment at the boxoffice. Nobody liked it and we had many walkouts. It was panned by everybody I saw. Running time, 84 minutes. Played December 22-24.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

WEEKEND IN HAVANA: Alice Faye, Carmen Miranda, John Payne—Fine for Christmas day. Beautiful color. Good entertainment. Big crowd. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 25.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, DeLeon, Texas. Small town patronage.

WILD GESE CALLING: Joan Bennett, Henry Fonda—Personally thought this only fair but it drew and pleased way beyond expectations. Excellent at box-office. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 26.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, DeLeon, Texas. Small town patronage.

WILD GESE CALLING: Henry Fonda, Joan Bennett—Fox had a lot of nerve to allocate this into the top allocation. Running time 78 minutes and not a very convincing story and certainly not a show that cost a lot to produce. All adds up to a "gyp" on the part of the exchange. OK for double billing.—Bank Nites or Bargain programs. Hardly a laugh in the entire show which is two strikes against it! Running time, 78 minutes.—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wisconsin. General patronage.

YANK IN THE R.A.F., A: Tyrone Power, Betty Grable—Good picture and good business. Running time, 95 minutes. Played January 4.—John W. Warner, Plaza Theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

United Artists

BLACKOUT: Conrad Veidt, Valerie Hobson—Seem to interest our patrons, had several comments. For an English picture it's O.K. Played December 21-22.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Kingsford, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BROADWAY LIMITED: Victor McLaglen, Marjorie Woodworth, Patsy Kelly, Zasu Pitts—This was a sleeper. Played it on Friday and Saturday when we have a crowd regardless, and they were mighty well pleased. In fact, a customer asked why we ran such a good picture on Saturday. Patsy Kelly and Zasu Pitts helped with a lot of comedy, and the baby (whose it is I don't know) was a darling. Played January 2-3.—M. L. DuBose, Majestic Theatre, Cotulla, Tex. General patronage.

GREAT DICTATOR, THE: Charles Chaplin, Paulette Goddard—An extremely pleasing and well planned satire. Chaplin had them laughing during the entire length of the picture. The last speech was especially appreciated here, because in the first place it was truly American, and in the second many doubted Chaplin's speaking abilities. Chaplin presents his ideas in clear cut analogies which leave the spectator completely informed as to the original purpose of his wit and humor. Some commented that the picture was too long in relation to what it had to tell. Business fair, a snow storm and cool weather kept many away. Running time, 125 minutes. Played January 3-5.—Simon Galitzki, Coed Theatre, Topeka, Kansas. General patronage.

LYDIA: Merle Oberon, Edna May Oliver, Alan Marshal—A very fine picture, but isn't a picture to bring them in. Lots of walk-outs. Business off. No good.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

OUR TOWN: William Holden, Martha Scott, Fay Bainter—As critics' remarks were unfavorable and exhibitors in this Department were all against it, I laid off it. Then saw it in another theatre and liked it so well myself that I booked it. And maybe my audience is different from all others and myself, also, because it pleased 100%, even had compliments on showing such a delightful picture. Weather 25 below, so attendance poor from rural district. Played December 22-23.—Walter R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

PRISONER OF ZENDA: Madeleine Carroll, Ronald Colman—Reissue. Somehow or other this one didn't click. Played December 6-7.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Kingsford, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SUNDOWN: Gene Tierney, Bruce Cabot, George Sanders—It's right up to the minute of today. Give it your best playing time. Running time, 90 minutes. Played January 7-8.—Vic Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Tex. Small town patronage.

SUNDOWN: Gene Tierney, Bruce Cabot, George Sanders—We did a good business with this picture and bought it flat. We've played bigger pictures and made less profit. It's good for any day of the week. However, it will need some advertising, but National has a good trailer on it. Running time, 90 minutes. Played January 12-13.—M. L. DuBose, Majestic Theatre, Cotulla, Tex. General patronage.

THAT HAMILTON WOMAN: Vivien Leigh, Laurence Olivier—Loss, terrible. Took an awful walloping on this one. One remark: "Vivien Leigh, star in 'Gone With the Wind?' Glad I didn't see it. Couldn't understand half of what she said." I agree also, I couldn't understand her either. Why can't these stars speak more clearly? Running time, 125 minutes. Played January 8-9.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Kingsford, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

THAT UNCERTAIN FEELING: Merle Oberon, Melvyn Douglas. Sophisticated comedy that was liked by only a few. Running time, 85 minutes. Played, December 29-31.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

TOPPER TAKES A TRIP: Roland Young, Constance Bennett—Played this one old as a substitute and was surprised at the good reception it received. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 12, 13.—Cliff Noble, Simcoe Theatre, Sutton West Ontario, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

WESTERNER, THE: Gary Cooper, Walter Brennan, Fred Stone—Wonderful picture. Thoroughly enjoyed by everyone. Enough outdoor action to please western fans and good story and acting for the others. Played January 9-10.—Walter R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

ALIAS THE DEACON: Bob Burns—A good programmer for the small towns with plenty of laughs. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 25-27.—Fred Basha, Palace Theatre, Corner Brook, Newfoundland. Small town patronage.

BADLANDS OF DAKOTA: Robert Stack, Ann Rutherford, Richard Dix, Frances Farmer—Very good western. Miss Farmer mighty good in the role of "Jane"; in fact, entire cast in this picture is excellent.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

BADLANDS OF DAKOTA: Robert Stack, Ann Rutherford, Richard Dix, Frances Farmer—Here is the super western to end all westerns. It drew very well doubled with "Navy Blues." Lots of fast action and comedy kept this moving right along. Everything that was ever in any western is in this one. The only weakness is some corny love scenes that luckily are very short. Action fans will love it. The price was right on it as I expected it to be a higher allocation than it was. Running time, 74 minutes. Played January 9-10.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

HIT THE ROAD: Gladys George, Barton MacLane, Billy Halop—O. K. for my patrons. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 7-8.—John W. Warner, Plaza Theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

HOLD THAT GHOST: Abbott & Costello—Pleased generally but not as good as their last two. Running time, 86 minutes. Played December 5, 6.—Cliff Noble, Simcoe Theatre, Sutton West Ontario, Canada. Small town and rural patronage.

HOLD THAT GHOST: Abbott and Costello—Picture O.K., nothing to rave over. Universal doesn't want to see us small guys earn a dime. Percentage terms, just plain business suicide to us small fellers. The guarantee took the coat and vest. The checker took the pants. The heck with building up new stars which under percentage terms and preferred play dates would eventually just invite the sheriff. Played December 20-22.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Kingsford Theatre, Kingsford, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

IT STARTED WITH EVE: Deanna Durbin, Charles Laughton—One of the finest pictures to ever play my theatre. Pleased 100%. This Charles Laughton certainly steals the show. Recommend to play on Sunday. Running time 90 minutes. Played January 11-13.—Frank E. Rider, Chateau Theatre, Wauneta, Neb. Small town patronage.

IT STARTED WITH EVE: Deanna Durbin, Charles Laughton—Very pleasing picture resulting in more favorable comment than any recent offering. Business below average due to continued cold wave. If we could have more of this kind, business would really pick up. Running time, 90 minutes. Played January 1-4.—G. W. McLean, State Theatre, Big Timber, Mont. Small town patronage.

JAIL HOUSE BLUES: Nat Pendleton, Anne Gwynne—Figured on snow and blocked roads during January, so spotted in a few of my cheap features on Sundays. This was the first. Didn't get the snow, but did get some swell weather. Surprisingly, this mediocre feature held up O.K. It's nothing to brag about, but it's funny and seemed to satisfy. No walkouts, business average, so made myself a dollar or so. Now I'm all set for next Sunday with Frank Buck's Jungle Cavalcade, but maybe it won't snow again.—Al Eliassen, Koronis Theatre, Paynesville, Minn.

KEEP 'EM FLYING: Abbott and Costello—Best, in our opinion, by these boys. It's good for plenty of laughs, and then some. Business off due to extreme cold and unpleasant weather.—Al Eliassen, Koronis Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

KID FROM KANSAS, THE: Dick Foran, Leo Carrillo, Andy Devine—Played in competition to a snow storm and a basketball tourney. No business, but very good action picture. All principal characters very good. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 2-3.—Eddie L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

MAN WHO LOST HIMSELF, THE: Brian Aherne, Kay Francis—A below average film. They had a clever idea but did little or nothing with it. Our patrons find this true with many pictures that have been quickly made. Why directors do not take more pride in making their pictures is most difficult to comprehend. As artistic success most films today are complete failures. Kay Francis has very little box-office attraction here. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 31—January 1.—Simon Galitzki, Coed Theatre, Topeka, Kansas. General patronage.

MOB TOWN: Dick Foran, Dead End Kids—Very good double feature picture. My people like these kids very much. Am playing them in "Junior G-Men" serial and it is very good. Recommend you play this serial. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 26-27.—Frank E. Rider, Chateau Theatre, Wauneta, Neb. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT IN HAWAII: Johnny Downs, Jane Frazee, Leon Errol, Mischa Auer—It is just a filler on a double feature bill, and it will get a few laughs. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 26-27.—Vic Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Tex. Small town patronage.

NEVER GIVE A SUCKER AN EVEN BREAK: W. C. Fields, Gloria Jean—Played this New Year's Eve to a mid-nite show. This is about the goofiest picture I've seen. No sense to it, whatever. A perfect picture for this day of the year. Business very good. If they had left out the singing, it would have been a great deal more entertaining. Running time, 62 minutes. Played December 31—January 1.—Eddie L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

ONE NIGHT IN THE TROPICS: Abbott and Costello—Not near as good as "Buck Privates," but drew fairly well, and most all pleased. Running time, 83 minutes. Played November 26-27.—H. T. Nokes, Ozark Theatre, Ozark, Mo. Rural patronage.

SAN ANTONIO ROSE: Robert Paige, Jane Frazee—A fair picture, but didn't go over in my theatre. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 10-12.—Jno. S. Erickson, Rex Theatre, Kingsford, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SOUTH OF TAHITI: Brian Donlevy, Broderick Crawford, Andy Devine—It's a swell little picture from Universal. Running time, 74 minutes. Played January 6.—Vic Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Tex. Small town patronage.

Warner Bros.-First National

BAD MEN OF MISSOURI: Dennis Morgan, Jane Wyman, Wayne Morris—The story of the Younger Brothers and their association with Jesse James. A fast-moving action picture that starts after the war of the South. The land-grabbing carpet baggers and law handed out by the pioneers who protest this thieving. A grand picture of history of Missouri. Everybody well pleased with this picture as entertainment. Running time, 74 minutes. Played December 26-27.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

BLUES IN THE NIGHT: Priscilla Lane, Richard Whorf—Got a bad break on weather on this one. Having one night of 30 below zero and the next night the worst blizzard in years, with continued cold for the third night. The biggest majority of those who did turn out were pleased with the offering. Running time, 88 minutes. Played December 31, January 1-2.—G. W. McLean, State Theatre, Big Timber, Mont. Small town patronage.

BLUES IN THE NIGHT: Priscilla Lane, Richard Whorf—This fine star deserves better treatment. Picture just so-so. Business hurt by bad weather. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 4-5.—M. D. Stewart, Texas Theatre, DeLeon, Texas. Small town patronage.

BODY DISAPPEARS, THE: Jeffrey Lynn, Jane Wyman, Edward Everett Horton—This is a very good comedy which pleased on family night. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 6.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

BRIDE CAME C. O. D., THE: Bette Davis, James Cagney—An entertaining comedy that everyone enjoyed. This picture should please most any audience because of the background and characters presented. Light antics such as these are barely more than amusing to most people. Running time, 92 minutes. Played December 31—January 1.—Simon Galitzki, Coed Theatre, Topeka, Kansas. General patronage.

DIVE BOMBER: Errol Flynn, Fred MacMurray, Ralph Bellamy—A beautiful picture in color, but honestly, the length was uncalled for. Running time, 132 minutes. Played January 2-3.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

DIVE BOMBER: Errol Flynn, Fred MacMurray, Ralph Bellamy—This picture did not do business due to an extreme cold wave.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

INTERNATIONAL SQUADRON: Ronald Reagan, James Stephenson—This is a sleeper. This picture has everything needed for the action fans. No big time names but the entire cast is very good, especially Ronald Reagan and James Stephenson. Could have been as good as "Dive Bomber" if made in color. Played December 31-January 1.—Melville Danner, Kozy Theatre, Granite, Okla. Small town patronage.

KISSES FOR BREAKFAST: Dennis Morgan, Jane Wyatt—The few who braved the storm to see this screwball comedy seemed to enjoy it. Running time, 81 minutes. Played December 31, January 1.—A. C. Edwards, Winema Theatre, Scotia, Calif. Small lumber town patronage.

MANPOWER: Edward G. Robinson, Marlene Dietrich, George Raft—Presented a good cross section in the life of line men and taxi-dance hall hostesses. All incidents in this picture were cleverly portrayed and the photography was especially good. In regard to one detail—few, if any, power lines are repaired while the line is 'not.' I say nothing of the rain storm they had going during the wire splicing scenes. Our audiences found the picture enjoyable. Business fair. Running time, 103 minutes. Played January 2, 3.—Simon Galitzki, Coed Theatre, Topeka, Kansas. General patronage.

NAVY BLUES: Ann Sheridan, Jack Oakie—Similar to "In the Navy" (Universal), and just about as many laughs. But lacks the magic of Costello and Abbott. Extreme cold, 20 degrees below, killed the draw almost completely. The men were enthusiastic, the ladies rather cool toward this 'near' burlesque attraction. Oakie turns in his best performance and Sheridan is a surprise with her vocal accomplishments. A real fun show!—L. V. Bergtold, Westby Theatre, Westby, Wisconsin.

NAVY BLUES: Ann Sheridan, Jack Oakie, Martha Raye, Jack Haley—A good show, but the gross was very low. The film rental is sky high. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 30-January 1.—Vic Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Tex. Small town patronage.

NAVY BLUES: Ann Sheridan, Jack Oakie, Martha Raye, Jack Haley—Although somewhat inappropriate at the moment, this is a good musical comedy with plenty of fast comedy. It drew very, very well with "Badlands of Dakota." It was good to have Martha Raye back in her old style. It was certainly enjoyed thoroughly judging by the laughter. Running time, 108 minutes. Played January 9-10.—W. Varick Nevins III, Alfred Co-Op Theatre, Alfred, N. Y. Small college town patronage.

NINE LIVES ARE NOT ENOUGH: Ronald Reagan, Joan Perry—Good little double feature picture. I played with Roy Rogers western. Running time, 63 minutes. Played January 2-3.—Frank E. Rider, Chateau Theatre, Wauneta, Neb. Small town patronage.

NINE LIVES ARE NOT ENOUGH: Ronald Reagan, Joan Perry—Very little box office value, and needs strong support to carry it through. What little it has was stone dead after playing it with "Dressed to Kill" at bargain prices for one day. Should be teamed with a good fast comedy on Friday and Saturday. Running time, 63 minutes. Played December 6.—A. E. Andrews, Emporium Theatre, Emporium, Pa. General patronage.

NO TIME FOR COMEDY: James Stewart, Rosalind Russell, Charles Ruggles—Just fair. If it hadn't been for James Stewart, this one would have been a terrible flop. But they all like him so well and he was good again in this one. So we got by with only a few complaints. Played January 2-3.—Walter R. Pyle, Dreamland Theatre, Rockglen, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE FOOT IN HEAVEN: Fredric March, Martha Scott—It's a good picture and a swell grosser if you have a great majority of Methodists. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 27-29.—Vic Stephano, Grove Theatre, Groveton, Tex. Small town patronage.

SERGEANT YORK: Gary Cooper, Walter Brennan, Joan Leslie—Excellent. Many favorable comments. Some kicks about raise in admission for this picture, but not many.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SERGEANT YORK: Gary Cooper, Walter Brennan, Joan Leslie—Opening day the largest on record. Then we ran into a snow storm. This, plus 26 below zero weather cut the next two days way down. The picture is swell. Running time, 134 minutes. Played January 4-6.—Eddie L. Ornstein, Rialto Theatre, Marengo, Ind. Small town patronage.

STEEL AGAINST THE SKY: Lloyd Nolan, Alexis Smith—Good action picture to average business. Running time, 68 minutes. Played December 28-29.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

WAGONS ROLL AT NIGHT, THE: Humphrey Bogart, Sylvia Sydney, Eddie Albert, Joan Leslie—Good. Joan Leslie is a coming star. She is excellent in "Sergeant York," also good in "The Wagons Roll at Night."—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Dixie National

UP JUMPED THE DEVIL: Manton Moreland—This all colored cast comedy was O. K. for the kids, but the grown-ups did not seem to care so much for it. Business below average. Running time, 57 minutes. Played January 11.—John W. Warner, Plaza Theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

Short Features Columbia

DIVING THRILLS: World of Sports—A short that will be well received. Beautiful teamwork and perfect form is shown by these aquatic stars. A bit of comedy is injected to add spice to the film. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

DUTIFUL BUT DUMB: All-Star Comedies—A real scream. Play it by all means.—Harland Rankin, Centre Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

CHRISTMAS TRAILER OF 1941, THE: Lewis Stone—Really a fine contribution to the theatre world. Running time, 3 minutes.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

CUBAN RHYTHM: Pete Smith Specialty—When you ride Pete Smith's bandwagon, you have the best short in town. Do you know your rumba? Mr. Smith shows you all the wiggles in this reel. Running time, 10 minutes.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

FORBIDDEN PASSAGE: Crime Does Not Pay Series—"Crime" series are all good so far.—John W. Warner, Plaza Theatre, Greenville, N. C. Colored patronage.

GEORGETOWN, PRIDE OF PENANG: FitzPatrick Traveltalk—Average travel talk in color. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

NEWS OF THE DAY: No. 220, Vol. 13—News and sports excellent with exception of Hawley's section. Patrons scorned all opera scenes. Running time, 9 minutes.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

NEWS OF THE DAY: No. 224, Vol. 13—If I could get a news from Metro every week as good as this one, would never say another word against MGM News. Running time, 9 minutes.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

ONE-TWO-THREE GO: Our Gang—Carries a good lesson for children as well as adults. The clubs should be organized nation-wide. An excellent expression for safety. Running time, 10 minutes.—Guy G. Black, Plaza Theatre, Inc., Lyons, Neb. General patronage.

Paying More for Getting What?

The report issued by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer on the company's first exhibitor forum includes discussions of newspaper amusement advertising rates, centering around a talk by Mr. William A. Greene, of Advertising Research Foundation, a function of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

Mr. Greene spoke of a survey instituted by the Foundation two years ago and called "A Continuing Study of Newspaper Reading Habits". It was shown that amusement pages attracted a majority of men and women readers, respectively 62 and 77 per cent. Thus, according to Mr. Greene, "the excellent reader response that amusement ads get shows that rates are not too high. The advertiser who pays 20 cents an inch and gets three times as many readers as the advertiser who pays 10 cents an inch actually is getting a cheaper rate".

In the forum that followed, exhibitor Nat B. Charnas, of Toledo, asked why newspapers charge theatres higher advertising rates than retail merchants. Mr. Greene explained that "advertising is worth the attention it attracts, and that amusement advertising did create more reader attention, comparatively, than any other in the newspaper".

Exhibitor Charles D. Mervis, of Cincinnati, noted that ads which the survey showed attracted the greatest reader attention were on pictures that did not do as well at the box-office, nationally, as others publicized by ads which did not get as much reader attention, according to the survey. In questioning Mr. Mervis' statement, Mr. Greene "also pointed out that the survey showed which ads attracted the greatest reader interest—not how many readers went to the theatre".

By Mr. Greene's reasoning, then, the cost has little to do with the actual pulling-power in ticket sales of theatre newspaper advertising. By the same reasoning, would not that apply equally to advertising for other lines of business?

Tell that to Mr. Straus of Macy's and to Mr. Gimbel of Gimbel's.

Showbusiness has been paying more for newspaper advertising long, long before the publishers took to surveys to try and justify it. Newspapers followed a practice of charging more because of extra publicity, readers and art, that other businesses never thought of asking. That, of course, was before other businesses realized the sales power of publicity and hired press agents to get it.

It was also before the advent of the motion picture critic whose space also comes under the general heading of "readers" and for which newspapers charge accordingly. That the function of the motion picture critic may not be a vital service to the theatre has been long disputed, most recently by Arthur Mayer, who did a bit of fancy sword-work on the subject in last week's issue.

It remains that news of the motion picture has long become news as much in demand by newspaper readers as any other reader service. The proof of it is in the hundreds of accredited Hollywood correspondents employed by newspaper publishers, in the motion picture columns and motion-picture picture sections featured universally in the press today. The expense of it all was never dictated by demands of the exhibitor.

WON'T FAZE THEATREMEN

Restrictions on sales of new automobile tires is a call upon theatremen to devise ways of bringing folks to the box office without hindering the defense program. Even as we write, Round Tablers are working with bus lines, are seeking to sell patrons in the same area to double-up in making one car do the usual work of two, or three.

It may take a little time to iron out the kinks. They will be ironed out in the usually efficient manner with which theatremen function in any emergency.

CONTINUING good news from the Schine circuit finds Lou Hart promoted to City Manager in Gloversville and Harry Stearn to District Manager in the Kentucky area. Both active Round Tablers, they have long been pursuing a direct line from the customer to the ticket-window, a line they will be following with the best wishes of the membership.

A stork, carrying a baby "Dumbo" elephant and billed "The Paramount Theatre Is Expecting 'Dumbo,'" was placed in the inner and outer lobbies of the Paramount, Seattle, by Dan Redden, manager, who is shown with his staff of usherettes.

Round Table In Pictures

Eye-arresting was the lobby display created by S. G. Gillespie to sell his January hits at the Marks Theatre, in Oshawa, Canada. Cutout marksman with bow and arrow aimed at target carrying titles on cutout arrows.

Featured in the lobby of the New York Strand is shadow box stressing defense bonds and stamps. Floor has inclined map of the U. S. with hollow flagpole in center electrically operated to provide animation of flag.

James Moyer, assistant to Paul Glase at the Embassy, Reading, Pa., promoted transit company for banner of street car with "Texas" 24-sheets. Cowboy riders followed the car as it toured the city.

With auto tire restrictions breaking just ahead of the date at Schine's Paramount, Glens Falls, Addy Addison tied the news to a display out front of new tires, with accompanying poster booking the rulings to "All That Money Can Buy", as is noted.

LATE EXPLOITATION FLASHES

BASKETBALL SCORE GUESSING INTRODUCED BY BLIEDEN

According to Mel Blieden, the state of Indiana is basketball-crazy, with the Anderson region worst of all. With this in mind, Blieden tied in the sports enthusiasm to the advantage of the State, in that city, by getting the local daily to go for a long-range basketball score guessing contest called "The State-Herald Pickin' Ticket" and so noted in all the publicity.

Each week the paper runs a blank, with some 15 high school and college games, readers invited to underscore the teams they select as winners, the entry to be turned in to the Basketball Contest editor by noon of the Friday before. Weekly predictions are made by the sports editor, who also plugs the coming pictures. The cost to Mel is only 12 passes a week. At the time he reported the promotion, it had been running over five weeks and growing hotter all the time.

DEFENSE WORKERS COOPERATE ON "MAIN STREET" PREMIERE

Because the main street of Hagerstown, Md., was depicted as typical of America, Warners' Maryland, in that city, was chosen for the premiere of the M-G-M short, "Main Street On the March", Manager George Payette working with Tom Baldridge, exploiteer, to make the event a community-wide event. Support was given the campaign by workers in the local aircraft factory, civic heads, army and defense representatives.

The ceremonies included the selection of a "Miss National Defense", who acted as hostess, presentation of five combat planes contributed by the factory personnel to the OPM, inauguration of a defense savings stamp week, and a parade to the theatre headed by the Legion fife and drum corps.

PLANTS FIFTH-COLUMN AD IN PAPER'S FIFTH COLUMN

Timely planted on December 8th, and currently reported by Al Hamilton for the Empress, South Norwalk, Conn., was a half-column reader, headed "This Is the Fifth Column", in the amusement page fifth column of the local Sentinel. In the usual manner, the paper warned "all representatives of unfriendly powers" that it would not accept any copy inimical to the country's welfare, stressing the Pearl Harbor attack the day before.

Then, along in the story, Al tied the lead to pictures in announcing that the latest war news would be shown at the theatre and that comedies and musical attractions had been booked to offset public war jitters. The yarn concluded with a listing of the coming attractions.

LARGEST MATCH BOOK SELLS COMING SHOWS

Measuring 16 inches in length and imprinted on both sides with policy and attraction copy is the giant match book, the modest device used by Pearce Parkhurst for the Colonial, Nashua, N. H. Front cover carries a plug for the weekly stage shows, with reverse given over to new policy copy which details the weekly changes. Attention is called to the novelty, with a border line tabbing it as the world's largest match book."

VISIT WITH SERGEANT YORK LANDS FIVE-COLUMN SPREAD

Motoring through Tennessee on vacation last summer, E. E. Crabtree, L. & P. city manager in LaSalle, Ill., happened to hit the Alvin C. York Highway, named in honor of the First World War hero. This prompted the Round Tabler to stop in at the famed York Institute to visit the Sergeant, to receive a reception that encouraged him to put together a five-column by-lined article and photo layout for the LaSalle papers. This was planted in advance of Crabtree's "York" date at the Majestic, further localized with a photo of the theatreman and Mrs. Crabtree with York.

It went over so well that the home office used the spread in five other circuit situations where Crabtree was known through previous residence. The feature was tied in with the theatre date only in the last paragraph, carried as an extra "note" in which the theatreman endorsed the picture and star.

PROMOTES CANDY WITH GUEST TICKETS

The candy bar at the Fox, Phoenix, gets a strong play at the Saturday morning kid show, on Manager Gene Hollis' offer of free admissions to the youngsters successful in the treasure-hunt which forms a part of the program. Hollis plants the passes under the seats and also in a number of candy bars, an announcement of which is made. Following the stage show and preceding the feature picture, a five-minute intermission is permitted for the kids to find the "treasure."

CAREER GIRL QUIZ SELLS "PULHAM" IN WASHINGTON

One of the top slants used by Dan Terrell for "Pulham" at Loew's Capitol, Washington, was a refashioning of a "Career Girl Quiz", suggested by the Oscar Doob office, into a herald circulated in offices and business schools. Illustrated with a cut of Hedy Lamarr at her typewriter, the quiz was introduced with copy to the effect that career girls "are having a difficult time learning to adjust themselves to their new-found freedom".

A "mental inventory" of 10 questions followed, supposedly suggested by the star, each question to be marked with a "yes" or "no", a rating of 10 given for each. Below the questions, the scores were accompanied by comments on what they foretold, all of which, of course, had some bearing on the action of the picture.

HOLD PICTURE PREVIEWS FOR LOCAL AIR WARDENS

Coincident with his appointment as Schine city manager, in Gloversville, and moveover to the Glove, Lou Hart marked the promotion with a tieup on "Target for Tonight", wherein the local air wardens were shown the picture at an advance screening. It was announced that Hart had booked the picture to assist the city's defense work and this was made much of in the dailies which gave the hookup loads of space. In all, Lou got three straight shots, running to a half-column, describing the picture's highlights and including theatre and dates.

In Bridgeport, air raid wardens, police, firemen and school heads were guests of Morris Rosenthal to see MOT's "When Air Raids Strike" at a screening held at Loew's Majestic. Advance publicity was vast, Rosy also landing an editorial attesting to the importance of the subject. Through the local manufacturers' association, advertising was distributed in all defense plants. A number of radio programs were also promoted.

"MR. BUG" SCREENED FOR KIDS AT SPECIAL HOLIDAY PARTIES

As a treat for orphans and other underprivileged youngsters in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, Bill Brooker and Jim Furman, Paramount district exploiteers, working with Earle Sweigert, district manager, Ulrik Smith and Dave Kimelman, branch managers, put on screenings of "Mr. Bug Goes to Town" at special holiday parties for the kids.

The Philadelphia showing was held at Warners' Uptown, the five dailies giving the event a lot of story and photo attentions. In Pittsburgh, Warners' Schenley was the gathering spot, where an audience of over 1,400 youngsters were guests.

Unique Marquee Features "You'll Never Get Rich"

For "You'll Never Get Rich," Worth Dittrich of the State Theatre in Endicott, N. Y., used two large boards which were posted with six sheets of Fred Astaire and Rita Hayworth dancing, and carrying flittered title cut-outs mounted in "v" design over the marquee and flooded at night. He also promoted four Hula standees from local battery company and placed them in prominent store windows about town.

On "Married Bachelor" Dittrich staged a style show and sent out 1,500 invitations to participating merchants to give out to their customers. Two days prior to opening, double truck was used in local paper tying up with the nine participating merchants.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Hause Offers Bond On "Babes on Broadway"

Lloyd Hause of the Strand in Sunbury, Pa., had a gigantic campaign on "Babes on Broadway," the initial opening an announcement that $25 defense bond would be given to the first baby born during the picture's run. Lloyd also contacted a local milk concern which used special collars on milk bottles plugging picture and playdate. Tieups with soda fountains brought displays of stills showing Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland seated at a soda fountain enjoying an ice cream soda.

In addition to displays in music stores, Hause made a tie-up with local furniture company staging night radio quiz program. Two radios were given away to persons called on phone if they were listening to the program. If not, they received two tickets to theatre. The picture and playdate was plugged throughout the programs.

Hause also cooperated with the following other Comerford circuit managers: George Bittinger, Capitol Theatre, in Bloomsburg; Warren Girton, Capitol Theatre, in Milton, Pa.; and George Nevin, Capitol Theatre, in Danville, Pa., whereby a large float was built on a sound truck to exploit "Sergeant York." The float was used by each manager before and during run of picture with the four managers splitting the expenses.

Levin Hosts Kids For Old Tires

Marcus Levin of the Roman Theatre in Pittston, Pa., is killing two birds with one stone, helping defense and attendance at his theatre, through a tie-up with local tire dealer. Dealer advertises for old and worn tires and offers free ticket to Roman to children bringing tires to his establishment. The tickets are later redeemed at full value. The dealer also paid for and distributed 10,000 heralds to the children in the area announcing the arrangement.

For his main lobby attractor, tied to a contest on "Man Who Came to Dinner" at Warners Capitol, Madison, Wis., Marlowe Conner made up cutouts of the three main characters from the six-sheet, fitting them to a small table decorated with a complete dinner service. Realism was added with a cigarette and holder in Wooley's mouth and a fork in his hand. Cast names were represented with formal black and white place cards. Accompanying copy read: "A feast of fun for everyone with The Man Who Came to Dinner."

For the contest, the dinner service was set incorrectly, with a number of things wrong, obvious and otherwise. Alongside the table was placed a poster reading: "Ladies, what would Emily Post say was wrong here? Take a slip of paper and list all the errors you can find. Those listing the greatest number will receive a pass to see," etc. Paper and pencils were provided.

In addition, Conner made a number of title tieups. Chain store lunch counters used: "Our food and coffee is the best. Ask the Man Who," etc. Table restaurant cards read: "The Man Who Came to Dinner Came to Blanks," the cards illustrated with stills and copy. Taverns displayed posters reading: "Drink a toast to the Man Who," etc. A lucky number idea was hooked to the Royal Crown Cola distributor who provided numbered cards carrying picture copy. Cards were given out around town and those with duplicate number carried in the lobby were rewarded with a case of the Cola and a guest ticket.

Fitz Sells "Rise and Shine" With Newspaper Contests

Centering his "Rise and Shine" campaign around arousing public interest in "Boley" Bolenciewicz, Ed Fitzpatrick at Loew's Poli, in Waterbury, distributed heralds at the last football game of the season, inviting spectators to make up their own list of All American Teams for 1941, using only players whose last names had four or more syllables. Guest tickets were awarded here as they were also in a special lobby contest conducted a week ahead, patrons invited to submit lists of difficult football players' names.

Sports announcers over Stations WATR and WBRY gave a total of 24 spot announcements and also at local football game a "Boley" trophy was presented to the first player who made a touchdown. Trophy was promoted from jeweler who came through with effective window tieup. Contest was landed in daily with tickets to those finishing fourth line of a jingle and list titles, each of the stars had appeared in.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Lykes' Reward Herald

Reward heralds were distributed ahead of "International Lady" at Loew's Valentine, in Cleveland, through the efforts of Jack Lykes. Poster carried attractive cut of Ilona Massey with "She's dangerous, daring, dazzling," etc., copy.

Continuing to filter in are reports on New Year's Eve programs put on by the members, a shining example being Ed May's party at Schine's Russell, in Maysville, Ky., which took the form of a 30-minute musical revue, plus 12-piece orchestra, all of which the Schiner promoted free of charge. Stage was elaborately decorated as a night club, background made up with special panels, balloons, serpentine, colored lights and tables occupied by the entertainers.

Doors opened at 11 o'clock, the screen show beginning a half hour later. Three minutes before the New Year, the front curtain was closed in and announcement made by the master of ceremonies inviting patrons to join the New Year celebration by closing their eyes when they would be whisked to a night club to arrive promptly at midnight. One half minute before midnight, the house was completely blacked out, the orchestra playing Auld Lang Syne as the curtains opened upon the stage setting. Paper hats and balloons were distributed to the audience and the party followed.

That the show proved a record breaker in attendance is credited by May to the theatre personnel, who helped plan and execute every detail, including complete seating of the audience and standing room in 26 minutes. In addition, of course, Ed put on a comprehensive publicity campaign.

Bickerstaff Gives Defense Stamps

In Athens, Ga., "Bick" Bickerstaff created interest in his New Year's Eve show by covering the theatre ceiling with floating balloons to which were tied defense stamps and guest tickets to coming attractions. Promptly at midnight, the balloons were released and the audience invited to scramble for them. To call attention to the show, "Bick" had special trailers at each of the four local L&J houses, in addition to which window cards were placed in stores, busses, telephone poles, etc.

Another holiday item, this a goodwill gesture was the fine cooperation given the Exchange Club of Norristown, Pa., by Manager Dave Sablosky of the Norris Theatre in raising money to buy two "iron lungs" for community use as a Christmas gift. One of the respirators was placed on display in the lobby with a nurse in uniform on hand to explain its workings. Containers were placed at doors and exits inviting the public to donate. Trailers were run and an extensive mailing campaign organized by club members calling attention to the project and the displays at the theatre.

Medical Society Sponsors Party

Reported by Manager Leo Raelson, as the first-time that the county medical society had tied in on an advertising campaign was the children's Xmas party at the Farrell, in Ozone Park, Long Island, to which the medicos contributed toys and candy plus special prizes for contests. To spread the word, Raelson wrote to parents in the area, the letter emphasizing that the sponsorship was made purely as a goodwill gesture in the promotion of health among residents of that section by the cooperating doctor.

FIELD EXPLOITATION BRIEFS

A special morning "Old Folks" showing of "Smilin' Through," co-sponsored by a local newspaper and arranged with the co-operation of the Old Folks Central Committee of a local church, featured the campaign for the musical put over by Ray Hendry, Centre, Salt Lake City. All folks over seventy were eligible to attend. The Salt Lake Traction Company provided transportation and all newspapers gave the stunt splendid publicity.

A newspaper contest asking readers to name Clark Gable's former leading ladies was one of the features of the "Honky Tonk" campaign executed by Gil Brown, Irvin, Bloomington, Ill. Brown also set up in the lobby a series of steps leading to a one-sheet on the film, using pictures in which Gable and Lana Turner appeared previously, with copy reading: "These are the steps which brought them together."

The local high school cooperated with Pete Nepote, Lincoln, Robinson, Ill., in an essay contest asking: "Do you agree with Robert Louis Stevenson in his work 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' that man in reality is a composite of two individuals—the good and the bad?" For the first time in history the local library extended cooperation on a movie by proclaiming a Robert Louis Stevenson Week. Nepote also arranged to have oldest copy of the book in town autographed by Spencer Tracy.

The first male baby born in Philadelphia during the engagement of "Babes on Broadway" received a Defense Bond from Mickey Rooney as a highlight of the "Babes on Broadway" campaign put over by Everett Callow, Warner Theatres. The local Daily News made the award.

Mounting a "Feminine Touch" one-sheet on heavy board and then cutting it up to make a jig-saw, Dale Loomis, Roxy, Peru, Ind., had a man assembling it on busy street corners. He also made a tie-up with a local drug store in which he presented a bottle of perfume to the young lady whose lip impressions registered closest to that of Rosalind Russell.

A theatre representative roamed the streets of Decatur, Ind., handing out guest tickets to a number of smiling pedestrians as one of the highlights of the "Smilin' Through" campaign put over by Roy Kalver, Adams Theatre.

Photos of the producers of M-G-M short subjects, plus details about their work, made an excellent educational display in the Cleveland Public Library as planted there by M-G-M exploiteer C. C. Deardourff.

FROM READERS

In the issue of January 3rd, the Round Table, editorially exploring the question of whether or not war should be brought into the theatre, called upon the members for expressions, for and agin'. The first to be heard is Arnold Stoltz, the Warnerman from Utica. Listen to Arnold:

DEAR MIKE:

"People go to the theatre to forget war and troubles."

For a theatre manager to follow that aphorism, he would be, to say the least, aping the ostrich who protects his head from the sandstorm but leaves his tailfeathers to the mercy of the winds. As sometimes "hindsight" is better than foresight it's a good idea to protect both ends.

A theatre manager may as well reconcile himself to the fact that from here on he is going to accept defense reels—news reel war shots, lobby posters, Red Cross solicitors and other reminders that America is at war. So after the old tried and proven theory of "if you can't lick them—join 'em" he should go all-out to paddle with the tide, at least to the extent of carrying patriotic themes in his decorations, ads and set up. We are definitely caught in a vortex of blackout tests, daylight savings, home defenses committees, scrap collections, war drives and with any and all efforts to win the war.

The theatre must remain in the center in this as well as all community life. Yes, we should strive for 100 percent entertainment, not however forgetting that now, America is interested only in winning a war, and what in peace times would have seemed merely flag-waving, now is stark reality.

War, war any place in the world, has always been the top news in any editor's lexicon. Our war is not only top news but our every day life. The only concession that the theatre should make is to pick and choose its efforts and news in the manner of the poet who wrote, on the sun dial, "Let others tell of storm and showers, I'll only mark your sunny hours."

As bad news travels fast enough, skip that, but speed to your audiences by slides or announcements, the victory bulletins.

Manager Walter Stanzel of the Riviera Theatre in Binghamton, N. Y., made the town "Sergeant York" conscious when he played the film. Opening shot came when the Mayor proclaimed a "Sergeant York Week" with Stanzel sending out heralds advertising the proclamation and the picture. He made a tie-up with local department store with window display on bedspreads endorsed by Joan Leslie. In addition to a special front and two 24-sheet cutouts atop the marquee, he papered every available advertising space in the town.

Local columnist devoted space to the appearance of King Tarz as part of Bill Elder's exploitation on "Tarzan's Secret Treasure" at Loew's, in Indianapolis. Under the heading, "Lions Aren't People," columnist went into a spiel on the picture and invited folks to meet Leo at the theatre.

Arranging tieup with the local Auto-Lite Spark Plug dealers, Bob Berezin ahead of "You'll Never Get Rich," had life size cutouts of Rita Hayworth with playdates displayed in the windows of the 30 dealers about town. In addition the agency supplied Bob with 5,000 photos, the backs of which the theatremen used for picture copy and distributed to patrons leaving the theatre week ahead. Dealers further fixed up a lobby display of Spark Plugs and Hayworth cutouts. In addition, Berezin promoted five banks to feature signs reading: "You'll Never Get Rich Unless You Save," etc.

Giant post cards in color, carrying figures of "Chocolate Soldiers" on the face of each card, were sent to a large mailing list by Don Borrer, Delevan, Delevan, Wis., as part of his campaign for "The Chocolate Soldier."

A postal card campaign, offering free photos of Nelson Eddy and Rise Stevens, proved an effective promotion aid during the "Chocolate Soldier" campaign put over by John Ebersberger of the Sheboygan Theatre, Sheboygan, Wis.

Cooperation of the local musical society was obtained by Pat Notaro, Columbia, Sharon, Pa., as a feature of his "Smilin' Through" campaign. He arranged with them to send out cards under their imprint urging recipients and their friends to see the film.

A sound truck on the street, blaring out the "Tarzan" yell and inviting the public to enter a "Yell Contest," was a highlight of the "Tarzan's Secret Treasure" campaign executed by Francis Aiello, Manos, Vandergrift, Pa. He also planted a school contest on "Why I Like to See Tarzan Pictures."

A "smile contest," offering guest tickets for the best snapshots of "smile" photos, was conducted by Frank Miller, Metropolitan, Morgantown, W. Va., as one of the features of his "Smilin' Through" campaign.

With the local appearance of "King Tarz" in connection with the opening of "Tarzan's Secret Treasure" at Loew's Valentine, in Toledo, Round Tabler Jack Lykes posed in a cage with the King of Beasts, photo cracking papers with two-column cut and story.

Excellent newspaper coverage was accorded Louie Charninsky's date on "Sis Hopkins" at the Capitol, in Dallas, Texas, papers running stories and art on Judy Canova, Susan Hayward and Jerry Colonna. In addition, Louie constructed one of his usual eye-arresting fronts with cutouts of the stars.

Galligan-Shaffer Hold Benefit for Ball Club

With the Bowen High School located a few blocks from the Commercial, in Chicago, and learning that the football club was in need of funds, W. D. Galligan, manager, and J. W. Shaffer, publicist, created a little goodwill by giving the members a share of one day's receipts. Stories were placed in the newspapers, trailers used on screen, window cards distributed and specially printed tickets made available to neighborhood merchants. The school itself was bombarded with class announcements and bulletins.

The night of the benefit, each member of the football team was called upon the stage and given a certificate of merit. The school has a group of ten girls who act as cheerleaders and these were called on to lead the theatre audience in a few "yells." Local jeweler was promoted for two wrist watches, which were presented to the boy and girl of the school who had sold the greatest number of tickets.

First World War Relics Sell "York" for McDaniels

Display of relics of the first World War in the lobby 10 days in advance of the showing and a proclamation by Mayor Meeker of "Sergeant York Week," featured the campaign on "Sergeant York" by Manager H. J. McDaniels of the strand Theatre in Endicott, N. Y. In addition he had the ushers wear satin lapel badges announcing the play date and used 9 by 15 double faced banners from the marquee.

Autographed photos of Rita Hayworth were given by McDaniels to the first 200 patrons attending the Sunday show of "You'll Never Get Rich." His campaign also included a tie-up with local spark plug company and they constructed four six-foot standees of Rita Hayworth for placement around town. He also had two special cut-outs from a 24 sheet mounted on a truck equipped with a p.a. system. As it went around town it played songs from the picture.

Meakin Gives Cash Awards On "Dumbo" Coloring Contest

Hardie Meakin, manager of the RKO Keith's Theatre, Washington, D. C., arranged a coloring contest as the highlight of his campaign for "Dumbo." The contest was sponsored by Sears Roebuck Company and the Washington Daily News with Roebucks' distributing Dumbo coloring books to all children applying for the book in person. The contest ran for four weeks in advance of the playdate with the News featuring the contest in all editions. Winners were awarded $25 in toys and tickets to the picture.

Meakin also tied-in with radio station WINX for a special "Dumbo" transcription. Another radio hook-up with station WPL featured a special "Dumbo" announcement at the conclusion of each news broadcast. All local music stores were contacted and tie-ins arranged featuring window cards and displays of special "Dumbo" records. Meakin also stepped up his newspaper advertising campaign with the Daily News, using a generous allotment of art and feature material.

Prominent Citizens Tied To "Citizen Kane" Dates

Photos of community leaders in Grand Rapids, Mich., formed the basis of a classified tie-in for "Citizen Kane" at the Majestic, Manager Walter Norris arranging for individual cuts of the prominent to be run along with that of Orson Wells. Names of the locals were hidden among the want ads, 10 passes given daily for those sending in the clipped photo and identifying name.

In Evansville, Ind., Manager Joe Fine worked with one of the papers for a banquet to all the local Kane families. These were invited to be guests of the star at dinner and at the theatre, transportation and flowers being promoted for the hookup. Wells wired his greetings and autographed photos of the star were also provided.

For the date at the Capitol, Waverly, N. Y., the Cary-Kornblite duo initiated their campaign with a series of two-column dignified type announcement ads to give the date an added importance. Copy: "The Capitol Theatre takes great pleasure in announcing a special engagement of one of the outstanding pictures of all times", etc. The follow-up ads were in the duo's best spectacular manner and other bids for attention were made with a blanketing of a 20-mile area of extra billing and window cards.

Lobby Artist Aids Redmond On "Kiss the Boys Goodbye"

Discovering local highschool miss with talent in chalk work, Jimmy Redmond ahead of "Kiss the Boys Goodbye" at the Bonham, in Fairbury, Neb., engaged the young lady to do her work in the lobby of the theatre day ahead and opening night of the picture. As the girl finished each drawing, which was presented to a patron, she would give a spiel on the date. Entire cost to the theatremanager was a couple of passes to the girl.

Ahead of "Nothing But the Truth," Redmond made arrangements to have tent cards bearing cut of Bob Hope, placed on luncheon tables at Kiwanis, Chamber of Commerce, Lions, Women's, Rotary and other clubs. In addition, boy covered 15 towns in the vicinity distributing the cards.

Airplane Crash Kills Lombard and 21 Others

CAROLE LOMBARD, 32, Hollywood star and the wife of Clark Gable, died Friday night in the crash of a transcontinental air liner 40 miles west of Las Vegas, Nev. She was returning to Hollywood after participating in a defense bond rally with Will Hays at Indianapolis.

With Miss Lombard were her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Peters, and Otto Winkler, MGM publicity man. They and 19 others also perished in the crash.

Miss Lombard, whose real name was Jane Peters was born in Fort Wayne, Ind. She began her career at the age of 11, on the screen, in "The Perfect Crime" after Allan Dwan, director had witnessed a boxing match between Carole and her brothers. An automobile accident when she was 18 scarred Miss Lombard's face and interrupted her career as a dramatic actress.

She went to work for Mack Sennett as a comedienne and there developed the versatility which led her to stardom in many types of roles. In time the scar faded and Miss Lombard returned to Paramount. She achieved star status in the early 1930's with "Safety in Numbers," "Ladies Man" and other pictures. In 1937 she was the highest paid star of the year and attracted widespread attention when she declared that she was glad to pay more than four fifths of her $465,000 income in state and federal income taxes.

Miss Lombard's latest picture is "To Be Or Not To Be" with Jack Benny. The picture, produced by Alexander Korda, will be released as soon as possible by United Artists. It was moved up from February 15th release. Miss Lombard had just been signed by Columbia for "He Kissed the Bride." Among her comedy successes were "Mr. and Mrs. Smith," "Nothing Sacred" and "My Man Godfrey."

Miss Lombard's appearance with Will Hays at the Indiana bond rally was credited with aiding a record sale of over $2,000,000 worth of defense bonds. President Roosevelt on Monday in a telegram to Mr. Gable, expressed sympathy at Miss Lombard's death and declared "She gave unselfishly of her time and talent to serve her government in peace and in war. She loved her country." Tributes to the star were voiced in the Senate, press, and throughout the industry.

The bodies of Miss Lombard and her mother were removed from the wreckage on Monday and accompanied back to Hollywood by Mr. Gable. Funeral services were set for Thursday, at Glendale.

Otto Winkler, 38, MGM press agent who accompanied Miss Lombard to Indianapolis and died in the crash en route home joined Metro in 1936. He had previously been a reporter on the Los Angeles Examiner and had worked in banking. He leaves his wife, Jill.

Edward Cooke, Golden Manager, Dies at 73

Edward G. Cooke, prominent theatrical executive, died Friday, January 16th, at his home in New York after an illness of two months. For the past 24 years he had been general manager for John Golden Productions and during his career had been business manager and advance man for some of the most notable productions of the last 50 years. Included in the plays he handled were "Ben Hur," "Lighnin'," "Seventh Heaven," "Three Wise Fools," "Susan and God," "Skylark" and "Claudia."

Before joining John Golden Mr. Cooke had been with William A. Brady. His association with Mr. Brady began with a tour of James J. Corbett in boxing exhibitions. The Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight for the heavyweight championship of March 17, 1897, at Carson City, Nev., was filmed with the new veriscope device. Mr. Cooke, working with Mr. Brady as a partner, took the films on a world tour.

Eugene L. Connelly, Theatre Executive

Edwin Davis

Albert B. Fuller

Albert Browne Fuller, Eastman Kodak research aide in Rochester, N. Y., died in that city Wednesday, January 14th.

Truman Talley, Newsreel Chief, Dies in N. Y.

TRUMAN H. TALLEY, executive vice president of Movietone, Inc., and producer of the Movietone newsreel and 20th Century-Fox short subjects, died Sunday morning at Memorial Hospital, New York, after a long illness. He was 50 years old.

Mr. Talley left his wife, Helen McDonald Talley and two children, Truman M. and Helen. His brother, Victor W. Talley, is assistant Sunday editor of the New York Times. Funeral services were held on Tuesday at St. Thomas Protestant Episcopal Church, New York. Burial was private.

Mr. Talley, who had been with Fox newsreel ventures since 1922, was responsible for many innovations in motion picture coverage of news. He was also considered one of the industry's leading documentary film producers and editors. His production of "The First World War," with Laurence Stalling, was praised by critics as one of the screen's most important documents.

In 1924 Mr. Talley became director in chief of Fox News after a term as foreign editor. William Fox made Mr. Talley his personal representative in 1928 and during the next two years he organized British Movietone and Fox newsreel subsidiaries in Paris, Berlin, Rome, Holland, Portugal, Spain, Australia and elsewhere.

Among the short subjects and documentary films prepared under Mr. Talley's direction were the Martin Johnson pictures of Africa, "Baboon" and "Congorilla," "The Magic Carpet of Movietone" and "Adventures of a Newsreel Cameraman" series, Father Hubbard travel pictures, "The Sports Review" and other special reels.

Mr. Talley was a native of Rockport, Mo. He began his newspaper career on the St. Louis Republican after graduating from the University of Missouri. Subsequently he became night editor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, thence moving to the New York Herald. He directed the Paris bureau of the Herald during the Versailles conference and later became European manager for that paper.

Captains of the Clouds

(Warner-F.N.)

A Heroic Tale of the RCAF

"Lives there a man with soul so dead..." "That government of the people, by the people..." "Blood, sweat and tears..."

None of these quotes are uttered in "Captains of the Clouds," but the essence of them is the substance and spirit of a picture bringing home to the citizens of the United Nations the significance and the nature of their unity, and to the agents of the Axis the import of that same.

"Captains of the Clouds" is a story about some Canadian bush pilots, rough and adventurous fellows engaged in private business for the first half of the picture, who join the Royal Canadian Air Force, from which point on the film is in the main the story of that organization and its works.

The personal story of the bush pilots who become RCAF members, with varying degrees of success, is in itself a departure from and an improvement upon the plot patterns commonly used for aviation melodramas.

But it is the story of the RCAF, that takes the customer out of the auditorium and into the world of here and now, makes him eye-witness to what has been and is being done about getting bombers to the other side of the Atlantic and shows him what happens when enemy planes are met on the way.

The time of the story is the period immediately preceding America's entry into the war, which is not mentioned. The effect of the picture is no less intimately powerful, and possibly is more so, because of this. Shown in detail and on vast scale are the training and the work of RCAF pilots. Left to easy imagination is the matter of how these operations have been affected by the joining of this nation with the others opposed to the Axis. The thrill of the concluding sequences, in which a Nazi flier greets a flight of 25 unarmed Lockheed Hudson bombers in the clouds an hour this side of Britain and proceeds to shoot them down, one by one, seems not so much a response to fiction as a first hand experience.

Filmed in Canada and with full cooperation of the RCAF, the film declares its authenticity in the opening shot and clinches it by presenting Air Marshal W. A. Bishop in a portrayal of himself as a character in the story—and no mere walk-through, this—as well as numerous RCAF officers of lesser rank, including companies of pilots.

It includes two sequences in which the voice of Winston Churchill is heard by radio—one of his earlier broadcasts, but including a reference to America's possible ultimate participation in the conflict—and these drew applause from the preview audience.

These details heighten a realism seldom matched in the field of melodrama.

James Cagney's portrayal of a professional flier is possibly his best performance to date, but the sweep of the picture and the scope of its subject subordinates his and all other individual performances.

Dennis Morgan, Alan Hale, Reginald Gardiner, George Tobias and Brenda Marshall, the other principals in the personal story, handle their assignments with the zest which comes of enthusiasm for the work in hand, but it is the picture in whole, rather than performances in particular, which remains in the memory when the screening is over.

Cagney plays a roughneck pilot who marries a backwoods gold digger to prevent her from clipping another pilot whom he doesn't especially like but who saved his life at considerable risk to his own. That, built up and rounded out, is the personal story, probably the best narrative used thus far in aviation pictures but still a lesser tale than the story of the RCAF.

Executive producer Hal B. Wallis, associate producer William Cagney, director Michael Curtiz and screen playwrights Arthur T. Horman, Richard Macaulay and Norman Reilly Raine, who based the script on a story by Horman and Roland Gillett, are entitled to the thanks of trade and public for a collaboration without equal in its domain.

A.S.C. cameramen Sol Polito, Wilfrid M. Cline, Elmer Dyer, Charles Marshall and Winton C. Hoch, and associate Technicolor director Henri Jaffa share credit for a photographic masterpiece glorified by and glorifying the Technicolor process.

A couple of incidents between Mr. Cagney and Miss Marshall are a mite frank as to significance but possibly not beyond the sensibilities of a war-conditioned population.

It is a picture for all the theatres and all the people of the United Nations.

Previewed at Warners Beverly Hills theatre to a Thursday night audience totally uninformed that a previewing was to occur. This audience, taken wholly unawares, appeared to enjoy the first half of the picture fully, the second half a great deal more, and went all out for applause at the conclusion.—WILLIAM R. WEAVER

The Remarkable Andrew

Fantasy and Fiction

Showmen who have found the combination of fantasy, fiction, romance and comedy a profitable venture in such pictures as "All That Money Can Buy" and "Here Comes Mr. Jordan" need not be afraid to spend a little time and money in exploiting Paramount's contribution to the recently inaugurated cycle of life-after-death productions, since it is similar in theme and treatment.

Simply told, it is a story of a small town clerk, portrayed by William Holden, in the municipal office who is falsely accused of embezzling the community's funds by the crooked politicians who run the town. His confidence in the code of ethics set down by Andrew Jackson bring the famous statesman from the grave to aid in vindicating the clerk. George Washington, Ben Franklin, Jesse James, Thomas Jefferson and others, who down through the years have fought for justice and equality, also aid in preparing the young man's defense, prove his innocence and rid the community of the swindling officials. As in "Mr. Jordan," the characters who return from the grave can only be seen by the young clerk and remain invisible to the rest of the cast.

Produced by Richard Blumenthal and adapted to the screen by Dalton Trumbo, who also wrote the novel, the course of events opens the way for many interestingly fantastic but amusing events.

Brian Donlevy, competently and humorously portrays the hard-drinking General Jackson and Ellen Drew is the romantic interest whose confidence in the clerk's innocence never fails but some times falters when she believes him to be mentally unbalanced. Rod Cameron, Richard Webb, Porter Hall, Frances Gifford and others comprise the supporting cast who aid and abet the characterizations of the stars and featured players.

Since it is a story of life-after-death the picture as a whole may be open to some criticism from the groups who cling to the extremely conventional and straight and narrow paths. However, those with some imaginative ability seeking relaxation will find nothing offensive or objectionable in the presentation since Stuart Heisler has handled the direction of the film with delicate finesse.

Torpedo Boat

(Paramount)

Adventure in National Defense

The Messrs. William H. Pine and William C. Thomas, Exploitation's gift to Production, deliver herewith the best of their progressively profitable action pictures.

This one, an adventure in national defense, deals with the invention of two-man torpedo boats, to be conveyed by mother-ship to the vicinity of the enemy a la airplane carrier, and is in the groove of today's interests without essaying in any detail to expert the war or take the stump for an idea.

In this instance the hero, played as usual but more so by Richard Arlen, is a young man so intent upon obtaining production of a torpedo boat for Navy test that he puts romance out of his plannings until he has succeeded, by which time a good many complications involving his associates of both sexes have accrued. A wedding and a death are highpoints in the unwinding of the snarls which have eventuated, and these matters are attended to in a fashion which avoids the routine at all points.

Jean Parker and Mary Carlisle portray the girls in the case, Phillip Terry and Dick Purcell the men, the script favoring Mr. Terry to an extent which makes his performance outstanding.

The screenplay by Maxwell Shane, from a story by Aaron Gottlieb and Paul Franklin, combines the novel, the unexpected and a notable change of pace to extract maximum value.

Direction by John Rawlins keeps tempo high, save when intentionally slackened, and points clear.

In common with preceding Pine-Thomas enterprises, "Torpedo Boat" is a natural for the purposes of the showman who makes a policy of selling his stuff to the customers by means of all the tricks in the book, from solid publicity stories, based on the theme, to lobby displays with cutout torpedo boats firing broadsides. And it provides the entertainment to satisfy the customers when they get inside.

Cowboy Serenade

(Republic)

Western

Gene Autry, who won sixth place in MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S "Money Making Stars of 1941" poll, and first place in the "Western" poll, appears again in "Cowboy Serenade," a title that perhaps represents what the exhibitors of the country would like to do for Mr. Autry. The picture has all the ingredients that have made the star's pictures popular, and while it may not have quite as much shooting as the more avid western fans usually desire, it has other engaging and romantic qualities that insure for it a wider audience.

Along with Gene, Smiley Burnette appears once more as "Frog," and supplies easily the comedy demanded of him. Fay McKenzie, the heroine, adds a definite note of color for she is pretty, very vivacious, sings and rides a horse with equal grace and shows considerable promise. Cecil Cunningham, as the heroine's "Aunt Priscilla," also turns in a humorous characterization.

The picture opens with Gene Autry, as head of the Cattlemen's Association, appointing one of his men to sell a large herd of cattle. When this appointed gentleman loses all the cattle in a card game with professional gamblers who trick him under the guise of friendliness while en route on the train, Gene and "Frog" decide to get to the root of the evil. This brings them into contact with Addison Richards, owner of the line on which the gambling has taken place, and his daughter, the heroine. Ultimately, Gene begins to suspect Richards as the higherup in the case and obtains the necessary proof of his guilt.

A great deal of care and attention has been given to production niceties. Some of the horse-riding sequences are particularly fine, and the scenery sells the West as no catalog could. Songs are interspersed throughout the picture at reasonable intervals and are sung pleasantly by both the cowboy and the lady.

Mr. Autry rides again—and well.

Previewed at the company projection room before an audience of trade-press reviewers who didn't react audibly.—IRENE SMOLEN.

The Fleet's In

(Paramount)

Musical Comedy

As the title implies, "The Fleet's In," is a nautical story, one of gobs on leave and girls, interspersed with romance, songs, music and dancing and an abundance of entertaining comedy. It is a story designed and produced to relieve patrons and exhibitors of the strain and concern perpetrated by the daily headlines. It is also a story which will send the patrons home happy and humming while the showman counts his receipts.

Dorothy Lamour and William Holden head the cast—she as the dance hall entertainer who holds the reputation of never having been dated by a sailor, and Holden as the shy gob who is forced to publicly court her so that his shipmates may win a bet. Eddie Bracken, a featured player remembered for his portrayal in "Caught in the Draft" and other Paramount presentations, returns again in a supporting role from which he extracts the utmost and time and again steals many of the scenes from the stars.

The remainder of the cast, which for the most part has been garnered from the contemporary vaudeville and entertainment stages throughout the country, includes Betty Hutton, who has gained some prominence as the jitterbug-singer-comedienne of the Bob Hope-Pepsodent radio show; Cass Daley, a favorite of the New York Paramount's stage and exponent of comic musical renditions, and the long and lanky Gil Lamb whose ministrations bring many hearty laughs from the audience. Also worthy of mention is the dance team of Lorraine and Rognan presenting a comic interpretation of modern ball-room dancing.

Johnny Mercer and the late Victor Schertzinger, also the director of the picture, wrote the seven songs, a few of which appear to be potential hit tunes. The songs presented by the collected array of talent are the title number, "The Fleet's In," "I Remember You," "Arthur Murray Taught Me Dancing," sung by Betty Hutton, "If You Build a Better Mouse Trap," "Tangerine," presented by Dorothy Lamour, and "Not Mine," which is the highlight of the picture as presented by Cass Daley. Jimmy Dorsey, his orchestra and his two vocalists, Bob Eberly and Helen O'Connell, supply the musical background and tuneful arrangements for the numbers.

Produced by Paul Jones, this picture is one that an exhibitor may present to any audience of any age and be sure that they have received their money's worth.

Previewed at a trade screening for exhibitors who, with their wives, relatives, friends and children, filled the projection room to capacity, and chattered throughout making it difficult for anyone to enjoy. Nevertheless, during the lulls in their conversations, they found the picture equal to any musical comedy to come out of Hollywood in recent years.—G. S.

Salute to Courage

(MGM)

About Those Nazi Consuls

This is a tale about the plottings, sabotage and espionage committed by German consuls in America prior to the closing of the consulates and expulsion of the personnel. Like some other pictures now coming off the production line, the film, for all its stressings of dastardly, has been embarrassed by the occurrence of sterner drama in the world of fact.

Conrad Veidt's portrayal of a dual role, in which he depicts an America-loving German's impersonation of his Nazi twin who is consul in an American city and in charge of German depredations, gives the picture such realism and suspense as it possesses. Frustration of a plot to blow up the Panama Canal is the highpoint of the story, but there is nothing in the manner of its handling to make the citizenry lie awake nights worrying about such a project succeeding.

Other performances are routine.

Production by Irving Asher, direction by Jules Dassin and the script by Paul Gangelin and John Meehan, Jr., based on an idea by Luther Mendes, are in the measured manner of those so-called anti-Nazi pictures which were popping up with some regularity and without amassing big grosses back in the days when a war with Hitler was only a possibility. The world has moved on from the point at which the dire doings depicted might have thrilled an audience which is being witness to direr ones now.

Born to Sing
(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)
Music, Comedy and Everything

Based on a story by Franz G. Spencer that is crammed with action and devoid of any dull interludes, directed by Edward Ludwig at a pace that makes the most of the opportunities offered, and with a cast that abounds in talented youngsters. "Born to Sing" emerges as a musical comedy that is as gay, breezy and fast-moving as youth itself. It has all the entertainment qualities usually associated with musicals of more epic proportions and greater budget expenditures.

The youngsters who dominate the cast are Virginia Weidler, growing up now, but still able to entice that tear from your eye; Ray McDonald, a youth certainly born to dance; Leo Gorcey, the "Dead End" kid, who is as amusing and fresh as ever as a boy just out of reform school; and Larry Nunn, who portrays another tough urchin. The leading adult in the cast is Sheldon Leonard, the "Pretty Willie" of "Tall, Dark and Handsome."

Ray McDonald, Leo Gorcey and Larry Nunn, three New York "Musketeers," befriend Virginia Weidler and her father, a composer, whose work is being stolen by an unscrupulous producer. In their endeavor to make the producer come across, the boys get into all sorts of trouble and complications, but with the aid of a racketeer, Leonard, they are able to prevent the opening of the producer's show and present their own show, comprised of youthful performers, so that the composer's music can be heard as his own. It is a huge success.

This children's show is in itself one of the highlights of the picture. Honorable mention must be given to Beverly Hudson, a young girl who sings a song about "not liking to do the Conga," a child, Richard Hall, who is a prodigy at the piano, and Darla Hood, another young girl, who sings about the plight of being a "Quiz Kid." There is enough youthful talent here to supply the nucleus of another MOTION PICTURE HERALD "Stars of Tomorrow" poll.

Another spectacular sequence is the finale musical number, "Ballad for Americans," written by Earl Robinson and John Latouche. Sung by Douglas McPhail and directed by Busby Berkeley, it is handsomely executed, musically thrilling and appropriately patriotic.

Frederick Stephani produced.

North of the Klondike
(Universal)
Alaskan Melodrama

Melodrama laid in Alaska during pioneer days of gold mining and the first agricultural settling is the fare afforded by Universal's "North of the Klondike," a substantial offering in its entertainment division. Broderick Crawford as a mining engineer who thwarts the attempts of a trader to drive out the settlers in order that he may stake a mine claim, Andy Devine as his partner, Evelyn Ankers as the romantic interest and Lon Chaney as the trader head the cast.

Based on Jack London's "Gold Hunters of the North," the script by Clarence Upson Young, Lou Sarecky and George Bricker moves quickly and smoothly to its climax which comes when Crawford and Chaney tangle in the usual last reel battle which marks virtually every story of the north. Erle C. Kenton, the director, paced it neatly and associate producer Paul Malvern made facile use of stock shots to a good impression.

Fly by Night
(Paramount)
Melodrama

"Fly by Night" is a melodrama whose chief characters are a young doctor, accused of murdering an assistant of an inventor of a war device, a girl who helps him escape, and a band of spies who use an insane asylum as their headquarters in attempts to obtain the secret weapon.

Richard Carlson, Nancy Kelly, Albert Basserman, Miles Mander and Martin Kosleck head the cast of the film, which was directed by Robert Siodmak and produced by Colbert Clark.

The screenplay by Jay Dratler, who adapted the story by Ben Roberts and Sidney Sheldon, makes a valiant attempt at humour but the dialogue falls of its own weight.

Miss Kelly does exceptionally well with her role, as the girl who helps the doctor escape and is forced by circumstances to marry him during the chase by the spies.

The Lady Has Plans
(Paramount)
Spy Stuff for Laughs

The presence of Ray Milland, Paulette Goddard, Roland Young and some other marquee people in the cast of this offering provide exploitation copy of general usefulness.

The story in which these personalities are seen is a tale of spying, the scene is principally Lisbon and the hero is a radio correspondent.

The treatment is in the key of "One Night in Lisbon" and some of the other films in kind, presented before America's entry into the war, which handled the smuggling of plans, the operations of espionage rings and such matters as materials for the manufacture of humour.

Things which have happened in and to the world since the cameras stopped grinding on "The Lady Has Plans" discount its value as comedy. Quite a number of the incidents intended to induce laughter had been discounted, in point of taste, long before that.

Miss Goddard portrays an American girl flown to Lisbon by a broadcasting company to serve as assistant to its commentator there, played by Mr. Milland.

She is mistaken by a Nazi agent and a British agent, later also by her employer, for a woman upon whose back has been drawn, in invisible ink, some military plans.

This premise is basis for several sequences during which the three men, to the accompaniment of much double entendre dialogue, attempt by direct means and otherwise, and successfully, to obtain photographs of the lady's back.

Ultimately, the hero and heroine are captured by the Nazis and ultimately they escape, though the effort to maintain the light tone is never abandoned.

Production is by Fred Kohlmar, direction by Sidney Lanfield, screenplay by Harry Tugend and story by Leo Birinski.

In that era when many thought they knew that the war was going to stay over there, the ideas, angles and attitudes displayed might have made certain types of audiences laugh heartily at what these workmen have wrought.

Times have changed.
In any era, some of the humour would have been open to question.

Tradeshown at the Hotel Ambassador theatre, Los Angeles, to a goodly turnout of exhibitors who had spontaneously applauded "The Remarkable Andrew," screened immediately ahead of this picture. They not only refrained from applauding this one but broke out in the wrong kind of laughter now and again as the effort to amuse traversed the boundaries of taste.—W. R. W.

Treat 'Em Rough
(Universal)
Melodrama

In Universal's "Treat 'Em Rough," Eddie Albert, absent from the screen for some time, enacts a prize fighter who breaks up a gang stealing oil from the wells of his father and selling it to an unidentified sea raider. Supporting him are Peggy Moran, William Frawley, Lloyd Corrigan, Mantan Moreland and others.

Neither the spies nor the locale of the action are identified.

Roy Chanslor and Bob Williams made of the original screen story a fast moving melodrama, leavening the action with sufficient comedy sequences to render it most palatable in its budgetary division.

Ray Taylor directed, under associate producer Marshall Grant. No prize fight scenes are shown.

"Stay on the Job"

OUR industry of the motion picture can accept with decided satisfaction the injunction of Mr. Lowell Mellett, Coordinator of Government Films, delivered in Hollywood "to stay right here on the job making pictures." In that Hollywood meeting with the Producers Association, last week, Mr. Mellett made emphatic his recognition of the service of the motion picture in maintaining public morale and a normal state of mind through a period of national emergencies and stresses. "Keep on doing what you are doing because your motion pictures are a vital contribution to the total defense effort," he said.

It would appear that Mr. Mellett's experiences of many executive years at editorial desks in the newspaper world constitute important equipment for his all important wartime post.

It is the business of editors to be unperturbed, unexcited in the presence of big news and great events. The stimulation of great concerns and stirring issues can not bring hysteria to the editor's desk.

So, says Mr. Mellett, just as he has many the time with news breaking that rocked the nation; "... stay right here on the job ..."

That, too, is exactly what the motion picture is equipped best to do—the business of attending to its own and accustomed business.

One may gather, too, that the Coordinator expects the motion picture industry will do that and know what to do in discharge of its function as the entertainer of the United States, and all its Allies, too. The responsibility and the opportunity, too, are greater than in the First World War when the American industry rose to the dominance of the screen which it never lost, save as the walls of nationalism rose while our new war was in the making.

Clearly the motion picture will have to do a deal of level-headed unimpassioned thinking to fulfill its function. In the presence of war it is obligated to consider that its audiences are of persons and whole peoples who have their lives so filled with war and strife and struggle that they turn to the theatre as a house of refuge and respite.

The motion picture makers must know what it takes to make the screen theatre that haven that war torn people seek. It is a prescription of showmanship.

AS for what the screen may from time to time and on special occasion present concerning war effort, the industry, from studio to theatre, can expect that the Government will be asking for what it wants, and doubtless all it wants. The office of Coordinator has been set up to unify those demands and approaches, lest the theatre be invaded and its values impaired by a plethora of ambitious drives, messages and causes, probably praiseworthy of purpose and most impractical in execution. It may be expected that the process of coordination will prevent the lost motions, duplications and confusions that have so commonly attended uncontrolled and unorganized enthusiasms-in-action.

The motion picture industry is having occasion to distribute and exhibit various films of message originating from official sources. That will continue, but with, it is expected, discretions which will keep the theatre a place of entertainment.

The motion picture has been filled with concern about its status in the public mind for a considerable period, while far too much of the big news about it came out of law suits and courtrooms.

Sane, competent performance in the operation of this greatest of public relations institutions through the period of the war and its emergencies can be not only vital service of the national cause, but also the greatest service which the motion picture can render to itself. The story will not be so big, so sensational. It may be no story at all. But the doing of a good job will help the motion picture hold a good name, screen by screen, where it meets the customers.

A SUGGESTION of the order of conflicts and special pressures on the war time screen manifested in Great Britain is presented in an editorial in the January 1 issue of Kinematograph Weekly of London, which observes:

"When a Ministry has to make a public announcement it takes space in a national newspaper, at advertising rates. It also arranges for appeals on the kinema screens, but this time not at advertising rates. We are referring now to the special propaganda efforts in which we are asked to participate, and not to those which come under the heading of M. of I. shorts. To show these is accepted as part of the Trade's national contribution.

"Other official demands on screen time, however, added to the frequent applications from charitable bodies, have grown to such an extent that we have to face two dangers: that our programmes may be thrown out of all balance, and that our patrons will regard more and more distastefully the propaganda messages we are putting across."

THE War Production Board at Washington has arranged to permit the motor car manufacturers to triple their 1941 production rate of spare parts from now until June. That is to enable service stations to keep the old cars running, presumably for the duration. For a long time now there have been palavers about the motion picture and priorities. An arrangement which would also assure the mechanisms of motion picture making and exhibition of continued efficiency is indicated as essential if the screen is to do the job the Government expects of it. There has been an interminable fiddling about it. The exhibitor is entitled to assurances.

'Little Hays Office'

EIGHT independent producers announced the organization and incorporation of a Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers, Inc., at Hollywood on Wednesday. The project has been in rumor stage since 1940.

Four of the founders are members of United Artists and the others are releasing through major distributors. They are: Charles Chaplin, Alexander Korda, Mary Pickford, Walter Wanger, Walt Disney, Samuel Goldwyn, David O. Selznick and Orson Welles. Mr. Goldwyn and Mr. Wanger are already members of the Association of Motion Picture Producers (Hays' organization).

Lloyd Wright, attorney and a director of several Hollywood film companies, was named president and James Allen, former U. S. Department of Justice attorney, is executive secretary.

"The purpose of the Society," the members said Wednesday, "is to give recognition to contributions made by the independent producer to the development of the motion picture as an art and an industry." Their statement described a threefold responsibility to "strengthen and protect the role and function of the independent producer"; to devote collective judgment to "many common problems artistic and economic" which the independents face "as producers who do not own or control theatres"; and to fulfill their "share of responsibility for sound artistic and economic practices in motion pictures."

"In establishing this society we do not wish to create a minority or opposition group within the industry," they declared. Mr. Allen added that no conflict with the AMPP was anticipated and members of the Society who belong to the AMPP are not expected to resign.

Army at Astoria

PARAMOUNT'S eastern studio at Astoria, L. I., was formally taken over by the U. S. Army on Wednesday. The War Department at Washington announced acquisition of the plant to serve as the eastern base of the Army Signal Corps' Training Film Production Laboratory, now stationed at Fort Monmouth, N. J. The studio and laboratory will be commanded by Lieut. Col. Melvin E. Gillette.

In addition to production of training films, the unit will utilize the studio for Army photographic schools to be established. The production schedule calls for an annual output of 125 to 130 Army training films, from one to 15 reels in length, with each subject averaging one to two reels.

Holding, Holding . . .

MOST distributors this week reported holdovers aplenty on current releases, among them:

Universal listed additional holdovers for "Hellzapoppin" in Allentown, Denver, Harrisburg, Kansas City, Omaha, Reading, Rochester, San Francisco and Syracuse; for "Keep 'Em Flying" in Birmingham and New Orleans; for "Paris Calling," at the Globe, New York, and for "Wolf Man," at Cleveland.

MGM reported holdovers for "Johnny Eager" in Philadelphia, Buffalo, New Orleans, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Houston, Atlanta, Memphis, Providence, Dayton, Richmond, Norfolk and Manchester, N. H.

Paramount holdovers were: "Birth of the Blues," Palace, Milwaukee; "Louisiana Purchase," Denver, Lincoln, Neb., and Tacoma; "Bahama Passage," Paramount, Los Angeles. The company also listed additional playing time on 'move-overs' for "Louisiana Purchase" in San Diego, Glendale, Inglewood, Long Beach and Pasadena; for "Bahama Passage," Atlanta and Raleigh; for "Hold Back the Dawn," at the Ambassador, St. Louis.

Columbia reported holdovers for "Bedtime Story," in Denver, Birmingham, Atlanta and Springfield, Mass.

Warner Brothers' "All Through the Night," was held a second week at the Strand, New York.

"Ball of Fire," a Samuel Goldwyn production, released by RKO, held for a third week at New York's Radio City Music Hall, and for a fifth week in Kansas City, Washington, Chicago, Boston and Providence. RKO's "Suspicion," remained a second week in Philadelphia and Salt Lake City.

United Artists' "The Corsican Brothers," produced by Edward Small, held for a second week at the Capitol, New York.

"I Wake Up Screaming," Twentieth Century-Fox, held at the Roxy, New York, for a second week.

Monopack Color

AWAITED long, frequently reported and sometimes denied, the Technicolor Monopack, which can be used in black-and-white cameras, is now available to the industry "for special purposes." The process, on which Technicolor has been working for years, was used first in Warner's "Dive Bomber," it is learned, and is now being tested in Paramount's "The Forest Ranger."

Its use is limited to scenes filmed from airplanes and in dangerous circumstances. Paramount has a crew using it at Missoula, Mont., shooting forest fire scenes with camera men working behind asbestos shields within 30 feet of the flames.

Technicolor is stipulating that producers who use Monopack must sign contracts specifying it will be used only for "special work" where regulation Technicolor cameras would be cumbersome. The company indicated in Hollywood Tuesday, however, that general application of Monopack was to be expected in the near future.

Ice, Not Hay

IT ISN'T hay, it's ice, that garnered $1,054,000, in seven one week skating engagements, for Sonja Henie and her Hollywood Ice Revue. The 20th Century-Fox film star and former Olympic skating champion closed her annual tour at Madison Square Garden in New York Wednesday. There she grossed $280,000 for eight performances before 134,000 persons, at a $4.40 top.

Miss Henie's skating show began its annual tour November 18th at Omaha, earning $57,000 in six days. Other engagements and grosses were: St. Louis, five days, $76,000; Indianapolis, seven days, $112,000; Buffalo, six days, $84,000; Detroit, seven days, $141,000; and Chicago, 11 shows, $304,000. Approximately 630,000 persons saw the ice revue. Last year, with two more dates, the show garnered $1,200,000. The final New York performance was for the benefit of the Red Cross.

Air Time is $$ Time

AIR time worth $180,000,000 was sold by radio broadcasters to sponsors in 1941, according to Radio Retailing Today, in New York.

Talent costs for the year, for both sustaining and sponsored programs, amounted to $50,000,000, the paper said. Electricity, batteries, etc., used to operate 53,600,000 receivers, averaged $220,000,000 for the year. Thirteen million, one hundred thousand radios sold in 1941 in the United States at retail, amounted to $500,000,000; 33,000,000 replacement tubes sold at $1.07, totalled $35,000,000; radio parts, supplies and gadgets brought another $63,000,000, and servicing of radio sets cost $75,000,000. The total "radio bill" for the year amounted to $1,123,000,000.

Further figures: there were 57,400,000 radio sets in the U. S., 35,000,000 with shortwave reception, and 10,000 television receivers.

Rebellion in the Ranks

REBELLION against the current administration of the Chicago Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 110, is being organized within the ranks, preparatory to the election of officers on March 5th. The movement began, it is said, following the conviction last November of George E. Browne, erstwhile president of the IATSE, and his plenipotentiary, Willie Bioff.

A group, who have classed themselves as the reform element of the union, with Frank Korte, an operator of 30 years' standing and at present employed at the Balaban & Katz Will Rogers Theatre, as spokesman, has opened headquarters in the Brevoort Hotel, and has invited others to join.

"We are receiving suggestions for a slate and pledges of support in the nominating final elections," Mr. Korte said. "We are financing our own effort by personal contributions.

The present officers of Local 110 were appointed by George E. Browne and Willie Bioff," he said. "Federal Judge John C. Knox in sentencing Browne and Bioff to the penitentiary, said, 'I am certain this will let fresh air into union halls throughout the country.' We are going to try to carry out his prediction in so far as Chicago is concerned."

Peter A. Shayne, president of the local, commented on the action: "There has always been a clique of disgruntled members. . . . The present officers were all elected at bona-fide elections in 1935 and reelected in 1937. This thing looks like a political move to me, by a handfull of insurgent members, to gain control of the union."

The Chicago union has about 400 members, most of whom are working, and an undisclosed number of temporary "permit men" who contribute 10 per cent of their weekly salary for the work permission. A member in full standing pays only regular dues and assessments. No regular members have been admitted for some 20 years. John P. Smith, the business agent, draws $20,000 a year, and the union is said to have a treasury fund in excess of $100,000.

Circuit Aborning

NEW circuits of substantial size are few and far between in creation. One loomed on the horizon this week, however. D. J. McNerney, former United Artists branch manager in San Francisco, announced that he and Joseph Blumenfeld, northern California theatre operator, planned a new circuit which they expect to start soon. He said the circuit might become national in scope.

Mr. McNerney recently resigned his UA post to become a partner of Mr. Blumenfeld in ownership of the United Artists Theatre, San Francisco, which they purchased from Herman Cohen at a cost reported to be $150,000. Meanwhile, William Wolf, former RKO branch manager in San Francisco, was named to the post vacated by Mr. McNerney. Mr. Wolf was formerly with Universal.

War Insurance

UNITED STATES Government insurance of theatres, studios, broadcasting stations and other private property against losses inflicted by air raids or other enemy action is provided for in a bill taken under consideration at mid-week by a Congressional committee.

The Administration proposes to grant a billion dollars to the War Insurance Corporation set up by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to indemnify private property owners for such loss.

Can Cut the Cake

LOEW'S this week waived objections to the immediate apportionment of British remittances among eight majors. Thus, the method used during the last two years will be used again, it was reported in New York this week. The eight companies are allowed by the British Treasury to withdraw $20,000,000 in receipts, under the current agreement. The first quarterly remittance was payable Tuesday.

The formula to which Loew's had objected is based on each company's net billings in the United Kingdom. Loew's suggested last year a division based upon gross billings. Other companies rejected this and it was put to arbitration. Three arbitrators decided against Loew's, unanimously.

Daylight and Duals

DAYLIGHT saving time effective nationally on February 9th may accomplish that which exhibitors have been struggling to do for a long time—eliminate double features. From several strongholds of the dual bill come reports that circuits and independents alike are considering shorter shows to permit greater audience turnover after twilight.

Typical of the new consideration given single billing is a report from Milwaukee, where state law long has made Central Standard time mandatory. The Fox circuit opened "New Wine" at the Downer on a single bill and several neighborhood houses have been trying single feature programs.

Exhibitors in other twin bill centers are also single features.

Plan Television Web

PLANS to extend the Schenectady-New York-Philadelphia television network to Washington as another communications aid for the Government during the war, are being considered by television and U. S. officials, it was learned in New York on Monday. Engineers for the Federal Communications Commission in Washington, however, reported that while they had heard of the proposal an official request for approval had not been received.

SHOWMANSHIP HONORED AT AWARDS JUDGING

Exhibition, Distribution Heads Pick Silver, Bronze Plaque Winners

Forty ranking executives of distribution, advertising and exhibition, sitting as a judging committee of the whole, chose by majority vote the annual winners of the Quigley Awards sponsored by MOTION PICTURE HERALD and conducted by the Managers Round Table.

For sustained and expert showmanship at the boxoffice during 1941, the judges designated for the year's topmost Awards honors:

ARNOLD STOLTZ, Silver Grand Award, earned in the service of Warner Theatres as manager of the Avon theatre in Utica, N. Y.

FRANK BICKERSTAFF, Bronze Grand Award, manager of the Lucas & Jenkins interests in Athens, Ga., preponderantly so in the activities of the circuit's Palace theatre.

Analysis of the voting showed only a slight margin of votes between the two winners as noted by the final results, which also indicated a close grouping of the other entries of theatremen active in the Awards for the year and which were given consideration by the judges for the accolade of master-showman.

The ceremonies and following luncheon held in the North and East Ballrooms of the Hotel Astor, presented Spyros Skouras, president National Theatres, as guest of honor and principal speaker. Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief and publisher of Quigley Publications, presiding, also introduced the out-of-town judges, present for the occasion and including Ed Fay of Providence, Alex Manta of Chicago and Harry Royster of Poughkeepsie.

"In these times, judging is not the most important thing that you have in mind," Mr. Quigley said, "but it seems to me that all of us engaged in and concerned with the business of motion pictures have this very satisfactory thought, that the motion picture, as we know it, is an institution which is to be called upon to play an extremely important part in the very important subject of public morale.

Toward Better Standards

"It seems to me that unless and until individually we may be called upon to do something else, the most important thing we can do is to do the best job we can in connection with our work in the motion picture business. The subject matter of the Awards with which you are familiar, of course, is intended to promote and stimulate better standards in the matter of promotion and exploitation of motion pictures.

"You judges have seen the evidence of the work of the various men in the field, and, unless such efforts are recognized, it is not reasonable to assume that the standards characterizing the efforts are going to be made better from time to time."

Mr. Skouras began irrelevantly, but then paralleled the functioning of the Awards project with the showmanship which he said was vitally necessary to the speeding up of the national defense program and the industry's part in it.

"Never before in the history of the motion picture industry have we been called upon to perform such a great duty," he said. "We have always taken things for granted in this business in every emergency that has come up, but now anything we have done in the past let us forget. We have a great job from now on. We can play as great a part as the men in the front lines; we are responsible for the morale of the people and should keep their spirits high.

"We must make our theatres enticing and inspiring, and the motion picture industry is one of the industries that has contributed to that end more than any other factor. I am grateful to the Quigley Publications, and particularly to Martin Quigley, for instituting this plan to recognize showmanship. I believe that we in New York should take great interest in their efforts and should encourage further interest in this work."

A-Mike Vogel, chairman of the Managers Round Table, pointed out the whole-hearted acceptance of the Competitions by judges and theatremen as indicated by the record participation in 1941, the ninth successive year of the Awards. He noted the high standard of quality in the entries by disclosing that many of the judges found it difficult to determine the order in which their selections were to be made.

"This difficulty leads to an inescapable conclusion that the work of the conscientious and skilled showman today is to be taken as a constant factor in successful theatre operation," Mr. Vogel observed. "Despite the war, operational changes and other industry involvements, the theatremen pursues a direct line from the customer to the boxoffice. In so doing, he generously credits the Quigley Awards for inspiration in hewing to the line."

The Quigley Awards originated in 1934. Sponsored by MOTION PICTURE HERALD through Managers Round Table, they were designated to bring recognition to outstanding theatre showmanship with theatremen in all parts of the world invited to forward material for consideration in the Competitions.

Quarterly Competitions

In the beginning, the Awards were made monthly for the best complete campaigns on pictures. This was changed later to Quarterly Competitions with the Awards voted for consistent showmanship over the three-month period. In 1940 the rulings were again changed, this time to emphasize the effectiveness of the best single exploitations or promotions on individual campaigns rather than on the complete campaign.

In all instances the Grand Awards were held yearly to select from among the interim winners the two theatremen whose work was considered most meritorious by the Quigley Awards Committee, sitting as a whole. The judges representing ranking executives in distribution, advertising and exhibition, in addition to the Grand Awards, also served for the Quarterly periods. The cooperation of the industry is indicated in the number of judges who have served.

Credited by the participating theatremen for promotions, salary rises and bonuses, the Quigley Awards have established a high percentage of advancements among the hundreds of competing theatremen. This includes a majority of the 14 previous Grand Awards winners in addition to the numerous promotions made among managers who have scored in the interim periods.

DECREE SELLING IS USED TO 'JACK UP' RENTALS: MYERS

Annual Report Charges Failure of Arbitration; Called "Black Year"

During 1941, "a black year" for exhibition, the consent decree proved a lamentable failure and independent exhibitors were assailed from all sides, Allied States Association directors were told as they gathered in New York on Thursday, January 22nd for their annual meeting and election of officers.

Abram F. Myers, chairman and general counsel for the exhibitor organization, in his annual report said the consent decree had proved wholly unworkable and was a burden to all independent theatres. He charged that it was being "used to jack up film rentals" and that its arbitration provisions had failed to offer relief. Taxes, priorities and outside criticism of the industry were other burdens of 1941 mentioned in his report to the directors.

Industry unity, through the Motion Picture Industry Conference Committee which originated in an Allied proposal last summer and was formally organized at Chicago in December, is the principal hope of solving present difficulties, Mr. Myers indicated. The Allied Directors met at the Hotel Warwick, New York, simultaneously with the MPICC's first working session, at the same hotel.

Rosenberg Elected

Morris A. Rosenberg, of Pittsburgh, was elected national president of Allied on Friday. The president of the MPTO of Western Pennsylvania, he succeeds Colonel H. A. Cole, of Dallas, Tex. Mr. Rosenberg operates the Rialto theatre, Pittsburgh.

The board reelected Abram F. Myers, general chairman; Martin G. Smith, treasurer; and Charles Olive, secretary. It elected Don Rossiter, of Indianapolis as recording secretary to succeed Arthur K. Howard, Boston, and Meyer Leventhal, of Baltimore, to the vacant post of financial secretary.

Reelected members of the executive committee were: M. A. Rosenberg, H. A. Cole, Nathan Yamins, S. E. Samuelson, M. G. Smith, Jack Kirsch, Roy E. Harrold, and A. F. Myers, ex-officio member.

Selection of a site and date for the national convention was deferred until the April directors meeting.

Increased prices and a higher ratio of high bracket to low bracket pictures were sharply criticized by Mr. Myers in his report. He blamed the consent decree and its blocks-of-five provision for the situation and warned:

"Unless there is an abrupt change of policy by the distributors, this dizzy pace will be continued with disastrous results to all concerned. The goose is being slaughtered in a foolish attempt to increase its production of golden eggs."

Arbitration, according to the Allied report, is near collapse. Distributors it charged, have resorted to technicalities. "The Appeal Board all too often has encouraged and sustained such tactics. . .

and has emasculated most of the awards in favor of the exhibitors. It has been diligent in upholding awards against independent exhibitors," the Allied report charged.

"The Board in some of its recent opinions has shown somewhat greater liberality of thought, but the damage can not be undone. The Board, like a court, now cites and relies upon its former decisions as binding precedents. This situation led the general counsel to protest that the Board, instead of giving effect to the ostensible purpose of the decree to curb monopoly, had interpreted it as a bill of rights for the existing order."

Noting the decline in the number of new actions Mr. Myers told the meeting that, unless new life were injected into the system, arbitration would soon cease to merit the cost of its upkeep. Section X, as predicted by Allied he said, has failed by its specific run provisions to give exhibitors relief against circuit monopoly of preferred runs.

Mr. Myers reported that during consideration of new revenue bills in Congress Allied successfully opposed the five per cent tax on film rentals and advocated the elimination of exemptions. Exhibition will bear its burden of increased war taxes patriotically the report said, but the Association will insist that the industry's share of new taxes be equitably distributed to all branches and in proportion taxes on other industries.

Priority problems are being watched carefully by Allied and reports sent to all members the report said. It recommended that industry relations with government priority officials channel through the MPICC rather than the War Activities Committee. The directors approved a resolution to this effect.

At executive sessions the directors on Thursday and Friday voted to suspend the activities of the Allied Information Department for the time being. It was reported that this was in line with MPICC discussion of the establishment of an All-Industry information bureau.

ASCAP Fee Plan Approved

A plan for redistributing ASCAP fees was approved. It would lower fees for smaller theatres. The Board approved a resolution asking sponsors of industry drives to render accounting of receipts collected in independent theatres. It approved the offering of theatre facilities for civilian defense use.

Directors who attended the meeting, in addition to those named, included: Walter Littlefield and Arthur Howard, New England; Fred A. Beedle, Western Pennsylvania; W. L. Ainsworth and Harry Perlewitz, Wisconsin; Leonard Rosenthal, New York; Lee Newbury, Harry H. Lowenstein, E. Thornton Kelly and Irving Dollinger, New Jersey; Ray Branch, Michigan; W. R. Gingell, District of Columbia; Joseph Reed, Maurice Shulman and Joseph Shulman, Max Alderman and Jack Fishman, Connecticut.

Northwest Allied was not represented at the meeting and no consideration was given by the national board to the current product problems of the Minnesota exhibitors.

The Board again registered support of the Unity meeting and Allied participation in it, but postponed until April a proposal to rotate Allied membership on the MPICC.

Cleveland Exhibitors Again Choose Schwartz

For the tenth time, Ernest Schwartz was elected president by acclamation of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association at the annual meeting held January 22nd in the association rooms at the Film Building.

All other officers were also re-elected by acclamation as follows: vice-president, Albert E. Ptak; treasurer, L. G. Baldwin; secretary, George W. Erdmann. Frank Porozinski and Theodore Vermes were named to the board of directors for three-year terms, while L. G. Baldwin, James E. Scoville and Morris Berkowitz were named for one-year terms.

The meeting opened with the introduction of Mayor Frank J. Lausche and his secretary, John Lokar. The Mayor praised the exhibitors for their past collaboration in civic affairs and asked for full support in all measures pertaining to national and local defense.

Northwest Allied Defers Special Meet

The special emergency session of the Northwest Allied Theatre Owners scheduled for January 21st in Minneapolis was again postponed last week to an undetermined date. The large number of exhibitors called to testify, or under subpoena, as state witnesses in the anti-blocks-of-five trial at St. Paul required postponement of the Allied discussions of new selling methods and industry unity proposals.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia were scheduled to meet at Richmond on Thursday for annual state wide sessions. Edward Kuykendall, national MPTOA president, was to address the meeting on current industry problems. The Virginia organization, headed by William Crockett, is an independent group. The meeting was to be held at the John Marshall hotel.

The Cincinnati Independent Theatre Owners Association meeting last week devoted most of the session to hot debate on the advent of double features to the Cincinnati area. A bitter fight over the duals issue was predicted. Until recently there have been no double billings in the area. Wess Huss, president of the city association, presided at the meeting.

George Bole to Universal

George Bole, manager of the Golden Gate theatre in San Francisco, will resign about February 1 to take an executive position with Universal Films. He has managed the Golden Gate for ten years, during much of that time he was closely associated with Cliff Work, now Universal production chief.

DECREE OPERATIONS SHOT FULL OF HOLES BY U. S.

Arbitration Sales System May Be Revised, Department of Justice Says

All is not well with the consent decree. The arbitration system, the decree's selling methods and other of its provisions may still be revised, the Department of Justice warned last Friday in the first annual report of its special anti-trust motion picture unit.

Divorce of distribution and exhibition, court trial of the issue of clearance, further changes in selling methods, and Sherman Act prosecution to halt the expansion of affiliated circuits may prove the only way of halting distributor discrimination against independent exhibitors, the report indicated.

Section VIII in particular has failed in its purpose of providing relief from unreasonable clearance, it was said, and a court trial of the issue will be sought at the end of the decree's experimental period. (A case-by-case report of the arbitration docket in its first year starts on page 47.)

"The decree has certainly already supplied some relief to a substantial number of exhibitors from certain unfair trade practices. It has not yet demonstrated that film licensing discriminations inherent in the ownership of theatres by distributors may be effectively remedied by measures short of divorcement," the Government said.

Two Years to Run

Robert L. Wright, head of the special Department of Justice unit formed to observe the effects of the decree, wrote the preliminary report. Final recommendations as to the decree's future will be made at the end of the three year trial period, November 20, 1943.

The decree has not been fully effective long enough to permit any final conclusions, although it certainly has supplied some relief to exhibitors from unfair trade practices, the Department said.

Changes in selling methods may be sought at the end of one year's trial of the new system inaugurated last September, Mr. Wright disclosed. While the Department has an open mind as to the direction those changes may take it is determined to oppose a return to the old system of block booking and blind selling. The fate of blocks-of-five selling, the report said, rests largely in the hands of exhibitors.

Close watch is being maintained upon theatre acquisitions by distributors, which have been found to run three to one over dispositions. The report revealed that the Department had never given its approval to any acquisitions made by any of the decree signatories.

Defects of arbitration as brought out in the report were:

1. Lack of familiarity with the industry by the personnel of the arbitration system, deliberately sought by the framers of the decree to secure impartiality, has given the distributors an "edge" over the ordinary exhibitor.

2. Distributors have resorted to purely

SEEKS TO STRIKE OUT COLUMBIA QUESTIONS

The Government on Monday sought to strike out 15 interrogatories served January 15th by Columbia in the New York trust suit against Columbia, Universal and United Artists. The motion is scheduled to come up for hearing before Judge Henry W. Goddard in the Federal court in New York on February 18th.

The Government listed five objections to the interrogatories, including the fact that Columbia had filed another group of interrogatories on December 8th, 1939, and that these questions had been answered. It was also argued that answering the interrogatories at this time might delay trial of the action.

technical defenses to prevent decision on the merits of many complaints, a device which may restrict the extent to which the department will recognize arbitration as a valid substitute for other relief.

3. The limited relief possible under Section VIII.

The only other provision of the decree extensively used is Section VI on "some run," the report said. This section, liberally interpreted by the Appeal Board so far, appears to have fulfilled its intended function of preventing arbitrary refusals to license any run at all.

No awards have been made under any sections other than VI and VIII, it was stated. Since many of the other provisions, such as Section X, dealing with the right to a specific run, did not become operative until September 1, 1941, no conclusions were drawn from the failure of exhibitors to invoke them.

The American Arbitration Association, which set up and administers the arbitration system, has done its work in a manner which the Department regard as "eminently satisfactory."

Advantage to Distributor

Distributors have had an advantage in presenting their cases before arbitrators unfamiliar with the industry, the report said. Superior and specialized legal talent, and, "the generally wider experience of the ordinary exchange manager in contrast to that of the ordinary local exhibitor" have weighted the system against the independent exhibitor. The report said:

"However, this factor of lack of knowledge of the industry has, to some extent, given added weight to the superior presentation of their cases generally enjoyed by the consenting distributors, due to the availability to them of legal talent which is more familiar with industry problems that the legal talent ordinarily available to complaining exhibitors. Even where no lawyers have been involved, the distributors have enjoyed an advantage in presenting their cases due to the generally wider experience of the ordinary exchange manager in contrast to that of the ordinary local exhibitor."

The extent of this weighting cannot be judged, the Government said, but its presence cannot be ignored.

"The problem of seeing that independent exhibitors secure the benefit of an expert presentation of their cases is one which the national and regional associations of such exhibitors may be able to solve, but it does not appear to have been solved to date. This may be due in part to the fact that many exhibitor organizations have deliberately discouraged arbitration rather than furthering the use of the system."

Motions to dismiss complaints on technical grounds are within the distributors' legal right, according to the Government.

"Some of them are evidently persuaded that their interest lies in restricting the scope of matters to be arbitrated rather than making the fullest possible use of the system," the report concluded.

"There is, of course, no reason why the distributors should forego the exercise of any legal right in defending any of these arbitration cases except as such forbearance may prove beneficial to them. Some of them are evidently persuaded that their interest lies in restricting the scope of matters to be arbitrated rather than making the fullest possible use of the system. Insofar as the Department is concerned, such restriction tends to similarly restrict the extent to which the Department may recognize such a system as a valid substitute for other relief," the Government warned.

Action Threatened

Government attorneys have previously indicated that they regard the decree as an experiment and have warned that court action still hangs over distributors on issues which the decree fails to solve.

"The Department has refrained from participating in any proceedings before an arbitrator except the Oriental theatre case, where it filed a memorandum expressing its views on the effect of the decree, as modified by the Chicago consent decree, upon the clearance situation in the city of Chicago. It has asked for and was granted leave to file memoranda in three cases before the Appeal Board, setting forth its views on what it regarded as important questions involving the construction of the decree.

"The Department has referred as many complaints as possible to the arbitration system as a means of relief. As announced in its release of January 16th, 1941, it has and will continue to refer complaints not susceptible of such relief direct to the distributors involved, whenever expressly authorized to do so."

The Department notes numerous complaints from exhibition "with respect to the limited character of the relief available under Section VIII.

General Zone Rule Used

"The Appeal Board has apparently taken the view that all theatres must necessarily be treated in the same clearance zone if there is any competition whatsoever between them," the report said. It noted Appeal Board refusal (American Theatre, Canton, N. Y., case) to abolish clearance between towns as far as 20 miles apart, or between theatres in the same city (Apex case, Washington, et al), even though competition between them is slight.

"This restriction on the right of the arbitrators to find that there is not sufficient competition to justify any clearance between two theatres has severely limited the application of the section to many unreasonable clearance complaints in metropolitan areas controlled by exhibitors affiliated with the distributors.

"In such areas, where there are a large number of runs, with only a few days clearance intervening, the late run independent exhibitor

Decree Results Hit by Justice Department

is frequently hurt more by having to follow an excessive number of affiliated theatres rather than by having to follow any one of them by an excessive number of days. He may apparently obtain no substantial relief under Section VIII even though one or more of the theatres taking clearance over him is not in substantial competition with him, as the Board appears to hold that if there is any competition, there must be some clearance.

"The concept of clearance as a period at least twenty-four hours long, established by the Appeal Board, is a concept which appears to circumscribe further the extent to which relief may be had under Section VIII."

Appeal Board Absolved

Responsibility for the failure of Section VIII to provide relief for a substantial number of clearance situations, however, rests on the distributors and the Department, not the Appeal Board, the report admitted. It indicated that it regarded the Board's interpretation as final. Changes in Section VIII cannot be made without the aid of the distributors, the Department continued, "among which there is apparently no unanimity of opinion as to the desirability of such action at this time."

Trial of the clearance issue to provide the relief which the Sherman Act requires in preference to continuation of the arbitration section will be recommended by the Department at the end of the trial period.

"The Department regards the construction of Section VIII adopted by the Board as conclusive during such time as this section shall remain in effect in its present form. The Department therefore takes the position that responsibility for the failure of Section VIII to provide adequate relief for a substantial number of situations in which unreasonable clearance prevails rests squarely upon the Department and the consenting distributors, and not the Board.

"The Department does recognize that such a failure has occurred, but the section may not be amended without the consent of the distributors, among which there is apparently no unanimity of opinion as to the desirability of such action at the present time.

No Clearance Relief

"The decree unit, upon the basis of experience to date, is of the opinion that the section has not provided relief against unreasonable clearance to the extent which the Sherman Act requires and will therefore recommend trial of this issue in preference to continuance of the section in its present form at the conclusion of the trial period."

Section XI (5) of the decree provides that for three years no consenting defendant shall generally expand its theatre holdings, the Department recalled.

"The reports made to the Department pursuant to the decree by the consenting distributors with respect to acquiring and disposing of their theatre interests indicates that while some of these defendants have made few changes in their theatre holdings, other defendants have seen fit to acquire interests in numerous additional theatres. Since the entry of the decree, the distributors have acquired an interest in approximately 150 theatres throughout the country, which exceeds by more than 100 the number of theatre interests disposed of by them during that period."

In some instances distributors have extended theatre control to towns where they formerly had competition from independents, the Government noted, forcing the public to attend one of the defendant's theatres or else forego motion picture entertainment. In other instances, it charged that defendants acquired independent theatres to prevent anti-trust or arbitration actions by competitors.

NO WAR CONCESSIONS FOR NEWSREELS

Denial was made at Toronto this week that any easement had been permitted by the Ontario Board of Film Censors in the required ratio of British Empire content in newsreels for theatres in Ontario, the quota rule being still in effect.

What probably gave rise to the report that the British news quota for newsreels in Ontario had been dropped since the entry of the United States into the war was the fact that several topical editions had given lengthy prominence to U. S. war developments and speeches by President Roosevelt. These were of prime interest to Canadians, of course. There is an intimation, however, that Provincial censorship continues to regulate the proportion of British Empire clips.

Whether the distributors have violated the Sherman Act or the decree by these acquisitions is currently being studied by Mr. Wright and the anti-trust division.

The special Department of Justice unit to supervise operation of the decree was set up January 16, 1941, and is to submit recommendations as to future operations of the decree at the end of a three-year trial period ending November 20, 1943. Although the decree has been in effect for more than a year, the arbitration system has been functioning only since last February. New selling methods have been in operation only five months.

Trop To Produce Short Subjects

The first two short subjects to be produced by Mr. Trop are now being prepared for production and will be made in the east.

Loew's, Inc., through David Bernstein, vice-president and treasurer, reported in New York on Wednesday that the company's share net profit after taxes, subject to reserve on account of such foreign funds as may be restricted, was $2,627,145, for the 12-weeks ended November 20th, 1941. Net profit for the same period the previous year was $1,936,245.
